Per Parlett, J.—A wife who seeks to prove desertion, must give evidence of conduct on her part showing unmistakably that such desertion was against her wish actively expressed. The husband must have wilfully absented himself from her in spite of her wish. [p. 266, col. 2.]

Subsequent conduct cannot transform what was a voluntary separation into desertion by the husband. [p. 67, col. 1.]

Mr. Ray, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

Fox, C. J. In this case, the wife petitioned for divorce from her husband on the grounds of his desertion and adultery. The petition was presented on the 2nd December 1912. The parties had not co-habited since May 1892. The only evidence of the husband's adultery was admission of it by him in a letter dated the 18th November 1911 written in reply to a letter of the wife's to him. The husband has not defended the suit. The parties were married in Madras in 1890. The husband was at the time a Colour-

Sergeant in a British Regiment. They came with the regiment to Mandalay in January 1891, and lived there together until May 1892, when the wife returned to her parents' house in Madras. Her life during this period must have been a very unhappy one. Her husband was much addicted to drink and was twice tried for drunkenness whilst she was living with him. He frequently stopped away from their home late at night, and was often out the whole night, but evidently not on duty. He neglected her and did not give her sufficient money to get necessaries, and in consequence, she had to sell her jewellery and wedding presents and to obtain money from her parents. She admits that she suspected he had been guilty of adultery during the period, but she does not say that she ever taxed him with it at the time. They parted amicably when she went to Madras, he promising to send her money. She says, she did not leave him with the idea of parting with him altogether. Her reasons for going away from him were that she was very unhappy owing to his grossly intemperate habits and his neglect of her, but she hoped he would reform and have her back. Any hope of his reform she may have entertained, must soon have been dispelled, for he was tried again for drunkenness, and was then reduced to the ranks. He sent her no money, and she in 1893 commenced training for qualification as a nurse. She obtained qualifying certificates in 1895 and earned her livelihood as a nurse until 1906. Since then she has been managing an hotel. From Mandalay, her husband's regiment went to Lucknow, and he took his discharge from the army there. From Lucknow, he wrote to her a few letters which she describes as just ordinary letters, and she wrote to him. She says that he never asked her to re-join him. She does not say that she ever asked him to take her back and to provide her with a home. He wrote and told her he was going to England, and he left India in 1900 without giving her any address. She got his address through the War Office and wrote him two letters in 1902 and one in 1903, but received no replies to them: the last was returned through the Dead Letter Office. In 1908, she went to England in attendance on a lady, but did not see him. Her letter, which received a reply in his letter of the 18th November

GLANCY V. GLANCY.

1911, was evidently inspired by some Lawyer. It must have been designed to obtain from him admissions of his having committed adultery since they parted. The reply was callous in the extreme, but I do not take it that he meant that he had seduced several respectable women. It goes to show that he had never reformed his life, and that he did not mean to do so.

The explanation the petitioner gives of her long delay in bringing the suit was, firstly, that she thought he would reform and re-join her, secondly, that her religion made her very reluctant to seek a divorce, and thirdly, that until she received his last letter she did not know his address.

Three questions arise in the case: the first being whether there was a desertion or abandonment of her against her wish, the second, whether his having committed adultery has been sufficiently proved, and the third, whether she has not unreasonably delayed taking proceedings.

Upon the question of abandonment of her against her wish, it appears to me that her evidence is very doubtful. It was by her own wish that she went back to her parents. It is difficult to believe that she could have hoped that he would reform his life when she was away from him. If he did not reform when she was with him, it must have occurred to her that he was less likely to reform if she left him. It strikes me that the real state of affairs must have been that she had made up her mind that she could not go on living with such a dissolute drunkard as he was. His stopping out so frequently at nights, could only have one meaning, and judging from his continued bad conduct, his treatment of her and his last letter, it is difficult to believe that if she had taxed him with adultery then, he would not have admitted it, or at any rate that she could not have found out from other non-commissioned officers in the regiment where her husband was reputed to spend so many nights, and have obtained evidence of his adultery then.

If life with him was beyond endurance at Mandalay, she could scarcely have entertained a wish to re-join him when she heard he had been reduced to the ranks for drunkenness. Her entering into training to become a nurse appears to indicate very plainly that she made up her mind as far back as 1893 that she would have to make her own livelihood and that there was practically no likelihood of her ever living again with the drunkard she was tied to in matrimony. Her religion forbade her to think of the tie being cut. She must have made up her mind to face the situation, and she did this with courage.

The ordinary rule is that the abandonment must have been against the expressed wish of the party abandoned. I see no sufficient ground for departing from that rule in the present case. There is no evidence that she ever expressed a wish to return to co-habitation with her husband. Although he abandoned her, abandonment against her wish is not proved.

On the question of adultery of the husband, considering the picture the petitioner gives of him and his conduct towards her, I should be prepared to hold that his admission of it in his letter was sufficient proof.

Upon the question of delay in presenting the petition, although she may have had no evidence to prove the adultery until she received her husband's letter in 1911, it is difficult to believe that she could not have obtained evidence to substantiate it if she had made some effort to obtain it.

Probably such a man as he has been, a man who evidently wanted to get rid of his wife very soon after their marriage, would have admitted adultery at any time she taxed him with it. It is difficult to believe that she did not ask him for some explanation of where he had been spending the nights on which he was frequently absent from her in Mandalay, and that she could not have found out whether anything he told her was true or not. It may, no doubt, have been difficult for her to find out what sort of life he was leading after he left India, but he was in India for eight years after they parted and it can scarcely have been impossible for her to have gone to where he was at some time during those years to find out what sort of life he was leading.

It is not necessary to put her want of action down to indifference on her part as to what his life was. It is more likely to have been due to a conviction that he was beyond all hope of reform, and that she could do no good either to him or for herself by doing anything, especially in view of her belief at the time that divorce was not open to her. Disinclination from religious motives cannot be regarded as sufficient excuse for not taking action for obtaining the remedy which the law provides for an injured wife, and for delaying presenting a petition for probably over twenty years after the time when one might have been presented.

On this ground also I do not think the petitioner was entitled to a decree for divorce.

I would not confirm the decree of the District Court.

HARTNOLL, J.—The petitioner applies for and has been granted a decree for a dissolution of her marriage with the respondent on the ground of his adultery coupled with desertion. It is petitioner's case that she and respondent were married on the 12th August 1890, that they lived together till May 1892, when petitioner left respondent owing to his intemperate habits. Respondent was then stationed in Mandalay. Petitioner went to Madras to her parents. Since then, she and respondent have never met. Respondent left the army years ago when his time was up and returned to England. In 1911 petitioner who wished to obtain a divorce got into touch with respondent by obtaining his address from the War Office, and she says that she received the letter Exhibit B from him. Exhibit B contains the only evidence of adultery put forward. In it, respondent writes, and I see no reason to doubt that the letter comes from petitioner's husband: "You ask me if I have ever misconducted myself with any woman since you and I parted? I have misconducted myself with several women since I parted with you, but I will not give you their names for obvious reasons." Is this admission by itself sufficient to hold that adultery is proved? The rule of law as to the weight to be attached to an admission of this nature is laid down in the case of Robinson v. Robinson and Lane (1), and is to the effect that the admissions of a wife charged with adultery, unsupported by any confirmatory proof, may be acted upon as conclusive evidence upon which to pronounce a divorce, provided the Court is satisfied that the evidence is trustworthy and that it amounts to a clear, distinct and unequivocal admission of adultery. This rule was followed in the case of Williams v. Williams and Padfield (2), in which case, the Judge Ordinary said: "I entirely concur with the observations of the Lord Chief Justice as to the great danger of relying entirely upon such admissions. In each case the question will be whether all reasonable ground for suspicion is removed."

In the present case I think that it would be unsafe to act on respondent's admission. He is written to in England from India by his wife after many years of separation from her, when he knows that she is seeking a divorce. He never intends to meet her again in this world. What is easier than to assist her by admitting adultery, whether he has committed it or not. He finishes up: "I wish you well and hope you will do well for 'Auld lang syne.'" Again, the admission itself is not satisfactory. It would be more credible if it was an admission of visits to prostitutes: but it requires a stretch of the imagination to think that respondent has been in the habit of compromising several women. I cannot take the statement as sufficient proof of adultery. That being so, apart from the question of the delay in bringing the proceedings, I am of opinion that the petition must fail.

I would not, therefore, confirm the decree.

PARLET, J.—In my opinion it is by no means clear what act or conduct is relied upon as constituting the desertion of the petitioner and from what date it commenced.

A wife who seeks to prove desertion must give evidence of conduct on her part showing unmistakably that such desertion was against her wish actively expressed, Fowle v. Fowle (3). The husband must have wilfully absented himself from her in spite of her wish, Thompson v. Thompson (4).

The petition alleges that the petitioner left her husband in Mandalay in 1892, and went to her parents in Madras owing to the intemperate habits of her husband and his inability to support her. No doubt his intemperance and neglect to supply her with funds led to their life together being very unhappy, but the petitioner's affidavit and evidence make it clear that she left him by mutual agreement and under the advice of his superior officer, hoping, she says, that he would mend his ways. Frequent and friendly correspondence, she says, passed between them until 1900. There has been no refusal by the respondent of a request by the petitioner to resume conjugal relations, nor, if there had been, would it have constituted the offence of desertion, Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald (5). Such a request, however, might have been some evidence that the desertion was against her wish. I consider that this case differs widely from Wood v. Wood (6), where the wife was compelled at last by debts to separate from her husband, but she did all she could to prevent an entire separation and to make it practicable for them to live together again. In that case the rule was not questioned that, until the husband and wife have again co-habited, subsequent conduct cannot transform what was a voluntary separation into desertion by the husband. I consider, therefore, that the petitioner has failed to prove an abandonment against her wish. In view of the terms of the respondent's letter and the circumstances under which and the period at which it was written, I should hesitate to accept it by itself as a sufficient proof of adultery committed by him.

For these reasons, therefore, I agree that the decree should not be confirmed.

Decree not confirmed.

RESPONDENT.

Inam—Failure of inamdar to fulfil condition—

Order of resumption—Suit for declaration of inamdar's right to hold land free of assessment, when maintainable—Suit for cancellation of order of resumption—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 14, 131.

Where the Collector resumed a dasabandam inam on account of the inamdar's failure to fulfil the conditions of the inam and the inamdar sued after 12 years for a declaration that he was entitled to hold the land free of assessment:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff was not entitled to obtain such a declaration without getting the Collector's order, resuming the inam, set aside; [p. 269, col. 1.]

(2) that the suit for cancellation of the order ought to have been brought within one year of the date of its passing under Article 14 of the Limitation Act. [p. 264, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 261 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Chittoor, in Original Suit No. 719 of 1909.

FACTS.—Plaintiff is the appellant. The defendant is the Government. Plaintiff is a dasabandam inamdar, i.e., owner of an inam granted for the upkeep of irrigation works. Under the inam title-deed he was bound to keep the irrigation works in repair, but subsequently, the Government placed the repair of these irrigation works under the minor irrigation system. They undertook to repair the irrigation works and plaintiff was asked to contribute Rs. 75 towards the cost of repairs. The plaintiff agreed to it but wanted time. A long time after the village official communicated to him that if the money was not paid within three months, the inam would be resumed he then applied for time and there was no reply. The Deputy Collector afterwards communicated to the plaintiff an order of the Collector resuming the inam. Plaintiff brought the present suit for a declaration that he was entitled to hold the land free of assessment. Both the lower Courts found that repairs to the irrigation works were necessary, that time had been given to the plaintiff to pay but he had not paid and that the inam had been rightly resumed and that suit not having been instituted within one year was barred by limitation under Article 14 of Schedule I of Limitation Act.

Mr. V. R. Ponnusawmy Aiyangar, for the Appellant: My propositions are—

(1) That the Government have no right to alter the conditions once fixed by the inam title-deed, by means of a general G. O. which was never communicated to me.

2. That if by my conduct I am estopped from raising that contention, the Collector in this case has never considered the question whether this inam should be resumed.

3. That both the lower Courts are wrong in supposing that the suit is barred by limitation.

As regards (1) the inam title-deed clearly casts the burden of keeping the tank in repair upon me and the Government have no right to alter those conditions by means of a general G. O. issued by them.

[SPENCER, J.—But you have accepted those alterations and agreed to pay the cost of repair.]

Mr. V. R. Ponnusawmy Aiyangar. Not that I willingly accepted it; it was forced upon me. I insisted that the tank was in good condition and required no repair.

[SPENCER, J.—But both the lower Courts find that against you.]

Mr. V. R. Ponnusawmy Aiyangar.—Then my next proposition is, if I accepted the liability to pay the cost of repair, no sufficient opportunity was given to me for payment. I demanded six months' time, but I was told that I was granted only three months' time. I got no order from the Collector providing that in case I did not pay within three months, my inam would be resumed. That order was never communicated to me.

[SPENCER, J.—But the Officer of Government told you of the order.]

Mr. V. R. Ponnusawmy Aiyangar.—Is that enough? Should not I get something from the Collector directly? Am I to regulate my conduct according to the oral information I receive from subordinate officials? The Statute casts the power to resume only upon the Collector, and should he not deal with me direct in writing?

[TYABJI, J.—Spencer, J. has pointed out that there was an oral communication.]

Mr. V. R. Ponnusawmy Aiyangar.—The order distinctly says that if the money is not paid within three months, the inam would be resumed. Does it not visit me with penal consequences? Am I not entitled to get something in writing from Collector? The Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue require notice before resumption. Where is that notice in this case? In the case of ordinary landlords and tenants notice in writing is essential to put an end to the tenancy, and why should it be less so in the case of an inamdar? He can claim equal rights with Government. His rights are defined to him under the inam title-deed and if they are infringed, your Lordships are here to enforce his rights.

[SPENCER, J.—In this case, the Collector has resumed the inam.]

Mr. V. R. Ponnusawmy Aiyangar.—Your Lordships have to see whether the resumption was reasonable under the circumstances. In this case, there was neither a notice to me, nor did the Collector consider the question whether this inam should be resumed or not. He put an end to valuable rights by dealing with the inam in a routine manner. He never applied his mind to the question of resumption.

[SPENCER, J.—Then what do you say as to limitation?]

Mr. V. R. Ponnusawmy Aiyangar.—I say that the lower Courts are wrong in supposing that Article 14 applies. The Article applicable is Article 131. It is a suit to establish a periodically recurring right. Every time the Collector asks me to pay the assessment, I can say that your order of resumption is wrong, and I need not pay assessment. Unless the Collector has issued a notice in writing that this inam would be resumed if the sum is not paid within three months, the Collector has no jurisdiction to resume the inam, and Article 14 applies only to cases where the officer has jurisdiction to act. I can ignore altogether the order of resumption. This right to hold the land on payment of quit rent is in the nature of an "interest in immovable property," which I can transmit to my heirs and is within the scope of Article 131, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act. Hem-Chandra Chowdhury v. Atul Chandra Chakravarti (1).

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Respondent:—In this case the inam has been given time to pay and he has not paid. A distinction is drawn between an order which is a mere nullity and one bad for irregularity. In this case the Collector has acted with irregularity and not that he has no jurisdiction, Parbati Nath Dutt v. Rajmohun Dutt (2) and Raghunath Prasad v. Kaniz Rasul (3).

As to limitation, Article 14 of the Act clearly applies. This is not a periodically recurring right. Article 131 of Schedule I has no application.

Mr. P. R. Ponnusawmy Aiyangar, in reply:—A right to question the order of resumption arises to me every time the Collector comes and demands payment of assessment and it is a periodically recurring right. What is there in this proceeding to show that the Collector has considered that this inam should be resumed. His order of resumption is ultra vires, and utterly void. I can ignore it altogether.

JUDGMENT.—The main relief asked for in the plaint was a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to hold the land free of assessment. The other relief which was to recover the assessment collected by the Government for one year, was merely consequential upon the establishment of the right asserted by the plaintiff. It is argued that the suit was in effect one to establish a periodically recurring right for which the limitation period is 12 years under Article 131, Limitation Act.

But it is clear that the plaintiff is not entitled to obtain such a declaration without getting the Collector's order resuming the dasabandam inam set aside, [see Parbati Nath Dutt v. Rajmohun Dutt (2) and Raghunath Prasad v. Kaniz Rasul (3)] and for this purpose he was under Article 14 of the Limitation Act bound to bring his suit within one year of the passing of that order. The present suit having been filed in 1909, twelve years after the order, is clearly time-barred. We are asked to treat the Collector's order as a nullity, but it is clearly not so.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 309 of 1908, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Conjeevaram, in Original Suit No. 7 of 1906.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Narasimhachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIIVA AIYAR, J.—This suit was brought for the recovery of emoluments amounting to Rs. 167-1-11. It was decreed by the District Munsif for the appreciably lesser amount of Rs. 127-4. That decree was confirmed by the District Court against whose decision this second appeal has been preferred, valuing it at Rs. 127-4. But the eight grounds mentioned in the memorandum of second appeal are concerned only with that portion of the plaintiffs' claim which relates to the emoluments due to other temple servants (other than the plaintiff) working during the annual festival of the Sri Manavala Mahamuni shrine, which is a minor shrine situated in the famous Conjeevaram Varadaraja swami temple. The emoluments thus in question in this second appeal amount to the rather paltry sum of Rs. 5-1-0 (at the rate of Re. 0-13-6 per year for the six years before suit).

VEERABAGHAVA V. KRISHNASWAMI.

This litigation is now nearly 10 years' old, the plaint having been filed on the 2nd January 1906. This second appeal which really relates (as above said) to this sum of Rs. 5-1-0, is itself now nearly five years' old and has been heard by three different Benches of this Court.

It is well known that this famous temple intended for gods' worship has been in a large degree converted into a field for the sowing of a crop of continual litigation, both civil and criminal, (such litigation being mostly of a childish and trivial, though of a very intricate and ingenious, character) between the Vadagalais and the Tungalais during more than 60 years past. The time of the Courts in dealing with this mass of litigation, cannot be said to be wholly wasted, as the legal learning and acumen of both Bench and Bar have been sharpened and improved and numerous valuable decisions on questions of law have found their way into the authorised and other reports.

The small claim connected with the present litigation seems to have been first started so long ago as in 1852, and that claim is whether this sum of Re. 0-13-6 due (in the shape of cooked rice, uncooked rice or money) to other temple servants is to be distributed among them by the big Dharma-karthas of the Varadarajaswami temple who are Vadagalais, or by the Archakapari-charakas of the Manavala Mahamuni shrine who is a Tungalai saint beloved of the Tungalai Vaishnavite community to which sect the Archakapari-charakas belong.

I do not think it necessary to deal in detail with the 300 pages and more of printed matter referred to in the course of the argument in this case (the Exhibits beginning in 1890 and coming down to the time of the suit). The point to be decided is short and simple enough after once the labour of sifting and understanding the mass accumulated by the litigious nature of the parties round that single point, has been accomplished. I am satisfied, after a careful consideration of the plaint in the suit of 1852, the judgment of the Principal Sudder Amin in that suit, of the decision in Sri Krishna Tata Chariar v. Singara Chariar (1) which deals with the interpretation of the decree in that suit of 1852, of the execution applications in that decree, of the schedule to the plaint in Original Suit No. 291 of 1894 and of the other documents not necessary to be referred to in detail that—

(a) the decree in the suit of 1852 declared the plaintiffs' predecessors' right to get this Re. 0-13-6 a year from the trustees for the distribution to the other temple servants [I arrive at this conclusion, not on the ground that the construction of that decree is res judicata by the decision in Sri Krishna Tata Chariar v. Singara Chariar (1) as a precedent which is entitled to great respect. I do not say that it is res judicata, but only that I do not wish to decide the question whether it is res judicata or not as it is unnecessary. See, however, Rash Behari v. Mahendra Nath Ghose (2) which seems not to go so far as the decision of this Court in Ma-galathammal v. Narayanaswami Aiyar (3), which laid down very generally that an erroneous decision on a question of law in a previous suit was no bar in a subsequent suit between the same parties. It is also unnecessary to consider whether the decisions in the suits to which records F to O relate are or are not res judicata in plaintiff's favour];

(b) from long before 1852, the custom or mamool of the temple has been that the Archakapari-charakas are to receive this Re. 0-13-6 from the trustees for distribution through them (the plaintiffs and their predecessors) to the other servants;

(c) that there is a finding also of fact in the judgment in the suit of 1852 that such is a mamool or custom in this temple.

The findings of fact in the suit of 1852 are clearly also res judicata between the parties. [See Bommidi Bayyan Naidu v. Bommidi Suryanarayana (4)]. The declaratory relief given in that suit is also res judicata, even holding that the finding that the Archakapari-charakas are entitled to receive Re. 0-13-6 from the trustees is a finding on a pure question of law and is wrong. [See the observations in Mangalathammal v. Narayanaswami Aiyar (3) itself which is relied on for the appellants.] It follows that the lower Courts' decision in plaintiffs' favour in this case was right.

O. A. M. K. CHETTY FIRM v. K. P. CHETTY FIRM.

It was, however, argued that a earlier decision of this Court, dated 23rd January 1906, in Second Appeals Nos. 137, 138 and 269 of 1902 between the same parties, has negatived the right of the plaintiffs to recover this Re. 0-13-6 from the defendants. I have carefully gone through that judgment and through the records of the suits out of which those second appeals arose so far as they have been made evidence in this case; and it is clear to me that as ultimately decided the judgment in these second appeals decided only the two following points:—

(1) That the trustees are entitled to make all arrangements for the putting up and taking down of pandals in connection with the festivals in the Manavala Mahamuni shrine on all occasions and the Archakaparicharakas are not entitled to act independently of the trustees in the matter of putting up and taking down of such pandals.

(2) That the trustees of the bigger temple are also trustees of the Manavala Mahamuni shrine and hence the defendants have a general right of superintendence over the acts of the Archakaparicharakas. I think it is impossible to hold that the right declared (in the suit of 1852) to exist in the Archakaparicharakas of obtaining this Re. 0-13-6 a year from the trustees was negatived by the decree of this Court in the above second appeals relating to the putting up of pandals and to the right of trustees as such to exercise general superintendence over the whole management of the worship in the Manavala Mahamuni shrine.

In the result I would dismiss this second appeal with costs.

I fear there is no use in hoping that (what Mr. Justice Moore has characterized in his judgment in the second appeals of 1900 as) "these unfortunate and foolish disputes which have worked so much injury to the temple for many years past" will terminate with this case, which is only a very minor episode in the never-ending drama of the Conjeevaram Temple litigation.

Hindu Law—Joint family property—Joint family business—Assets—Minor partners, liability of, extent of.

In the case of a Hindu joint family, the joint family property is not necessarily part of the assets of the joint family firm and the minor partners of a joint family business are only liable for the debts of the business to the extent of their share in the property of the firm.

Mr. Chari, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Brown, for Respondents Nos. 2 to 6.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff obtained a decree against the K. P. Chetty firm, which was a joint Hindu family business belonging to the defendants. First respondent is an adult and was the manager, the other defendants are minors.

Mr. Chari, for plaintiff, applies under Order XXI, rule 50, for leave to execute his decree against the shares of the minors in the joint family property. The joint family property is not necessarily part of the assets of the joint family firm, and I know of no authority which makes an exception in the case of a Hindu joint family firm so as to render a minor's property which does not form part of the partnership property liable for the partnership debts. On the other hand, the cases of Joykisto Cowar v. Nittyanund Nundy (1), Samalbai Nathubhai v. Someshwar (2) and Sakrabhai Nathubhai v. Maganlal Mulchand (3) are authorities to show that minor partners of a Hindu joint family business are only liable for the debts of the business to the extent of their share in the property of the firm. Leave is, therefore, granted to plaintiff to execute his decree against the minors to the extent of their property in the firm and plaintiff is at liberty to execute his decree against 1st respondent free from such restriction.

The petitioner claimed maintenance and Rs. 15,000 for residence. The Agent to the Governor before whom the suit was brought allowed maintenance at a certain rate and disallowed entirely the claim for residence. In appeal this claim was allowed, but the value of the claim was fixed at Rs. 5,000. The respondents' application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was allowed and the petitioner then applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council for the amount disallowed.

Held, that in view of the fact that an appeal had already been allowed to be filed by the other party, the leave prayed for should be granted.

Per Ayling, J.—In dealing with an application for leave to appeal, the petitioner should have the benefit of any doubt in the order granting certificate.

Petition presented under rules 3 and 5 of Order XLV of the Code of Civil Procedure, praying that in the circumstances stated therein the High Court will be pleased to grant a certificate to enable the petitioner to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree of this Court in Appeal No. 115 of 1910, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Agent to the Governor at Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1909.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Petitioner.

ORDER.

AYLING, J.—I am by no means clear that the decree of this Court in so far as petitioner wishes to appeal from it, should not be regarded as one confirming the decree of the Agent [Vide Raja Sree Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (1)], and there appears to be no substantial question of law involved in this appeal. As, however, my learned brother is clearly of opinion that the appeal lies, and as an appeal has already been admitted by the opposite party against other portions of the decree I do not feel called upon to differ. I, therefore, agree, the more so as I think in dealing with an application for leave to appeal, the petitioner should have the benefit of any doubt in the order granting certificate.

PHILLIPS, J.—Objection is taken to this application for permission to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that although the subject-matter of the appeal is Rs. 10,000 in value, the decree of this Court is an affirming decree in so far as the rate of the maintenance claimed is concerned, the addition of Rs. 5,000 for residence being treated merely as an addition to the lower Court's decree. [Vide Raja Sree Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (1).] Petitioner claimed Rs. 15,000 for a residence, but this claim was entirely disallowed by the Agent to the Governor. In appeal this claim was allowed, but the value of the claim was fixed at Rs. 5,000 only. So far as this claim is concerned, I do not think that the decree of this Court can be said to affirm the decree of the Agent, for in that Court that claim was entirely negatived, but in this Court it was allowed partially. Even in respect of this claim the value of the subject-matter of the appeal is Rs. 10,000 and, therefore, I would grant permission to appeal, the more so as an appeal has already been allowed to be filed by the opposing party.

Leave granted.

SANKARALINGA MOOPANAR v. SUBRAMANIA PILLAI.

In applying section 12 of the Pre-emption Act only the proprietary land and not the shamilat land of the pre-emptor is to be considered, as for purposes like this shamilat is a mere appendage of the proprietary land.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge of Gujranwala, at Lahore, dated the 12th May 1913, reversing that of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 16th October 1912, dismissing the claim.

Lala Dharm Das Suri, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the plaintiff sued for pre-emption of a share in three *khata*s Nos. 178, 181 and 182 sold by his near relative, Wasakhi, to the vendees who are also relatives of Wasakhi, but not so near. The first Court dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court noticed that plaintiff was a co-sharer in *khata*s Nos. 181 and 182 but not in khata No. 178, while the vendees were co-sharers in all the three *khata*s. It nevertheless held plaintiff entitled to pre-emption, on the ground that he was more nearly related to the vendor than the vendees. His appeal was accordingly accepted and the case remanded for disposal on the other issues.

The vendees come up here in second appeal and point out that the lower Appellate Court has overlooked the fact that *khata*s Nos. 181 and 182 in which both parties have shares are shamilat and that khata No. 178 in which vendees alone have shares is proprietary land. This case is, therefore, exactly on all fours with Civil Appeal No. 141 of 1911, published as Khair Din v. Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din (1), and following that ruling, I am bound to hold that the plaintiff has no right of pre-emption at all. The ratio decidendi in that case was, that for purposes like this, shamilat is a mere appendage of the proprietary land and that in applying section 12 of the Pre-emption Act, only the proprietary land must be considered.

For these reasons I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the judgment and decree of the first Court.

Before me, the plaintiff-respondent attempts to argue that he is a co-sharer in khata No. 178, but this is negatived by the farid which he himself filed with his plaint, by (1) 22 Ind. Cas. 401; 52 P. L. R. 1914; 43 P. R. 1914; 142 P. W. R. 1914.

—Tenant committing act of waste on holding rendering it unfit for agricultural purposes—Liability to pay compensation—Relationship of landlord and tenant, whether subtenant—Suit for ejectment.

Under the Estates Land Act, it is open to the Courts to award compensation in lieu of ejectment in all cases of waste; but the payment of compensation does not put an end to the relationship of landlord and tenant existing between the parties. [p. 275, col. 1; p. 277, col. 1.]

Where in a suit for ejectment by the trustees of a temple, on the ground that the defendants had erected a building on a portion of the holding and had thereby committed an act of waste, it was found that the holding as a whole had been materially impaired for agricultural purposes and rendered substantially unfit for such purposes:

Held, that the defendants could not be evicted but that they must pay compensation to the plaintiffs for the injury to the holding and continue to hold the land and the building thereon subject to the payment of the rent originally agreed upon. [p. 275, col. 1; p. 277, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIVAR, J.—The plaintiffs as trustees of a temple sue to eject the defendants. The allegation in the plaint is that the defendants erected a house upon a portion of the holding and are, therefore, liable to be evicted. The Suit Collector dismissed the suit. In appeal, the District Judge came to the conclusion that the erection of the building by the tenants impaired the value of the land and rendered it substantially unfit for agricultural purposes; but instead of passing decree in ejectment he directed compensation to be paid to the landlords under section 152 of the Estates Land Act. Both the tenants and the landlords have appealed to this Court.

In the appeal by the tenants, it is argued that as the building was erected only on a small portion of the holding, the finding that the whole land has been rendered unfit for agricultural purposes is unsustainable. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case Hari Mohan Misser v. Surendra Narayan Singh (1), it is the Court which has jurisdiction to weigh evidence, that must find whether the land has been rendered unfit for agricultural purposes. As the Court of second Appeal, we are bound by that finding. We, therefore, accept the conclusion of the District Judge, which is unambiguous. Moreover, there is no issue as to on what portion of the holding, the building was erected and whether that erection prejudiced cultivation in other portions of it. Another objection taken by Mr. Venkatachariar is, that the holding is held in severalties by the brothers and that the act of waste committed by one of them should not entail liability to ejectment on the others. There is no finding that this division of the holding was assented to by the landlords or that they received separate rents from each of the individual tenants in respect of the portion in his occupation. Unless these conditions are satisfied section 145 of the Estates Land Act cannot be invoked in favour of the tenants. We must overrule this contention also.

On the question of the compensation which has been awarded, both parties have raised objections. In the view I am disposed to take of this case, that question will have to be remanded for further consideration to the lower Appellate Court.

In the appeal by the landlords, the trustees, it was first argued by Mr. Rajagopalachariar that the alternative remedy of compensation is not available to the tenants, as a permanent house was constructed by them. Reliance was placed upon two decisions of this Court in Ramanadhan v. Zemindar of Ramnad (2) and Orr v. Mrithyunjaya Gurukkal (3) for this proposition. In the first of these cases, which was a suit for injunction restraining the tenant from further proceeding with the contemplated erection of the building, the learned Judges held that the landlord was entitled to that relief. The observation in the judgment that "there is also no definite standard by which the compensation that ought to be awarded for prospective injury, can be measured," should not be construed as meaning that in all cases where a building has been erected, damages will not afford adequate relief in lieu of ejectment. In the second case, the learned Judges came to the conclusion that the injury was incapable of being compensated. That was arrived at with reference to the facts of that case. The learned Judges do not lay down that in all cases where a building is erected on agricultural land, the only remedy open to the landlord is to evict the tenant. Whatever may have been the view prior to the passing of the Estates Land Act, sections 151 and 152 of that Act put the matter beyond controversy. Under section 152, if the Court is satisfied that the tenant can be relieved from liability to ejectment by awarding against him some pecuniary compensation, the Court should adopt the latter course. There is no differentiation between the erection of a building and any other act of waste. I am clearly of opinion that under the Estates Land Act, it is open to the Courts to award compensation in lieu of ejectment in all cases of waste. The more serious question is this. Whether the compensation mentioned in section 152 is to be regarded as putting an end to the relationship of landlord and tenant, so that the money value paid by the tenant renders the building and the site on which it stands, the absolute property of the tenant? The compensation awarded in this case proceeds on the footing that from the date of its payment, the tenant is to have absolute right to the property. I do not think that the act contemplates the severance of the relationship of landlord and tenant by the grant of compensation. It would amount to the compulsory purchasing out of the landlord, if he is asked to accept a money payment in this way. The words of section 152 which relate to this question are: "The decree shall provide that, if within one month from the date thereof, or such further time as the Collector for reasons to be recorded may allow, the ryot does not repair the damage or pay as compensation a sum which shall be fixed by the Collector and specified in the decree, he shall be ejected." Now, the repairing of the damage at the expense of the tenant would still continue the relationship of landlord and tenant, and why should the award of compensation terminate such relationship? The use of the two clauses in the same context, shows that in both cases the relationship is to subsist. The intention of the Legislature is to give an indulgence to the tenant to remain on the property, notwithstanding the act of waste he has committed, and for this purpose he is to be directed to pay compensation for the injury he has done to the property. The compensation should be fixed on the basis that a tortious act was committed by the tenant upon the holding, and not as if the landlord is to be purchased out of his right by the award of compensation. There is no indication anywhere, either in section 151 or 152, to suggest that a severance of relationship was in the contemplation of the Legislature. It seems to me that the defendants must continue to hold the land and the building thereon as tenants subject to the payment of the rent originally agreed upon. The damage to which they have rendered themselves liable is not for the value of the right which the landlords have in the holding, but for the wrongful act which the tenants have committed on the property. In this view, it is necessary that the award of compensation should be revised. The District Judge and the Revenue Divisional Officer have assessed the amount on the ground that the landlord will lose all his rights in the property. The lower Appellate Court must be asked to assess the damage in the light of the above observations. The finding will be returned in six weeks and seven days will be allowed for objections.

NAPIER, J.—These are two second appeals by the parties in Appeal No. 236 of 1912 in the District Court of Tinnevely. Summary Suit No. 120 of 1911 in the Court of the Deputy Collector of Koilpatti Division was by the Dharmakarthas of the Koilpatti temple under section 151 of the Madras Estates Land Act asking for the ejectment of the defendants, the pattadars No. 223 of the suit lands. The Appellate Court reversing the decree of the first Court, directed the defendants to pay the sum of Rs. 1,210 and in default of such payment to be ejected. In Second Appeal No. 2523 of 1913, the defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 claim that no decree should be passed against them, as they had with the consent of the landholders, divided their lands and had not constructed any building or otherwise materially impaired the value of their portion of the holding for agricultural purposes. That contention is founded on section 145, but the sub-section provides that no landholder should be bound to recognise the sub-division of any irrigated field into plots less than five acres in extent. It is urged that the landholder had given his consent, but no issue was taken on this point and the point was evidently not urged in the lower Appellate Court. Both Courts have found that the holding as a whole has been materially impaired for agricultural purposes and rendered substantially unfit for such purposes and we cannot interfere with that finding in second appeal.

The Court has not thought it necessary to order the buildings to be removed though that was considered the proper remedy in Ramanadhan v. Zemindar of Ram-rad (2), the leading case before the Act, and in Orr v. Mrithyunjaya Gurukkal (3), which followed it, but has granted compensation.

The amount of compensation fixed by the first Court was 10 per cent. of the market value of the land covered by the buildings objected to by the landholders and the question of the propriety of this assessment can only be raised in connection with the point taken by the landholders, appellants in Second Appeal No. 290 of 1914. The important point in that appeal is their claim that the decree should declare that the relation of landholders and ryots still subsists and that the ryots are still liable to pay the rent due on the patta. The defendants claim contra that the tenure has ceased. This is a very important question, which is raised now for the first time in this Court. It is, in my opinion, somewhat unfortunate that the Act does not differentiate between such alterations of the character of the holding as to improve the value of the land but make it unfit for agricultural purposes, and such variations as lower the value of the land for all purposes. The Act gives for the first time, a right to sue to eject for such acts, it having been held in the cases above referred to that such acts do not create a forfeiture and the Legislature might well have made some special provision for acts that really improve the value of the land. An injunction results in a waste of money, while ejectment leaves the position as it stood before. We have, however, to construe the section as it stands and decide what is the effect of awarding compensation and flowing from that, what is the basis of compensation. At first sight, it seems incongruous that a plot which cannot be cultivated, should continue to be held on an agricultural lease, but I am satisfied that it is contemplated by the Act. Section 151 of the Estates Land Act presumes that the landholder will institute a suit in ejectment. It provides that he may also ask for compensation in addition to ejectment. In such a case, obviously the land would retain its character and on ejectment, the landholder would secure another ryot, with or without compensation from the old ryot. An alternative right is given to the landholder to sue for an injunction with or without compensation. In such a case, the ryot would be restrained from continuing the injury to the land but would remain a tenant, with or without having to pay compensation. In the third case, the landlord can sue for the repair of the damage or waste. In such a case, a mandatory injunction would go to the tenant compelling him to make such necessary improvements in the land as would restore it to its former value and there would remain still the relation of landlord and tenant. So far for section 151.

We now come to section 152 of the Estates Land Act. "If in any suit under the preceding section," that is, a suit in ejectment or for an injunction or for repair of damage, "an occupancy ryot is found liable to ejectment," but it appears that it is not necessary to eject the tenant, the Court might make a certain order. The object of the section is not to leave it to the will of the landholder to exact whatever remedy he wishes but to provide that whatever the relief the landholder asks for, the Court shall have a discretion to give such relief as it thinks fit, that is to say, it specifically reserves to the Court the powers which existed prior to the Act. So the section provides that where it appears that the "damage to the holding admits of being repaired, or that pecuniary compensation would afford adequate relief, the decree shall provide that, if within a certain period, the ryot does not repair the damage or pay the sum fixed by the Collector for compensation he shall be ejected", and this is the order made in this case. Assuming, therefore, that whatever the relief sought for by the landlord might be, the Court has declined to decree ejectment, it can make a conditional order for ejectment giving the ryot a short time to do one or two things, either to repair the damage or pay compensation. If he does not take advantage of the time given to him, he is ejected and the landholder procures a new ryot and the relation of landholder and ryot continues. If he does repair the damage, it is equally clear that the land is restored to its proper condition, the ryot remains in his holding and the relation continues.

We now come to the last case, namely, where a ryot takes advantage of the conditional order, and within the time given by the Collector pays compensation. It seems to me impossible to construe these words as making an exception to the results arrived at in the other cases and involving the destruction of the existing relation. If it had been intended to produce a different result, it would have been so provided in the Act and that not having been done I can only construe the words in conformity with the previous conclusions. The ryot must continue to hold the land but pay compensation for the injury to the holding. A difficulty arises, however, to the measure of the damages. This was noted in Ramanadhan v. Zemindar of Ramnad (2), where it was pointed out that there was no definite standard by which prospective injury could be measured. In cases where the fitness of the land for cultivation has been let down, the damages are easily estimated and must be such sum of money as would enable the landholder to restore it to its former condition, that is, to do what the ryot might himself have done "to repair the damage," it would cover such expenses as renewing water channels, removing weed or sand or other deleterious matter. But in cases like the present where the land has in fact become more valuable, though less fit for agricultural purposes, it is certainly difficult to fix compensation. It is impossible to say that no compensation should be given, because such a construction would permit ryots to convert agricultural land into town plots taking the whole increased value to themselves and depriving the landholder of his share in what is known in English Law as "betterment." Where ryoti land is taken by the State under the powers of land acquisition the landholder is entitled to his share of the premium paid for the compulsory purchase. Where the landholder seeks to avail himself of the provisions of section 186 of the Estates Land Act and acquire the holding, the ryot is entitled to full compensation, and it seems to me to follow that the ryot cannot claim to improve the value of the land for his own benefit without paying any compensation to the landholder. Further, in certain circumstances a landholder is entitled to sue for enhancement. Such circumstances are set out in section 30 of the Estates Land Act. They include improvement of the land by agencies outside the landholder or the ryot and the improvement of the land effected by the landholder. Now, clearly the conversion of an agricultural land into buildings deprives the landholder of his right to effect an improvement himself and of his right to share in the result of other improvements not made by the ryot, and this was also pointed out in Ramanadhan v. Zemindar of Ramnad (2). It is difficult to value the loss of these prospective rights which must vary considerably with the location of the land, but an attempt must be made to do so. Compensation fixed, as has been done in this case, by awarding 10 per cent. of the improvements to the landholder is to my mind not ascertained in the proper manner. I would call for a finding from the lower Appellate Court as to the amount of compensation due to the landholders on the basis of the foregoing observations.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, Sch. I, Arts. 14, 120—Deposit in Government Treasury—Limitation.

From the year 1836 to 1859, the accounts of the Satara Treasury showed the sum now claimed by the plaintiffs as payable to C, the plaintiffs' ancestor. In 1848 the Satara Principality became a part of the Bombay Presidency. In 1857 the Collector of Satara issued a notice to C's eldest son, S, calling upon him to withdraw the amount. In 1859, S applied for the money. Before, however, the money could be paid, S's younger brother objected to payment to S and asked for the distribution of the amount among C's all heirs. In 1860 the Assistant Collector ordered that the sons and heirs of C should produce a certificate of heirship and then arrangement would be made to pay them the money.

Held, that the order of 1860 as also the notice to S in 1857 was a sufficient declaration of trust and that the money was certainly vested in the Government when it took over the Satara Treasury in 1848 and the purpose of the credit in the name of C was certainly specific and that, therefore, section 10 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case: [p. 278, col. 2.]

Held, also, that the plaintiffs' claim did not fall within Article 14 of the Limitation Act and would be within time if it fell within Article 120, but that the case was one to which the bar of limitation could not be pleaded. [p. 278, col. 1.]

SECRETARY OF STATE P. PAPUJI MAHADEV.

Mr. Ramdatt, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jayakar, (with him Mr. Ghorpure), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It is unnecessary to re-state the facts, which are not disputed and are very clearly stated by the learned District Judge. He has allowed the plaintiffs' claim for Rs. 1,793, which came into the hands of the East India Company in 1848 when the Satara Principality, on the death of the Maharajah Shahaji, became part of the Bombay Presidency. The only issues raised in the lower Court were issues of limitation based upon Articles 14 and 120 and section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act. The learned Judge, being of opinion that the money was at most held by the defendant on an implied trust, held that section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act did not apply to the case and that the plaintiffs' claim could only be decreed on the ground that it was within time under Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act.

In our opinion, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed on the ground not only that their claim did not fall within Article 14 and would be within time if it fell within Article 120, but that it is one to which the bar of limitation cannot be pleaded. It is, we think, correct, as stated by Pigot, J., in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Gurn Proshad Dhur (1), that the East India Company could be, and often was, a trustee. It could be expressly a trustee as in the case of the Clive Fund [see Walsh v. Secretary of State for India (2)], and could be a party to a breach of trust and, therefore, subject to the law of trusts: see East India Company v. Robertson (3). That it could incur fiduciary obligations, is expressly recognised by the Government of India Act, 1858 (21 and 22 Vic. c. 106), which by section 71 enacts that the Company shall not, after the passing of the Act, be liable in respect of any claim which has arisen out of any fiduciary obligation made before the Act, and by section 42, that all sums of money payable in respect of liabilities then existing shall be charged upon the revenues of India if such liabilities were lawfully incurred by the Company. By section 65 all persons may have the same remedies, legal and equitable, against the Secretary of State as they could have had against the Company.

From the year 1836 to 1859, the accounts of the Satara Treasury showed the sum now claimed by the plaintiffs as payable to Chinto Mahipat Govaikar, the plaintiffs' ancestor. In 1857 it is found by the learned Judge, and is not disputed, that the Collector of Satara issued a notice to Chinto's eldest son, Sadashiv, calling upon him to withdraw the amount. In June 1859, Sadashiv petitioned the Collector asking that the money should be paid to him. The sum claimed had, in the previous April, been transferred from the suspense to the profit and loss account. The Collector, however, having referred the matter to Government received a reply sanctioning the payment to Sadashiv. Before it was paid, however, Sadashiv's younger brother objected to payment to Sadashiv and asked that it should be distributed among all Chinto's sons. On the 4th of February 1860, the Assistant Collector ordered that the sons and heirs of Chinto in whose names the money had been credited, should produce a certificate of heirship and then arrangement would be made to pay them the money. The authority of the Assistant Collector to pass such an order is not disputed.

This order as also the notice to Sadashiv in 1857 was, upon the authority of Scott v. Bentley (4), a sufficient declaration of trust. The money was certainly vested in the Government when it took over the Satara Treasury in 1848 and the purpose of the credit in the name of Chinto was certainly specific.

If the money claimed had been realised in execution proceedings in the Supreme Court and subsequently after many years credited to Government, the liability of the Government to repay it could not have been disputed: see Act XXV of 1866 and Act V of 1870. In our opinion the fact that the liability charged is not specifically recognis-

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—Unregistered lease, terms of, whether admissible for proving fair rent for use and occupation.

A lease of immovable property which is compulsorily registrable and not registered, cannot be looked at for the purpose of determining the fair amount of occupation rent payable in respect of the property which formed the subject of that demise. [p. 279, col. 2; p. 280, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree and judgment of the Court of the District Munsif of Melur, in Small Cause Suit No. 23 of 1914.

FACTS.—The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Petitioners:—The District Munsif erred in preferring the defendant's evidence to the Commissioner's report. The lower Court ought to have given some damages for use and occupation of the land, based on the amount of rent agreed upon in the lease. For such a purpose the lease is receivable in evidence. Amir Ali v. Aykup Ali Khan Sandagor (1), and

Sheo Karan Singh v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh (2).

Mr. N. S. Rangaswami Iyengar, for the Respondent, argued contra, and relied upon Narayanan Chetty v. Muthiah Serrai (3).

JUDGMENT.—An application is made to me to allow time to have the plaint translated and printed. I refuse the application. On the merits, the first point taken before me is that the District Munsif ought not to have considered the Commissioner's report to be unsatisfactory. I think the District Munsif was entitled to prefer the defendant's evidence to the report of the Commissioner. I have, however, looked at the Commissioner's report, which is printed by Mr. Rajah Aiyar and the evidence given by the Commissioner in Court was read to me. The District Munsif was, in my opinion, justified in taking the view he did. It was next argued before me that the defendant ought to have been ordered to give some damages, because he was in use and occupation of the land. The answer to it is that the suit may be considered in two ways, (1) as based on a breach of the contract to cultivate the land and (2) as for fair compensation for use and occupation of land.

As to the first aspect of the case, there is no contract that can be proved in the Court, the lease being unregistered.

With regard to the second head, it seems to me there are two answers:—

(a) that the defendant did not use or occupy the land;

(b) that the land was of so little value that the defendant was not bound to pay anything in respect of its use and occupation, assuming that he did occupy it.

On the last point several cases were cited to me in support of the contention that an unregistered lease [though it falls under section 17 (d) of the Registration Act and it ought to have been registered] may be looked at for the purpose of determining what would be fair rent for the use and occupation of the land. In the case Amir Ali v. Aykup Ali Khan Sandagor (1), however, the Court did not admit the lease in evidence, but admitted other oral evidence with reference to the rent. In the case Sheo Karan Singh v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh (2), the Court did apparently consider the kabuliyat for the purpose, but the kabuliyat was registered though void as a lease. As the parties had acted upon the kabuliyat for some time, the payment of rent by the lessees would have been evidence showing what could be fair occupation rent. The real point decided in the case was that occupation rent could be demanded, and not as to what would be fair occupation rent. It seems to me on the other hand that the case in Narayanan Chetty v. Muthiah Servai (3) is strong authority against the admissibility of such a lease as is under consideration for the purpose of proving that the petitioners had agreed to a certain amount of rent for the property.

For these reasons, it seems to me that the suit was rightly dismissed and the petition is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Hindu Law—Will—Legacy to be paid out of property not disposable, validity of.

A Hindu testator has no power to direct legacies to be paid out of property which he has no power to dispose of by Will. [p. 281; col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Poona, in Appeal No. 90 of 1913, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Junnar, in Civil Suit No. 278 of 1912.

Mr. Dhurandhar, (with him Mr. K. H. Kelkar), for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The first question which arises in this case is whether there has been a valid disposition by way of legacy in favour of certain female relations of the testator, Pandharinath, for if that point is decided in favour of the appellant, it will dispose of the whole case. The learned Judges both in the Subordinate Court and in the District Court have taken as the fundamental proposition upon which the case must be decided, that whatever property is so completely under the control of the testator that he may give it away in specie during his life-time, he may also devise by Will. That is the form in which the proposition is adopted by the Subordinate Judge. In the District Court the proposition is stated as follows: "A Hindu who is of sound mind, and not a minor, can by gift dispose of all property in which he has an absolute interest and can, by Will, dispose of all property which he may give away in his lifetime;" and it is said that because the author of the Mitakshara states that "it is a settled point that although property in the paternal or ancestral estate is by birth, the father has independent power in the disposal of effects, other than immoveables, for indispensable acts of duty and for purposes prescribed by text of law, as gifts through affection, support of the family, relief from distress, and so forth," the testator here had power by way of affection to make legacies in favour of his female relations out of what was admittedly ancestral property. There is, so far as we are aware, no decided case in which it has been held that the power of a Hindu father stated in pl. 27, Chapter I, section 1 of the Mitakshara, above referred to, enables him for the purposes therein mentioned to dispose of ancestral property, even though not immoveable, by Will. On the other hand, it has been decided by the Madras High Court, one of the Judges being Mr. Justice Muttusami Ayyar, that a legacy cannot be treated as an executory gift made for religious uses: see Rathnam v. Sivasubramania (1), and that was based upon an earlier decision in Vitla Butten v. Yamenamma (2), where it was held that a member of an undivided family cannot bequeath even his own share of the joint property, because at the moment of death the right by survivorship is in conflict with the right by bequest, and the title by survivorship, being the prior title, takes precedence to the exclusion of that by bequest. This point was considered by the Privy Council in Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (3), where it was said: "It has been ingeniously argued that partial effect ought to be given to the Will by treating it as a disposition of the one-third undivided share in the property to which the father was entitled in his life-time... the learned Counsel for the appellant have insisted that it follows as a necessary consequence (from the power of alienation by gift inter vivos) that such a share may be disposed of by Will, because the authorities which engrafted the testamentary power upon the Hindu Law have treated a devise as a gift to take effect on the testator's death, some of them affirming the broad proposition that what a man can give by act inter vivos, he may give by Will." Reference is then made to the case of Vitla Bulten v. Yamenamma (2), above referred to, the reason of that decision being stated to be that "the co-parcener's power of alienation is founded on his right to a partition; that that right dies with him; and that, the title of his co-sharers by survivorship vesting in them at the moment of his death, there remains nothing upon which the Will can operate." Their Lordships conclude the discussion of the question in these terms: "The question, therefore, is not so much whether an admitted principle of Hindu Law shall be carried out to its apparently logical consequences, as what are the limits of an exceptional doctrine established by modern jurisprudence. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to decide between the conflicting authorities of the Bombay and the Madras High Courts in respect of alienations by gift, because they are of opinion that the principles upon which the Madras Court has decided against the power of alienation by Will are sound, and sufficient to support that decision."

It is admitted by the learned Pleader for the respondent that none of the cases referred to by the learned Judge as instances of gifts falling within the power stated in pl. 27, Chap. I, section 1, of the Mitakshara are cases of testamentary disposition. In Haumantapa v. Jivubai (4), which was referred to by the same learned Pleader, the disposition was by gift in inter vivos and the decision in Bachoo v. Mankorebai (5), affirmed in appeal by the Privy Council in Bachoo Harkisonulais v. Mankorebai (6), was a case in which the gift had been made before the death of the testator. We are, therefore, of opinion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court cannot be supported. The legacies were directed to be paid by the testator out of property which he had no power to dispose of by Will. We, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the suit. We think that under the circumstances the parties should bear their own costs.

Suit dismissed.

Delivery of possession is essential to make a gift valid under Muhammadian Law. [p. 262, col. 1.]

Where there is only an execution of a deed of gift and the donor, retaining the gift-deed himself, continues to exercise rights of ownership over the property for his own benefit and does not profess to hold it either as trustee or agent of the donee, there is no such delivery of possession as is contemplated by the Muhammadian Law, and the gift is invalid. The mere change in the Collector's certificate does not prove, by itself, change of possession. [p. 284, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the City Civil Court, at Madras, in Original Suit No. 132 of 1911.

FACTS.—The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

This appeal was first heard on 23rd March 1915.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss (with him Mr. Venkatasubramiah), for the Appellant:—The document in question is a deed of gift and as such is invalid for want of delivery of possession. Vide Vahazullah Sahib v. Boyapati Nagayya (1), and Chandhri Mehdi Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (2). The plaintiff having been in possession all along is entitled to succeed.

Mr. A. Saugappa, for the Respondents, argued contra.

JUDGMENT.—It is not denied by the defendants that Exhibit A is really a transaction of gift. It must be held that the plaintiff did not, in his plaint or at the time of the issues, put forward the alternative contention that if it was intended to be a gift in the form of a sale (and not a mere nominal transfer by sale), it was invalid under the Muhammadan Law for want of delivery of possession. [See Vahazullah Sahib v. Boyapati Nagayya (1) and Chandhri Mehdi Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (2).] But he alleged possession in himself in the plaint and there was an issue as to the fact of possession. The alleged continuity of the plaintiff's title notwithstanding the execution of Exhibit A is the basis of the suit and if the gift is invalid under the Muhammadan Law, the title of the plaintiff continues and the relief prayed for can be granted.

We, therefore, think that this appeal cannot be finally decided without a finding on the following issue:—

"Was the gift made under Exhibit A validated by the delivery of possession of the gifted property to the donee as required by the Muhammadan Law?"

The finding will be submitted within two months and ten days will be allowed for filing objections. The defendants will be at liberty to adduce evidence on the question of possession and the plaintiff to adduce rebutting evidence so far as is allowed by the Evidence Act.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment of this Court, the City Civil Judge, Madras, submitted the following:

FINDING.—The issue on which I have to submit my finding runs as follows:—

Was the gift made under Exhibit A validated by the delivery of possession of the gifted properties to the donee, as required by Muhammadan Law?

2. The defendants did not appear on the day on which the suit was posted for the trial of this issue. No further evidence was adduced on behalf of the plaintiff. The question has, therefore, to be decided upon the evidence taken at the former trial. The donee (1st defendant) under Exhibit A was the son of the donor (plaintiff). At the date of the gift, he was living with his father as a member of his family. It does not appear clearly from the evidence whether the donee had actually attained majority, that is to say, completed his 18th year. According to the evidence of Sakhavat Hussain (P. W. No. 3), a son of the plaintiff by his 2nd wife, the 1st defendant was 21 years old when the said witness gave his evidence in this Court, i. e., in January 1913. If so, 1st defendant was apparently not a major when Exhibit A was executed, which was on 1st April 1909. But the 1st defendant himself in an affidavit, dated 18th November 1911, stated he was then about 24 years. If so, he was about 21 at the date of the gift. Under Exhibit A, the properties gifted to 1st defendant were a two-storied house together with two tiled and substantial-built houses adjoining it, bearing Nos. 2/2 and 3, Karimuddin Sahib Street. The donor and the donee were both living in No. 2/2. No. 3 was let to tenants. In the document the donee is described as "my son, Wajihuddin Sahib, a student, residing in house No. 2/2, Karimuddin Sahib Street." According to the evidence, the 1st defendant (donee) was at the date of the document absent at Bellary, where his brother, Abdul Kadir Sahib, was employed as Sub-Assistant Inspector of Schools. He returned to Madras about two months after and lived with his father in No. 2/2 for a few months. During this period the father effected a transfer of the Collector's certificate for the two properties in the name of the son. The plaintiff, in his evidence, says that he himself applied to the Collector for the transfer of the certificate in his son, the 1st defendant's name. The plaintiff also says that at his instance, the 1st defendant obtained from the Collector's office the certificate which was issued in his (1st defendant's) name, and gave it over to the father. The 1st defendant continued to live with his father in No. 2/2 for some little time after this, and then left the house owing to quarrels between him and his father. As regards house No. 3, the evidence is that from before the date of Exhibit A, it was in the possession of tenants who have been paying the rents to the plaintiff. It does not appear that the 1st defendant collected the rents himself or that the plaintiff collected the rent of the said house on behalf of the 1st defendant. In Exhibit A, however, the donor says:—

"I have put the aforesaid son in occupation and proprietary possession of the house and have also delivered all its vouchers to him. I declare that in future there will be no claim of any kind in respect of the house sold either for me or for any of my heirs against the purchaser and his heirs. Should I or my heirs or any other person, or executor claim against the said purchaser or his heirs, it will be false and not maintainable. I shall be responsible for accounting for claimants." These statements certainly amount to an unequivocal declaration on the part of the donor that he had put the donee in possession of the properties and that he will hold himself responsible if any claims are preferred to the property by third parties. The fact that the plaintiff applied or got the 1st defendant to apply for the issue of a Collector's certificate in the 1st defendant's name, also amounts to an admission on plaintiff's part that the latter was not only the transferee of the property but was also in actual possession thereof. The Collector's certificate as well as the title-deeds have been produced by the plaintiff himself. In addition to the immoveable properties given under Exhibit A, the plaintiff also gave some moneys to the 1st defendant and with these moneys, the latter opened accounts in his name in the Bank of Madras as well as in the Post Office (see Exhibit F and F1). The issue relates only to the immoveable properties dealt with by Exhibit A, and the question for determination is whether upon the facts set forth above there was sufficient delivery of possession of the said properties to the donee, as required by Muhammadan Law. I am of opinion that this question should be answered in the affirmative having regard to the principles laid down in the following cases, viz., Shaik Iblezan v. Shaik Saleman (3), Humera Bibi v. Najm-un-Nissa Bibi (4), Fibi Khawar Sultan v. Bibi Rukhsia Sultan (5) and Kandath Veettil Bano v. Musaliam Veettil Pakrakutti (6). The donor was the father of the donee and the latter was at the date of the gift quite a young man living under his father's protection. He was then a student and unmarried. The circumstance that he was then temporarily absent from his father's house does not, in my opinion, affect the matter. In spite of such temporary absence, his domicile and residence were with his father as a dependent member of the latter's family and that was the view taken by the father himself as will be seen from his describing the son as a student residing in No. 2/2, Karimuddin Sahib Street, in which house the father himself lived. The said house (No. 2/2), along with the adjacent property, house No. 3, was the subject of gift under Exhibit A. In the instrument of gift the father not only stated that he had made the gift, but also that he had put his son in occupation and proprietary possession of the house and delivered all its vouchers to him. He also stated that he held himself accountable to his son in reference to the property. In addition to this, he himself got the Collector's certificate for the property transferred to his son's name, which also amounted to clear admission on his part that the son was in possession of the property. The plaintiff's case was that the whole thing was a nominal transaction and not a real one. On that question I held against the plaintiff and found that the plaintiff really intended to benefit his son, the 1st defendant. The question which I have now to consider is, whether that intention was validly effectuated by delivery of possession of the immoveable properties gifted under Exhibit A. The question appears to be one of mixed law and fact. The present case is on the facts very similar to the cases cited above. Applying the principles laid down in those cases, I am of opinion that there was sufficient delivery of possession by the donor to the donee in this case to validate the gift according to Muhammadan Law.

The appeal was finally heard after the return of finding of the lower Court on 10th September 1915.

Mr. N. D. Devadoss, for the Appellant, argued that the finding ought not be accepted as no delivery of possession had been given and relied on the possession of the deed of gift and the title-deeds by the plaintiff as well as his collection of rents of one of the items conveyed and his living with the members of his family in the other house.

Mr. A. Sangappa, for the Respondents, argued that the finding was correct and relied on the admission of the plaintiff in the plaint and his conduct in connection with the proceedings for the transfer of Collector's certificate.

JUDGMENT.—We are unable to accept the finding of the learned City Civil Judge that possession was given by the plaintiff to his donee (1st defendant) of the properties mentioned in Exhibit A.

The admission in the deed A and the admission or conduct in connection with the Collector's certificate proceedings are, no doubt, strong items of evidence against the plaintiff's contention that no possession passed, but on the other hand there are the following facts (proved by clear and uncontradicted evidence)

(a) that the rents of house No. 3 were received by the plaintiff even after the date of the gift-deed for his own benefit;

(b) that neither the gift-deed (Exhibit A) nor any of the title-deeds (Exhibits B and C series), was given to the 1st defendant; and

(c) that the plaintiff continued to live in the house No. 2/2 with all the obedient members of his family (including, no doubt, the 1st defendant so long as he was obedient).

These facts seem to us to indicate that the plaintiff continued to exercise rights of ownership over the properties for his own benefit, and he cannot be treated as having divested himself of his possession of the properties in any degree. He could, of course, by making himself a trustee or agent of the donee, or as his guardian (if the donee was a minor), or expressing an intention to treat his own possession as the donee's possession, unequivocally transfer legally effectual possession to the donee while himself remaining in actual possession, but there is no evidence of any such intention on plaintiff's part to treat his own possession as possession on behalf of 1st defendant, the defendants having let in no evidence whatever to contradict the evidence on the plaintiff's side.

The gift under Exhibit A being thus invalid under Muhammadan Law for want of delivery of possession [see Vahazullah Sahib v. Boyapati Nagayya (1) and Chaudhri Mehdi Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (2)], we reverse the judgment of the lower Court and give the plaintiff a decree declaring his title as prayed for in the plaint. The parties will bear their respective costs in both Courts, as it was the plaintiff's own fault in executing the deed, Exhibit A, which led to the 1st defendant's creditor's attempts to proceed against the properties covered by the deed.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 44, scope of—Stamp duty and penalty—Joint-executants—Contribution.

Section 44 of the Indian Stamp Act is only intended to give a right to an innocent party, not guilty of any default in the matter of the proper stamping of a document, to recover the duty and penalty he is obliged to pay from the person or persons guilty of default and is not intended to enable one of several persons, who were under a common duty to pay the proper stamp duty on a document in proportionate shares, to claim from the others contribution in respect of the amount of the stamp duty and penalty which he has been compelled to pay in full owing to their common default.

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Ayling, in Civil Revision Petition No. 535 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura, in Small Cause Suit No. 129 of 1911.

FACTS.—In Original Suit No. 50 of 1908 on the file of the East Sub-Court, Madura, the plaintiff produced a cadjan document purporting to be a partition deed executed between him and the defendant. Having had to pay stamp duty and penalty on the said document, he filed the present suit more than three years after he paid the stamp duty and penalty for contribution against the defendant. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the defendant was not bound to contribute as the plaintiff made the payment to suit his own purposes and that the suit was barred by limitation under Article 61, Limitation Act. The plaintiff then preferred Civil Revision Petition No. 535 of 1912 to the High Court, which was dismissed by Ayling, J. He then preferred this appeal under the Letters Patent.

and as in this case one party alone had to pay the full stamp duty and penalty on account of their joint default, the defendant was liable to contribute. Vide Secretary of State v. Guru Proshad Dhur (1). The suit is not barred as it falls under Article 120. Vide Unichaman v. Ahmed Kutti Kayi (2).

Mr. S. Gopalaswami Iyengar, for the Respondent, argued contra.

JUDGMENT.—We think that section 44 of the Stamp Act was intended to give a right to an innocent party, who himself was not guilty of any default in the matter of the proper stamping of a document, to recover the duty or penalty he was obliged to pay, from the person or persons guilty of the default and that it was not intended to enable one of several persons, who were under a common duty to pay the proper stamp in proportionate shares, to claim recovery of the proportionate amount of the duty or penalty the whole of which he was afterwards obliged to pay owing to the common default. In this view, it is unnecessary to consider the question of limitation, and we dismiss the Letters Patent Appeal with costs.

LAHANU BAI—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—

APPELLANT

HARAKCHAND—DECREE-HOLDER—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, r. 1—Receiver, appointment of, to receive rents and profits—Simple money decree, execution of—Property not attachable—Execution, how effected.

Under Order XL, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, a Receiver can be appointed to receive the rents and profits of an estate which cannot itself be attached and consequently a simple decree for money may be executed by appointing a Receiver. [p. 286, col. 2; p. 287, col. 1.]

LAHANU BAI V. HARAKCHAND.

Where the interests of both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor can be safeguarded and where there is no other way than the appointment of a Receiver in which the decree-holder can hope to recover any appreciable part of his claim, the appointment of a Receiver is neither unjust nor inconvenient. [p. 287, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous appeal against the order of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 2nd February 1914, reversing that of the Junior Munsif, Hinganghat, dated the 29th August 1913.

Mr. W. V. Ghurpure, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. B. D. N. Khare, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in this Court holds a decree for money against the appellant, who is a Hindu widow possessing certain sir lands assigned to her in lieu of maintenance by her adopted son. In due course, the respondent on the 26th March 1913 applied to the Court of the junior Munsif, Wardha, for appointment of a Receiver of the said fields. The Munsif, overruling the judgment-debtor's objection that a Receiver cannot be appointed in execution of a simple money decree, nevertheless dismissed the application on the ground that it would be unjust to deprive her of her only source of maintenance. In appeal the District Judge, after setting out the history of previous execution proceedings, held that without making the appointment applied for, justice could not be done to the decree-holder, reversed the Munsif's order and directed that unless the judgment-debtor showed further ground for regarding such an appointment as neither just nor convenient, the application should be granted.

The main question raised in the present appeal from the District Judge's order of remand is whether a Receiver can legally be appointed where the decree to be executed is one for money only. The argument for the appellant is this. Section 51, Civil Procedure Code, provides that "subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed", the Court may on the decree-holder's application, order execution of the decree by appointing a Receiver. But rule 30, Order XXI, in the 1st Schedule to the Code, provides only the following modes of executing a decree for payment of money:—

(i) detention of the judgment debtor in the civil prison,

(ii) attachment and sale of his property,
(iii) both the foregoing processes.

This rule, it is said, constitutes a limitation upon the general right conferred by section 51. To accept this contention, involves extending the limitation to the very generally expressed first rule in Order XL, which opens thus:—

"Where it appears to the Court to be just and convenient, the Court may by order appoint a Receiver of any property, whether before or after decree."

On the other hand, it may be rejected without in any way departing from a literal and grammatical interpretation of rule 30 in Order XXI. That Order nowhere, except in rule 49 (2) authorises appointment of a Receiver, and the excepted provision is a new one reproduced from the English Partnership Act, 1890, apparently without special regard to its congruity with the general scheme of the Civil Procedure Code. The correct inference seems to me to be that the matter of appointing a Receiver was left by the Legislature to be dealt with in a separate Order (XL) to which we should look for any "conditions and limitations" contemplated by section 51.

There are numerous cases in the reports which show that the practice under the Code of 1882 and earlier, was to appoint a Receiver where necessary in executing a decree for money no less than in respect of other decrees. I may refer here to two, namely, Toolsa Goolal v. John Antone (1) and Uday Kumari Chatwalin v. Hari Ram Shaha (2). The Legislature must have been aware of this practice, and yet in the Code of 1908 it has not only added an express power to execute a decree by appointing a Receiver, but has appreciably extended the old power of appointment contained in section 503 of the 1882 Code by omitting the words "the subject of a suit or under attachment." A Receiver may, therefore, be appointed to receive the rents and profits of an estate which cannot itself be attached: see Keshabati Koeri v. Mohon Chandra Mondal (3). At the same time, there is no difference of importance for present purposes between rule 30 of Order

BUDHA KHAN v. MOHAMMAD.

XXI and the corresponding provision (section 254) in the 1882 Code.

I think, then, that even a simple decree for money may be executed by appointing a Receiver.

It is further contended on the judgment-debtor's behalf that a general order appointing a Receiver amounts to attachment of future rents and, therefore, offends against the prohibition in proviso (n) to section 60, Civil Procedure Code. There is, however, a clear distinction between attaching future rents and profits and appointing a Receiver to collect them as they fall due from time to time, as will appear from two of the cases above cited, namely, Uday Kumari Chatwalin v. Hari Ram Shaha (2) and Keshabati Koeri v. Mchou Chandra Mondal (3). Moreover, under the lower Appellate Court's order, the Munsif has still to decide the extent of the Receiver's authority, even if the judgment-debtor fails to show further cause against the proposed appointment.

I do not consider it necessary to decide here whether the appellant is proprietor or ordinary tenant of the sir assigned for her maintenance. In the Courts below, her position was assumed to be that of a proprietor. All that is urged here in favour of her being a tenant is, that by the terms of her grant she must pay the rental assessed on the land by the Settlement Officer. There is at present no question of attaching the fields assigned to her, and section 70 (2) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, does no more than protect the right of an ordinary tenant from sale in execution of a decree. It is suggested that Singai Parmanandsao v. Baji Rao (4) was wrongly decided. In that case land granted by way of maintenance was held liable to attachment and sale in execution of a money decree obtained against the grantee notwithstanding that the grant contained a prohibition against alienation. For the reason just stated I am not required to deal with this point. I may, however, observe that no later authority than that cited, has been put before me and that on the principle of stare decisis alone I would be prepared to follow the decision of Ismay, J. C. I would add that the appellant's grant confers only a life-interest, but does not expressly prohibit alienation.

There remains the question whether it is "just and convenient" to appoint a Receiver. In this connection we are concerned solely with the Munsif's view that it is not just to deprive the judgment-debtor of her sole source of maintenance and that the decree-holder has not shown how the appointment he desires, would be convenient. As to this the District Judge has well pointed out that the interests of both parties can be safeguarded if the appointment is made and that in no other way can the decree-holder hope to recover any appreciable part of his claim. The latter view seems to me clearly correct. The appellant lets out her land yearly and secures her rents in lump. She is no less bound than any other recipient of income to live within her means, and to permit her to enjoy the whole regardless of her just debts is a course not sanctioned by either law or morality.

This appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. I allow Rs. 15 as Legal Practitioner's fee in this Court.

Held, that the last entry was unauthorised and was not of much evidential value as there was nothing on the record to show why the entries of the two previous Settlements were changed and the new entry substituted in the place. [p. 289, col. 2.]

Where defendants have done no overt act amounting to an invasion of plaintiffs' right, the mere allegation in the plaint that the defendants consider themselves co-sharers and openly deny the plaintiffs' exclusive proprietary rights in the land, cannot furnish the plaintiffs a definite cause of action so as to enable them to seek declaration of their title. [p. 289, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge Attock, at Campbellpur dismissing the suit.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. C. Mehra and Mr. Noor-ul-Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are Awans Hajtal by caste, brought the present suit against the defendants, who belong to four other sections of Awans known as Awans Jafra, Khilan, Jaswal and Jamal, for a declaration that the plaintiffs together with pro forma defendants Nos. 52 to 59 were exclusively entitled to proprietary rights in 24,476 kanals of shamilat land known as Chak Nakka, situate in village Danda Shah Balwal, and that the defendants other than the pro forma defendants Nos. 52 to 59 possessed no rights in the said shamilat area. A plot of 706 kanals 2 marlas which at one time formed part of the shamilat, was alleged to have been in possession of the defendants for a long time and was excepted from the claim. According to the plaintiffs, they and defendants Nos. 1 to 16 were descendants respectively of Shahadat and Jafar, who were sons of Hayat; the plaintiffs were known as Awans Hajtal and the said defendants Nos. 1 to 16 as Awans Jafra; the Chak Nakka in dispute was acquired by plaintiffs' ancestor, Shahadat, who paid Rs. 1,200 by way of fine to a Sikh nobleman, called Sardar Attar Singh, in Sikh times, and ever since the date of the acquisition Shahadat's descendants had been in possession of the said chak. Jafar, brother of Shahadat, had not paid any part of the fine of Rs. 1,200 and he and his descendants had, therefore, acquired no proprietary rights in Chak Nakka. In support of this origin of their exclusive title to the chak in dispute, the plaintiffs have relied on a judgment of Sayyad Faiz-ul-Hussan, Extra Assistant Commissioner, dated the 25th

August 1862, by which the claim of the *Jafra*s, ancestors of defendants Nos. 1 to 16, sharers in Chak Nakka along with the descendants of Shahadat was dismissed. The plaintiffs have further relied upon another judgment of Sayyad Faiz-ul-Hussan, dated the 22nd August 1863, which, however, does not seem to bear directly on the question of proprietary rights in Chak Naka.

In the Regular Settlement of 1863 the land of Chak Nakka (though the name Chak Nakka does not appear in the Revenue Record) was entered as the village shamilat belonging to all proprietors of the Awan tribe without any distinction, and in the Revised Settlement of 1887 the same entry was repeated. In the Settlement Record of 1900, however, it is entered as the shamilat of the proprietors belonging to the Hajtal section of Awans (see evidence of Ghulam Jafar, Naib Sadar Kanungo, at p. 47 of the paper-book). The plaintiffs claim that as they and defendants Nos. 52 to 59 alone are members of the Awan Hajtal section, the rest of the Awans being known as *Jafra*s, Jaswals, Khilans and Jamals, the whole of the shamilat area in dispute belongs exclusively to them and defendants Nos. 52 to 59, and they ask for a declaration to that effect.

The District Judge, after referring to and discussing the entries in the record of the three Settlements of 1863, 1887 and 1900 and also to the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of the village, has held that, although the village land in suit was originally acquired by Shahadat, the ancestors of the defendants have held possession of it along with Shahadat's descendants, that the defendants are co-sharers in the land with the plaintiffs, and that plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation; on these findings he has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

In support of the appeal the learned Counsel for the appellants has relied upon the history of the village (page 24 of the paper-book), the judgment of Sayyad Faiz-ul-Hussan, dated the 25th August 1863, which is not printed but a copy of which is on the record, and the report of the Local Commissioner, Amir Chand, dated the 17th November 1910, (pages 57—66). On the other hand the Counsel for the respondents has called our attention to the mutation proceedings of March 1903 relating to the sale of a part of the land in suit by Allah

BUDHA KHAN V. MOHAMMAD.

Yar, son of Misri Jafzal (pages 28—35, to the deposition of the Naib Sadar Kanungo at paragraph 47 and to certain portions of the report of the Local Commissioner referred to above.

In the history of the village we can find nothing which would support the claim of the plaintiffs that they alone, together with the pro forma defendants Nos. 52 to 59, from among the descendants of Hayat are entitled to be called Awans Hajtal, the descendants of Jafar being known as Awans Jafzal. This distinction is no doubt drawn in the judgment of Sayyad Faiz-ul-Hussan, dated the 25th August 1863, but it does not seem to have been adhered to later.

In the mutation proceedings of March 1909, above referred to, it would seem that the Revenue Authorities considered all the descendants of Hayat, including the descendants of Hayat's son Jafar, as Awans Hajtal, and that this appellation was not restricted to the descendants of Shabadat. The entry in the Settlement Record of 1900, according to which the land in suit belongs to Awans Hajtal, therefore, supports the claim of defendants Nos. 1 to 16 to share in the shamilat along with the plaintiffs; and the mere fact that the said defendants have not actually cultivated any part of the shamilat land in dispute is not sufficient to deprive them of their proprietary rights therein.

Besides, it is not at all clear what cause of action the plaintiffs had against these defendants so as to be able to seek a declaration of title against them. The allegation in the plaint that these defendants considered themselves co-sharers in the land in question, and that the other defendants openly denied the plaintiffs' exclusive proprietary rights in the land two months before suit, cannot furnish the plaintiffs with a definite cause of action in which a suit like the present can be based. The defendants have done no overt act amounting to an invasion of the plaintiffs' rights and the suit is, therefore, of a speculative character. It is said by the plaintiffs' Counsel that the sale of a part of the shamilat by defendant No. 40, Nur Mohammad, Awan Jamal, five years before suit (see deposition of Megh Raj Patwari at page 25) and the sale of another part of the shamilat by Allah Yar, son of Misri Jafzal, (defendant No. 7), furnish the plaintiffs with a cause of action for the present suit. It is clear, however, that by reason of these two sales no cause of action accrued to the plaintiffs as against all the defendants, except against the above-named Nur Mohammad and Allah Yar.

Assuming, however, that the plaintiffs had a valid cause of action against all the defendants, it seems to us that the entries in the Settlement Records of 1863 and 1887, showing that the shamilat land in question was owned by the Awan proprietors of the village, coupled with the fact that the defendants who belong to the Khilans, Jaswals and Jamals sections of the Awans have been in possession of portions of the shamilat and have built their dhoks on the portions in their possession, tell strongly against the plaintiffs' claim to exclusive proprietary rights in the shamilat. In the Settlement Record of 1900 the entry is, no doubt, in favour of Awans Hajtal, but this description, as we have seen above, applies to the Jafzals as well, who cannot, therefore, be excluded from a share in the shamilat.

As regards the other defendants, i. e., Khilans, Jaswals, and Jamals, there is nothing whatever on the record to show why the entries of the two previous Settlements of 1863 and 1887 were changed and the new entry substituted in their place in 1900. This entry appears to have been unauthorized and to have been made without the knowledge of the section of the Awans just mentioned, and in face of their actual possession of portions of the shamilat, it cannot be considered as of much evidential value.

On the whole, therefore, our conclusion is that the plaintiffs have failed to establish that they are entitled to be declared exclusive owners of the shamilat area in suit as against the Jafzals, the Khilans, the Jaswals and the Jamals, and we accordingly maintain the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Ramji=Mt. Janki Bai (died 1899).

Yedoo=Manjai (re-married 1897).

d. 1895

Mt. Soni (plaintiffs' vendor on 13-1-09).	Pandharinath b. 8-12-95 (posthumous.) d. 10-4-96.
--	--

The field in dispute was admittedly the property of Yedoo. On his death, Pandharinath being then unborn, it devolved on Yedoo's widow Manjai. But in fact Musammatt Janki Bai, with whom Manjai lived, took possession of it, or at least dominated the control of it. On the 29th October 1895, Janki Bai sold the field to the defendants, allegedly for legal necessity, and the defendants have been in possession ever since. Meanwhile, after the sale, on the 8th December 1895, Pandharinath was born, and divested his mother of the title to the field. When he died, on the 10th April 1896, the field reverted to Manjai. But Manjai re-married in 1897, and went away from the family. Under the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act, 1856, by such re-marriage she forfeited her estate in the field. She held the title to that estate, not as the widow of Yedoo, but as the mother of Pandharinath; but the lower Appellate Court is wrong in thinking that, under the enactment, a widow re-marrying forfeits only the estate inherited from her deceased husband. The Statute applies to "all rights and interests which any widow may have * * by inheritance to her husband or to his lineal successors." No doubt it has been held that, after and notwithstanding re marriage, she may inherit future interests in the family of her former husband; e. g., she may succeed as heir to the estate of her son by a first marriage, who has died after her second marriage: Akora Suth v. Boreani (1), Chamar Haru v. Kashi (2), Basappa v. Rayna (3), Lakshmana v. Siva Sasamallayani (4), Sammar v. Musammatt Bhago (5). But that is because the enactment only operates as a forfeiture of existing rights at the date of the marriage. Here Manjai, on the date of her second marriage, held the title to the field by inheritance from Pandharinath, who was a lineal successor of her husband, and, therefore, the Statute deprived her of it on re-marriage and let in Janki Bai.

The doubt whether the enactment applies to widows whose caste customs permit second marriages, created by the Allahabad High Court rulings in Har Saran Das v. Nandi (6), Ranjit v. Radha Rani (7), Khuddo v. Durga Prasad (8), Gajadhar v. Musammatt Kansilla (9), and Mula v. Partab (10), may be taken to be set at rest, at least outside the United Provinces, by the Full Bench decision in Vithu v. Govinda (11), following Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (12). Even the Allahabad Judges, in the latest of the above cases, had some hesitation in accepting the earlier rulings as a sound interpretation of the law, but felt bound, by the existence of a consistent curius curie, to apply the maxim stare decisis. In this Court the point was avoided in Musammatt Rupa v. Mohanlal (13), but the Bombay decision was clearly followed in Sadhu v. Musammatt Patungo (14), which decision was taken in Larman v. Gundaji (15) to represent the view of this Court as to the operation of section 2 of Act XV of 1856.

The present suit was lodged on the 15th May 1909. Therefore, it was filed within 12 years of the death of Musammatt Janki Bai, when the estate of Pandharinath devolved by inheritance on his sister, Soni. The plaintiffs obtained a conveyance from Soni of her right, title and interest in the field on the 13th January 1909, and filed the suit on the 15th May 1909. The first Court gave them a decree for possession. The lower Appellate Court reversed that decree and dismissed the suit. The reason for dismissal is thus stated:—

"The lower Court has held that the possession of defendants has not been adverse against Soni. I think that view of the law is not correct. I think the facts of the case in Babu v. Bhikaji (16) are similar to the facts of this case. In this case Janki Bai remained in possession when the widow of Yedoo and his posthumous son were entitled to it. I think the possession of the defendants has been adverse as against Soni and plaintiffs. Other rulings reported on by the respondent are:—Tika Ram v. Shama Charan (17), Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram (18), Amrita Lal Bagchi v. Jotindra Nath Chowdhury (19). I allow the appeal and reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit."

I am unable to give any intelligible meaning to the passage beginning "Other rulings reported," but it is manifest that the decision rests upon a hurried analogy drawn from the case of Babu v. Bhikaji (16). If the Additional District Judge had read that case more carefully, he would have found that it followed earlier rulings made under Act XIV of 1859, because the prescriptive period had been completed before the Limitation Act of 1871 came into force and rendered all those rulings obsolete by the introduction of the provisions contained in the 142nd Article of its second Schedule—provisions which were repeated in Article 141 of the 1877 Schedule by which the present case is governed. Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram (18) was another case to which Act IX of 1871 did not apply, because the prescriptive period in that case was found by their Lordships to be twelve years from 1859 or at any rate 1861, and, therefore, it was outside the operation of Act IX of 1871, Article 142. The case was otherwise distinguished from such cases as the present in Amrit Dhar v. Bindesri Prasad (20), while the same distinction as I have made, was demonstrated in Venkataramayya v. Venkatalakshamma (21). The Allahabad Court correctly found the law under the Act of 1871 in their Full Bench decision in Ram Kali v. Kedar Nath (22). Curiously enough a Division Bench of the same Court held, in Tika Ram v. Shama Charan (17), that the above Privy Council decision had overruled the Full Bench case, following an expression of opinion to that effect by one of the Judges in Hanuman Prasad Singh v. Bhagauti Prasad (23). This error was corrected in Amrit Dhar v. Bindesri Prasad (20) and again in Jhanman Kunwar v. Tiloki (24). But the learned Judges do not seem to have noticed that the Privy Council were dealing with a case in which the twelve years of adverse possession had probably been completed before the change in the law was introduced. Even if the period was not quite complete, section 6 of Act IX of 1871 would exclude the application of that enactment to prevent or prolong the completion. However that may be, the Privy Council decision in Ranchordas v. Parvatibai (25) makes it clear that, in a case governed by Article 141 of the 1877 Schedule, under no circumstances can time run against a Hindu reversionary heir until the reversion vests by the death of the female holding the intervening estate.

That is enough to dispose of this case. But I think the further contention is sound that Janki Bai is not shown to have claimed more than a limited interest in the estate. It is not proved that she excluded Manjai at all until she sold the field a few months after her husband's death, and she then purported to sell it for legal necessity. The terms of the sale-deed make it clear that both parties dealt with the property as that of a Hindu widow who could sell only for legal necessity. In that case, the only estate which Janki Bai and her transferees, the defendants, could acquire by prescription would be that of a Hindu widow, unless legal necessity were proved: Sheo Lal v. Musammam Sheorajia (26), following my unreported decision in Rampasud v. Dayaram (27)—see page 37. It is found in this case that there was no legal necessity. Therefore the defendants' interest under the sale ended with Janki Bai's death in 1899. Thereafter, their possession became directly adverse to the reversioner. They cannot tack that on to their possession under the deed which became a valid transfer, qua Janki Bai's interest, when the estate devolved upon her on the re-marriage of Manjai in 1897. The present suit is, therefore, clearly within time, and, in face of the finding that no legal necessity for the sale has been proved, Soni's right to succeed, and, therefore, the claim of the plaintiffs who are her transferees, cannot be resisted.

An attempt was made before me to defeat the suit at the last moment on a plea of non-joinder. The learned Counsel for the respondents put in a certified copy of a registered deed of sale purporting to be a reconveyance by the plaintiffs, on the 27th March 1909, of the field in dispute, which they had bought from her on the 13th January 1909. This document is accompanied by an affidavit in explanation of the failure to raise the plea earlier, and it is urged that plaintiffs have now no locus standi in the suit. If Soni were now joined, it is clear that her claim would be time-barred. I decline to allow the plea at this stage. The copy of the deed was obtained by the defendants on the 29th November 1912. The suit was first decided on the 28th February 1911. On the 14th September 1911 it was remanded by the lower Appellate Court, and a fresh decision was made by the first Court on the 24th September 1912. The defendants appealed from that decision on the 30th January 1913. They were then in possession of the copy of the reconveyance now set up. But in their memorandum of first appeal, they did not raise any plea of non-joinder: nor was a word said about it at the hearing. The plea comes much too late now, and must be taken to have been waived. If the reconveyance really took place, the plaintiffs in this case are trustees for Musammam Soni. They have sued as benamidars, and a suit by a benamidar is not, ipso facto, bad. It is difficult to understand why plaintiffs should buy in January 1909, re-sell in March 1909, and then sue under the cancelled assignment in May 1909: but eccentricity of this kind in regard to documents and litigation is a common feature among the inhabitants of Berar. At any rate I decline to go into the matter at this stage of the present case.

The appeal is allowed: the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed, and the decree of the first Court is restored. But as the defendants had reasonable grounds, owing to the neglect of Manjai and Soni, for asserting their rights to defend the suit, I direct that each party do bear his own costs in the first Court. The defendants must, however, pay and bear the costs in the two Appellate Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, cc. 23, 57—Execution—Notice, issue of—Attachment—Default on part of decree-holder—Dismissal of application—Order for execution, whether res judicata.

The dismissal of an execution application under Order XXI, rule 57, Civil Procedure Code, has the effect of vacating a prior order passed under Order XXI, rule 23, ordering execution to proceed.

Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri, 11 C. L. R. 113; 8 I. A. 123; 8 C. 51; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 249 referred to.

Sheoraj Singh v. Kameshar Nath, 24 A. 282; A. W. N. (1902) 63, dissented from.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, in Execution Petition No. 1021 of 1913, in Small Cause Suit No. 396 of 1905, on the file of the Subordinate Judge at Kumbakonam.

FACTS.—This petition arose out of proceedings in execution of a decree, dated 18th September 1905. The first application to execute the decree was made on 8th September 1908. Notice was ordered and served on the judgment-debtor and an order for attachment was made on 3rd October 1908, but as the decree-holder failed to pay the batta for attachment, the petition was dismissed. The next application to execute the decree was made on 18th September 1911. On this also notice to the judgment-debtor was issued and served and attachment was also ordered, but the petition was again dismissed for non-payment of batta for attachment. The decree-holder then assigned his decree on 11th August 1913 and the assignee filed the present petition on 25th August 1913 for the recognition of his assignment, and for the realisation of the decree amount by attachment and sale of the 1st defendant's moveables. The latter contended that the applications of 25th August 1913 and 18th September 1911 were barred by limitation. The plaintiff replied that the order of the 3rd October 1908 gave a fresh starting point and that in any event the matter was res judicata owing to previous orders. The Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam held that the petition was barred. The assignee decree-holder then preferred this civil revision petition.

Mr. R. Kuppaswamy Aiyar, for the Petitioner:—Notwithstanding the dismissal of the execution petition, the prior order under Order XXI, rule 23, that executions do proceed stands and is res judicata. Sheoraj Singh v. Kameshar Nath (1).

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondents:—The execution petition having been dismissed owing to the decree-holder's default, the prior order to execute is also vacated. Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (2) and Lakshmanan Chetti v. Kuttayan Chetti (3). Further, the defendants had no notice of the prior application. They must now be allowed an opportunity to prove the same, as they were prevented from doing so previously owing to the dismissal of the execution petition.

JUDGMENT.—It is argued that even though the petition was dismissed under Order XXI, rule 57, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the decision that the decree shall be executed under Order XXI, rule 23, is res judicata. I cannot accept this argument. In my opinion, the order is vacated by the subsequent dismissal. The language of the Privy Council in Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (2) points to the order being still in force and that is the ratio decidendi in Lakshmanan Chetti v. Kuttayan Chetti (3). If Sheoraj Singh v. Kameshar Nath (1) decides anything different, I cannot follow it. I, therefore, do not decide on Mr. Narasimha Aiyangar's other contention that he must be allowed to show now that he had no notice of the prior application, he not having been able to do so at the time owing to the application having been dismissed.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

Central Provinces Tenancy Act (X of 1859), s. 2 (5)
 —Village tank let for fishing and growing water-nuts, if land let for agricultural purposes.

A village tank over which the landlord gives a right to fish and grow water-nuts is not "land let or occupied for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture" for purposes of Act X of 1859.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 7th February 1914, confirming that of the Munsif, Bhandara, dated the 28th August 1913.

Mr. J. Mitra, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Messrs. G. V. Kukday and V. M. Jakatdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question which need be determined in this appeal is whether a village tank over which the landlord gives a right to fish and grow water-nuts (singhara) is "land let or occupied for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture" within the meaning of that phrase as used in section 2 (5) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1859. This has been exhaustively discussed by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Battoo v. Narain Prasad (1) and his judgment will shortly be published. I concur generally in the view taken by my learned brother, and to the cases decided under Act X of 1859 which he has cited, would add Sham Narain Chowdhry v. Court of Wards (2), where it was held that exercise for more than 12 years of fishing rights over the jalkar not connected with a holding, did not confer occupancy right in the jalkar.

On behalf of the respondents the decision of Pearson and Turner, J.J., in Moolchand v. Chutree (3) is pressed upon me. The judgment in that case, which was apparently not brought to the notice of Stanyon, A. J. C., is so brief that it may well be reproduced here in extenso:—

"From the evidence submitted by the lower Court, it appears that the land in suit produces water-nuts, which do not grow spontaneously, but are the result of sowing or planting. It further appears that the plaintiff's lease was a lease of the land which comprises specific fields bearing distinct numbers in the khusrak, and not of the produce of any portion of the tank. This being so, we are of opinion, on reconsideration, that a right of occupancy could be acquired, as it has been deemed to be acquired by the tenant in the holding, and we, therefore, affirm the decision of the lower Appellate Court, and dismiss the appeal with costs and interest at 6 per cent."

The report contains no detailed statement of the facts, nor does it set out the arguments addressed to the High Court. The earlier decisions of the High Court at Calcutta cited by Stanyon, A. J. C., though not relating to tanks used for growing produce of the soil forming the bed, are authorities for the proposition that the bed of a tank should not be regarded as land for the purposes of Act X of 1859, and it is unlikely that they were overlooked by the Legislature when the Central Provinces Tenancy Act of 1883 was on the anvil.

Inasmuch as the decree of the lower Appellate Court is based on the erroneous view that a tank is land for the purposes of the Tenancy Act, 1898, it is hereby set aside and the case is remanded to that Court for a fresh decision. There will be a refund of the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of second appeal; all other costs will abide the event.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

their claim to the estate of the deceased in exclusion of daughters if the land is not proved to be ancestral qua reversioners, the onus lies very heavily upon them to show that they would exclude the daughters. [p. 295, col. 2.]

The riwaj-i-am, in the absence of any clear statement to the contrary, is considered to apply to ancestral and not self-acquired property. Hence an entry in the riwaj-i-am to the effect that daughters are excluded by collaterals is useless in a case where the property in dispute has not been proved to be ancestral. [p. 295, col. 2; p. 296, col. 1.]

First appeal from the order of the Additional District Judge of Hoshiarpur, dated the 28th November 1911, dismissing the suit.

Messrs. Kirkpatrick and Sundar Das, for the Appellants.

Sheikh Umar Bakhsh, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, the plaintiffs claimed that as reversioners of Khushala Ram, deceased, sole proprietor of Abbeipur, they were entitled to his land after the death of his widow, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, to the exclusion of his daughters.

Defendants denied the locus standi of plaintiffs, saying that they were not the reversioners of Khushala Ram and that the land was not their ancestral property.

The lower Court in an exhaustive judgment held that plaintiffs were no doubt distant collaterals of the deceased proprietor, though the exact degree of relationship alleged by them had not been established, but that the land was not plaintiffs' ancestral property and, therefore, they had no locus standi in the presence of daughters. It, therefore, dismissed the suit and plaintiffs' appeal.

Mr. Kirkpatrick argued the appeal on behalf of the appellants, but we were so little impressed with his arguments that we did not find it necessary to hear Counsel for respondents.

We have no hesitation in holding that plaintiffs, on whom the onus lay, Atar Singh v. Thakar Singh (1), have not proved (1) 6 Ind. Cas. 721; 42 P. R. 1910; 12 C. W. N. 1049; 8 C. L. J. 359; 18 M. L. J. 379; 35 C. 1039; 35 I. A. 206; 128 P. W. R. 1908; 4 M. L. T. 207; 10 Bom. L. R. 790.

that the land in dispute is their ancestral property.

The only evidence of any importance in appellants' favour is an entry in the nikasi papers of Sambat 1904 (A. D. 1847), which shows the following persons as proprietors of small plots of land in the village of Abbeipur:—

	ghs.	ks.
Ganga Ram	...	3 0
Ishar	...	5 6½
Jaxala	...	4 4½
Charta	...	0 7

Ganga Ram was father of Khushala Ram. The other three persons are, according to plaintiffs-appellants, descendants of Kanhya. Even if they were proprietors in 1847, (they subsequently lost their proprietary rights and were recorded as occupancy tenants of the land in their possession) it does not follow that the land was ancestral of themselves and Ganga Ram. As members of the same brotherhood they may very well have been given small portions of the village to cultivate. We can make no assumption on the very slender evidence of this entry as to the land being ancestral qua the plaintiffs.

The land not having been proved to be ancestral qua plaintiffs, the onus lay very heavily upon them to show that they would exclude daughters. Mr. Kirkpatrick points out that the defendants could very easily have proved by instances that daughters succeeded to self-acquired property in the presence of collaterals and that they have not adduced a single instance. It is quite possible that in this village the question of succession of daughters in presence of collaterals may never have come up. No doubt in neighbouring villages there may be instances in point, but the onus was upon the plaintiffs and it was hardly necessary for the defendants to produce instances in support of their contention when none had been adduced on the other side.

The entry in the riwaj-i-am to the effect that daughters are excluded by collaterals, is valueless for the purposes of this case. The riwaj-i-am, in the absence of any clear statement to the contrary, is considered to apply to ancestral and not self-acquired property. No instances are cited in the riwaj-i-am relied upon of cases where daughters have been excluded from non-ancestral property by collaterals.

We must adopt the general rule of custom in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 110.—Value of subject-matter in Court of first instance less than Rs. 10,000—Value of subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council more than Rs. 10,000—Certificate, if can be granted—Involve 'directly or indirectly, some claim or question to, or respecting property of like amount or value', meaning of.

To entitle a person to a certificate for appealing to His Majesty in Council, it is not enough that the decree or final order in the case involves, directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property worth Rs. 10,000 or upwards; the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance must also be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. [p. 297, col. 2; p. 298, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was less than Rs. 10,000 but the value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council exceeded that amount owing to the claim for mesne profits for the period between the institution of the suit and the petition for the certificate:

Held, that the case did not satisfy the provisions of sections 109 and 110, Civil Procedure Code, and that the petitioner was not entitled to a certificate. [p. 297, col. 2; p. 301, col. 2.]

Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh, 29 I. A. 40; 24 A. 174; 4 Bom. L. R. 156; 6 C. W. N. 362, followed.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated therein and in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree of the High Court, in Appeal Suit No. 284 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, in Original Suit No. 93 of 1910,

FACTS.—The plaintiff, alleging that the suit house was purchased in her name with her funds and that the defendant, her husband's brother was allowed to reside in a portion of it since 1895, as he was practising as a Pleader at Madura, sued to recover that portion of the house from the defendant together with mesne profits. The contention of the defendant was that the purchase in plaintiff's name was benami, that it was done under the advice of the plaintiff's husband, who occupied a position of superiority and confidence as his elder brother and that the plaintiff had not the means to buy the house. The Subordinate Judge of Madura dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, the High Court reversed that decision and granted a decree to the plaintiff as prayed for. The defendant thereupon applied for the issue of a certificate that the case was fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and G. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Petitioner:—It is not necessary that the value of the suit in the Court of first instance must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards in the classes of cases falling under paragraph 2 of section 110, Civil Procedure Code. In those cases, it is enough if the decree or final order involves directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards. In this case, though the value of the suit in the Court of first instance was below Rs. 10,000, the value of the appeal to the Privy Council is over that amount as it involves a claim to property over the appealable value. Mesne profits which have accrued due have to be added in arriving at the amount. Vide Dalgleish v. Damodar Narain Chudhry (1), Mohideen Hadjar v. Pitchay (2), Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3).

Mr. R. Kuppuswami Iyer, for the Respondent:—The value of the suit in the Court of first instance being below Rs. 10,000, the petitioner is not entitled to a certificate. The former part of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, ought to be read distributively. The provision that the value in the first Court must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards, was introduced for the first time into the Civil

The construction sought to be placed on the section by the other side will render the first clause of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, nugatory.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—In this case the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was less than Rs. 10,000, but the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council exceeds that sum owing to the claim for mesne profits for the period between the institution of the suit and the petition for a certificate. It is clear that the case does not satisfy the provisions of the first paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, but we are asked to grant the certificate on the ground that, in the circumstances, the decree of the High Court involves "directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value" within the meaning of the second paragraph. If this contention be accepted, a certificate must be granted in any case in which the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to his Majesty in Council is not less than Rs. 10,000, whether or not the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance fell below Rs. 10,000, and this provision becomes wholly nugatory. In a case where the value of the subject-matter was less than Rs. 10,000 in the Court of first instance, but the value of the subject-matter on appeal to the Privy Council exceeded that sum owing to the accrual of interest in the meantime, their Lordships held that the appellants had not brought themselves within the section: Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (4); and I do not think it can make any difference whether the original deficiency in value is subsequently made up by the accrual of interest, or by a claim for mesne profits for the intervening period or by costs. The decision in Dalgleish v. Damodar Narain Chowdhry (1) proceeded on the authority of Mohideen Hadjar v. Pitchay (2), a case under the Ceylon Ordinance No. 1 of 1889, which does not impose any condition as to the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance. This condition was first imposed in India by the Privy Council Appeals Act (VI of 1874). The order of 10th April 1885 had prescribed that the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. The alternative which now forms the second paragraph of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, was introduced in clause 39 of the Letters Patent, which contained a proviso "that the sum or matter at issue is of the amount or value of not less than Rs. 10,000 or that such judgment, decree, or order shall involve, directly or indirectly, some claim, demand or question to or respecting property amounting to or of the value of not less than Rs. 10,000." So far the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance did not in any way effect the right of appeal, but it is clear to my mind that in 1874, the Legislature intended to alter this and by the new provision inserted on the section to impose an additional restriction with reference to the amount or value of the suit when filed. It is of course necessary to read the whole section together and to give effect to every part of it, and when doing so, it becomes necessary, in my opinion, in order to give effect to the new provision in the first paragraph, to put a restrictive construction on the general words of the second paragraph which are reproduced from section 39 of the Letters Patent, and to read them in their present collocation as applying only to cases which involve some claim or question to or respecting property additional to the actual subject-matter in dispute in the appeal and to be taken into account therewith in making up the appealable value. Something might be said for this construction of the alternative provision as it stood in clause 39 of the Letters Patent, and I think that it is imperatively required in the present section 110, Civil Procedure Code, which first appeared as section 5 of the Act of 1874, if the provi-

son in the earlier part of the section is not to be rendered nugatory. Some difficulty is no doubt occasioned by the retention in the second paragraph of the words "involve directly," but I think my learned brother, in his judgment which I have had the advantage of reading, has shown how effect may be given to the word "directly" consistently with this construction; and in any case I think that in the section as it now stands, the words, "involve directly," cannot be read as including cases which involve nothing but the actual subject-matter in dispute in the appeal. Cases which involve nothing else are, in my opinion, governed exclusively by the first paragraph. The petition is dismissed with costs.

SRINIVASA AIVANGAR, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The original suit was to recover possession of a portion of a house with mesne profits from the defendant. Though the plaintiff claims the whole house, she does not sue for the remaining portion as she is in possession of it. It is, however, admitted that the market value of the whole house, together with the amount claimed for mesne profits up to the date of the institution of the suit, is much less than ten thousand rupees. It is stated that the value of the whole house, together with mesne profits as claimed by the plaintiff up to the date of the decree in appeal, would amount to over ten thousand rupees. Two points are taken for the petitioner, first, that the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance should be taken to be above ten thousand rupees, second, that whether the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of the first instance was above ten thousand rupees or not, the final decree of this Court involves a claim to property of over ten thousand rupees in value. As regards the first point, petitioner contends that the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance includes mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit. If this contention is right, mesne profits subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit up to the date of the final determination by the Judicial Committee, or even beyond, till the delivery of possession of the property, or three years after the date of the final decree, whichever event first occurs, would be the subject-matter of the suit, and its value would vary with the length of time during which the suit may be pending in the Courts. This construction renders the enactment of this portion of the clause perfectly useless; for there can be no case in which the matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council would be of the appealable value in which the subject-matter of the suit would not at least be of the same value. Prior to Act VI of 1874, it was well settled that interest on money claims and mesne profits of immoveable property subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit, actually awarded by the decree appealed against, may be added in computing the value of the matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council, but not interest accruing subsequent to the decree, and if that amount was Rs. 10,000 or over, a party was entitled to appeal; though the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was less. Gooroo-shah Khoond v. Juggutchunder (5), Durga Dass Choudry v. Ramananth Choudry (6), Gooroo Dass Roy v. Gholam Mozlah (7); see also Bank of New South Wales v. Owston (8). Act VI of 1874 for the first time enacted that the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance should also be ten thousand rupees or upwards and imposed an additional restriction on the right of appeal. I think except in British India and Straits Settlements, no such restriction is to be found in the laws of the other Colonies or British possessions. In Motichand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (4), the Judicial Committee expressly decided that when the amount claimed in the suit was less than ten thousand rupees, no appeal lay to His Majesty in Council, though the amount of the matter in dispute in appeal by the addition of interest subsequent to the institution of the suit came to ten thousand rupees or upwards. This decision is conclusive on the question, and I am unable to draw any distinction between interest and mesne profits in this respect. The petitioner relied on Dalyleish v.

Damodar Narain Chowdhry (1) and Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3) in support of his contention. In the first of the above cases, it seems to have been assumed that future mesne profits formed part of the subject-matter of the suit, and reliance was placed on the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Mohideen Hadjar v. Pitchay (2). That was a case from Ceylon and the attention of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court was apparently not drawn to the provisions of the Ceylon Ordinance, which contains no clause similar to the first portion of clause 1 of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Though the case of Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (4) was cited in the argument, there is no reference to it in the judgment. In the second case, it is said that "as the Court could provide in the decree for the payment of mesne profits in respect of the property from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession or until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree with interest such mesne profits and interest can, I think, be legitimately regarded as part of the subject-matter of the suit." So also can the Court award interest from the date of the institution of the suit up to the date of payment or realization. There is no reference in the judgment to the case of Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (4). In the case of future mesne profits, the cause of action, it must be remembered, does not accrue even at the date of the institution of the suit. With the greatest respect to the learned Judges, I am unable to follow these decisions. I, therefore, disallow the first contention.

As to the second point, petitioner contends that inasmuch as the decree of this Court directs him to surrender possession of the house and pay mesne profits, the decree necessarily involved a claim to property of over the appealable value. This construction renders the whole of the first clause nugatory. It must be remembered that provisions similar to these are to be found in the laws of a large majority of the Colonies (See the table in Burge's Colonial Laws, Volume I, page 362, et seq.) and it is impossible to construe the second clause of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure so as to render the first perfectly useless. If the second clause stood by itself (See Wheeler's Privy Council Practice, page 694) it would be legitimate to construe it in the manner suggested, as the word "involves" is sufficiently wide to cover direct adjudications in respect of the subject-matter in dispute. In this case, we have to take both the clauses together so as to give a meaning to both. In my judgment, the first clause applies to cases where the decree awards a particular sum, or property of a particular value, or refuses that relief, (i. e.), to cases where the object-matter in dispute is of a particular value. In fact, the words "objects in dispute" are used in the provisions relating to appeals from Guernsey. If the operation of the decision is confined only to the particular object-matter, clause 2 does not apply, and unless the case satisfies the conditions in clause 1, there is no right of appeal. If the decision beyond awarding relief in respect of the particular object-matter of the suit affects right in other properties, clause 2 would apply; also if the matter in dispute is one which is incapable of valuation as in the case of easements, clause 2 may apply. A few illustrations from the decided cases would make the matter plain. In Sree Mutty Rance Sumanoyee v. Maharajah Sattreschander Roy (9), the plaintiff sued to establish his right to enhance the rent of a holding in the possession of the defendant, which the defendant claimed to hold at a fixed rent of Rs. 65. The plaintiff obtained a decree establishing his right to enhance the rent to Rs. 800 or thereabouts. The question was raised whether the value of the subject-matter in appeal to the Privy Council was the capitalised value of this Rs. 800, which would be the amount by which the value of the defendant's estate would be diminished. Their Lordships found it difficult to bring the case within the words of the Order in Council of April 10, 1838, but gave special leave to appeal on the ground that the decision involved a claim to property of more than ten thousand rupees in value. I may draw attention to the fact that this decision was given in the year 1860 and the present second clause was introduced into the Letters Patent in the year 1862.

SUBRAMANIA AIYAR & SELLAMMAL.

In Amar Chandra Khyala v. Shashi Bhushan Roy (10), the plaintiff, a tenant in-common, sued for a mandatory injunction directing the defendant, another tenant-in-common, to demolish buildings erected by him on a plot of common land. The subject-matter of the suit was for purposes of Court fees valued at Rs. 1,500. The plaintiff obtained a decree in the High Court, the result of which was to oblige the defendant to remove buildings worth more than ten thousand rupees. Leave to appeal to the Privy Council was applied for and granted. In a similar case in Madras, Sreemuth Devasigamani Pandarasunadhi v. Palaniappa Chettiar (11), the plaintiff obtained in the High Court a decree for possession of a piece of land worth at the most Rs. 2,000; the defendant had built on the land and the buildings were valued at over Rs. 20,000, and he had to remove them. Leave to appeal to the Privy Council was applied for by the defendant and granted.

In Mutsaers v. Jaguera Yettapu Naiker v. Venkataswara Yettia (12), a decree was passed by the Civil Court of Tinnevely in appeal, awarding Rs. 2,500 a year for maintenance, that being the highest sum which the first Court had jurisdiction to give and this decree was confirmed by the High Court. An application for special leave was made to Her Majesty in Council. In discussing the question whether the application should not have been made to the High Court first, their Lordships came to the conclusion that it could not have been made there on the ground that the matter in dispute was below Rs. 10,000. It must, however, be noted that the facts of that case were peculiar.

In Sauvageon v. Gauthier (13), A, who had obtained an assignment of certain choses in action from B, sued one of the debtors, O, to recover the debt due to him. The assignor had become an insolvent and his assignee in bankruptcy intervened in the suit and claimed the sum as against A, the private assignee, contending that the assignment was void as against him. His contention was disallowed and he applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The Privy Council declined to give leave; but they said that if he had instituted a suit against the private assignee for a declaration that that assignment was bad, the subject-matter of the suit would have been over the appealable value, but inasmuch as his claim was limited to only one of the debts, he was not entitled to leave; they declined to grant special leave on the ground that that decision need not necessarily affect the title to the other debts.

In Ajuas Koor v. Musammat Lateefa (14), where the suit was to establish the plaintiff's rights to take water from a channel to irrigate his land, Markby, J., held that the value of the subject-matter in dispute was the amount by which the value of the land would be diminished if the right to take the water was not granted. The learned Judge drew a distinction "between the value of the relief" and "the value of the subject-matter."

In Macfarlane v. Leclaire (15), the plaintiff sued for a sum of money, being the debt due to him from X. He applied for attachment before judgment and attached certain properties in the hands of Y, on the ground that Y was holding those properties on behalf of X. Y claimed the properties as his own under a conveyance from one P, who himself obtained the properties from X. Plaintiff replied that the conveyance from X to P and from P to Y were fraudulent as against the creditors of X. The plaintiff succeeded. The amount of debt due to him for which he obtained a decree was less than the appealable value, but as the adjudication was also that the purchase by Y was not valid as against the creditors of X, the decision involved a question of title to the property of over the appealable value. The Privy Council, in the absence of a clause like the second clause, were obliged to bring it within the words "matters in dispute in appeal to the Privy Council."

The above cases, except the cases reported as Amar Chandra Kundu v. Shoshi Bhushan Roy (10) and Sreemuth Devosigkamani Pandarasannadhi v. Palaniappa Chettiar (11), were decided when the Order in Council, dated 10th April 1838 or provisions similar thereto were in force. They afford instances of cases in which the subject-matter of the suit was incapable of a real or accurate valuation, or where the value of the subject-matter of the suit was below the appealable value, but the decision directly involved a claim or question respecting property of over ten thousand rupees in value. Even if the words "subject-matter of the suit" or "matter in dispute in appeal" do not mean the object-matter, but connote the jural relationship between the parties [see Ramaswami Aiyar v. Vythinatha Aiyar (16), also Kaveri Ammal v. Sastri Ramier (17)], the present case would clearly come within the first clause and the second clause would have no application whatsoever. In some cases, it may be difficult to determine under which clause a particular case falls [See Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Rup Kuar (18) and Bhagwat Sahai v. Pashupati Nath Bose (19)]; but I do not think that this would in any way affect the decision, as I think that in all cases in which the final decision involves a claim or question to property of a particular value, the decision of the first Court also would necessarily involve a claim or question in respect of property of the same value.

The following cases are instances in which the decision involves indirectly a claim or question to or in respect of property of the appealable value. Baboo Gopal Lall Thakoor v. Teluk Chunder Rai (20); Ko Khine v. Snadden (21); Joogulkishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore (22). In the matter of the petition of Khawaja Muhammad Yusuf (23); Sri Kishan Lal v. Kashmira (24). I am supported in the construction which I have adopted by the decision in De Silva v. De Silva (25) and a case from the Colonies, Gardiner v. Miculloch (26), cited in Wheeler's Privy Council Practice, 694. In Dalglish v. Damodar Narain Chowdhry (1), already cited, a different view was taken, but no reasons were given for the conclusion. I am unable to follow it. On the other hand in Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad Singh (4) already referred to, the Judicial Committee proceed on the assumption that the second clause was inapplicable to cases of this sort. I would, therefore, disallow this contention also.

Certificate refused.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Government Servants' Conduct Rules, rule 14—Debt contracted by father for trading purposes, whether lawful—Hindu Law—Liability of sons for father's debt.

The plaintiff sued to enforce a mortgage effected in his favour by defendant No. 1. The mortgage security consisted of a piece of land, the property of the 1st defendant, and of land which was the property of the family of the 5th defendant and his sons, which was ostensibly burdened with a mortgage-debt created by the 5th defendant in respect of certain payments made or liability incurred by the 1st defendant at the 5th defendant's request in respect of dealings in a trade in fish instituted by the 5th defendant and carried on largely under the management of the 1st defendant. The 5th defendant's sons contended inter alia that they were not liable to pay the debts of their father contracted for illegal and immoral purposes in contravention of Government Servants' Conduct Rule No. 14.

Held, (1) that the rule was not based upon any statutory prohibition, but was merely a rule of conduct; [p. 303, col. 1.]

(2) that the debts contracted by the father could not be said to be attributable either to his failings, follies or caprices and a disregard of the Government injunctions did not taint his trade dealings with immorality or impropriety as between himself and those with whom he traded; [p. 303, col. 2.]

(3) that the sons were, therefore, liable to pay their father's debts. [p. 303, col. 2.]

RAMKRISHNA TRIMEAK V. NAKAYAN SHIVRAO ARAS.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Kanara, in Appeal No. 19 of 1913, modifying the decree passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge at Karwar, in Civil Suit No. 192 of 1908.

Messrs. G. S. Rao and Y. N. Nadkarni, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues to enforce a mortgage effected in his favour by the 1st defendant. The mortgage security consisted of a piece of land, the property of the 1st defendant, and of land which was the property of the family of the 5th defendant and his sons, the present appellants, which was ostensibly burdened with a mortgage-debt, created by the 5th defendant in respect of certain payments made or liabilities incurred by the 1st defendant at the 5th defendant's request in respect of dealings in a trade in fish instituted by the 5th defendant and carried on largely under the management of the 1st defendant.

The present appellants pleaded that they were not liable for their father's debt; that they did not admit the bona fides of the mortgage bonds of their father; that they were passed for debts incurred for immoral and illegal purposes; that their father was given to profligate habits and was fond of gambling in speculative transactions recklessly; that they derived no benefit from the transactions; and that they were not liable under the Hindu Law to pay off debts incurred by their father so imprudently.

When the case came to trial, issues were raised upon the pleadings. The 2nd issue was whether defendant No. 5 contracted the above debt for illegal or immoral purposes as alleged by defendants Nos. 12 to 14. But during the hearing a further issue was raised in these terms:—Is the mortgage transaction of defendant No. 5 with defendant No. 1 null and void by reason of its having been entered into in violation of the Government Servants' Conduct Rules as prescribed by Government? The point then made was that having been entered into in contravention of Government Servants'

Conduct Rules, the transactions which resulted in the mortgage debt were null and void under section 23 of the Contract Act, as being agreements forbidden by law or opposed to public policy. The learned Judge held that the transactions were not void under section 23, but he decided the 2nd issue in favour of the present appellants. It was suggested to him that the whole scheme of business was aryavahar, and, therefore, such as could not give rise to a liability in the sons to pay their father's debts, and upon the authority of Durbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (1) he decided that the debts in suit came under that class of debts which it is not the bounden duty of the sons to pay as being illegal in the sense in which the Hindu Law texts so consider them. Accordingly a decree was passed for the amount claimed, and on default, for sale of the father's interest alone in the family properties, and for sale of the property belonging to the first defendant.

The 1st defendant who was made personally liable under the decree for any deficiency that might arise on the sale appealed to the District Judge, and again the same arguments were put forward on behalf of the present appellants. The Government Servants' Conduct Rules were only made use of for the purpose of contending that the contract was void as being contrary to public policy under section 23. The learned Judge held that defendants Nos. 12 to 14, the present appellants, failed to prove that their father's conduct was aryavahar, and accordingly modified the decree so as to make the interest of defendants Nos. 12 to 14 in the mortgaged property liable as well as the interest of defendant No. 5.

From that decree defendants Nos. 12 to 14 have appealed, joining as respondent only defendant No. 1, although they seek to reduce the mortgage security available for payment of the plaintiff's debt according to the decree of the District Court. It is clear, we think, that they cannot get a decree in the absence of the plaintiff. But it is desirable that we should express our opinion upon the points which have been thoroughly argued by the Pleaders on both sides. Section 23 of the Contract Act is no longer appealed to. The contention that the transactions were void as being contrary to public policy is abandoned, but the Government Servants' Conduct Rules are now used in aid of the argument that the father's conduct was aryavahar. The only authority which can be relied upon in support of that contention is the case of Durbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (1). That case has not met with acceptance in any of the other High Courts in India; see Chakouri Makton v. Ganga Proshad (2); Venugopal Naidu v. Ramanadhan Chetty (3) and Sumer Singh v. Liladhar (4). But assuming for the purpose of argument that it was correctly decided, it only decides this, that a civil penalty imposed by way of damages upon the father for a civil wrong committed by him does not give rise to any moral obligation on the son to discharge that liability.

Now the Government Servants' Conduct Rule which is referred to in this case is as follows:—

"A Government servant may not, without the previous sanction of the Local Government, engage in any trade or undertake any employment, other than his public duties.

A Government servant may undertake occasional work of a literary or artistic character, provided that his public duties do not suffer thereby; but the Government may, in its discretion, at any time forbid him to undertake or require him to abandon any employment which in its opinion is undesirable."

That is a rule which is not based upon any statutory prohibition, but is, as it is expressed to be, merely a rule of conduct. The 5th defendant who is alleged to have violated that rule was a Post Master at Akola on a small salary, and in order to supplement his income he engaged in a fish trade, a very common occupation on the west coast of India. The work in connection with the trade, as appears from the evidence, was done almost entirely by the 1st defendant.

The question then is, whether applying the test laid down in Durbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (1) as the highest point at which the appellants' case can be put, such conduct on the part of the 5th defendant could be treated as conduct which the father "as a decent and respectable man" ought not to have engaged in; and whether the debts of the fish trade were debts "attributable to his failings, follies or caprices". We have no doubt that such debts cannot be said to be attributable either to his failings, follies or caprices, nor do we think that it can be said that his conduct in embarking in such fish trade is conduct of which no decent and respectable man would be guilty. As was put by Mr. Nilkanth on behalf of the 1st defendant, if the restriction or the prohibition against embarking in trade occurred in a contract with a large employer of labour other than Government in which the clause was that the servant might not engage in a trade, it cannot be contended that a disregard of such an injunction would taint his trade dealings with immorality or impropriety as between himself and those with whom he traded.

We, therefore, affirm the decree and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT—In this case the defendants have, since the death of Musammam Manglawat, both out of Court and in this suit, asserted a title adverse to her daughter, Musammam Bisahin. Out of Court they successfully asserted the adverse title by getting the Settlement parcha issued in their name. They, therefore, cannot be allowed to succeed on an alternative and false plea that they have been holding for her, when by their own pleas and conduct they have been holding against her. That until her marriage she lived with them, does, not affect the fact that they have in fact been holding adversely to her. They have no title and are pure trespassers, since the transfer, which as another alternative they pleaded, has not been proved. The case they are really now setting up is that they are her agents, though throughout they have acted against her and not for her. It is argued that the landlord cannot eject even a pure trespasser, unless he proves that the tenant has abandoned the holding or that the tenancy has otherwise come to an end. Reliance is placed on the remarks in Thamman Singh v. Manjoo (1), but that as well as the case of Kabil Sardar v. Chunder Nath Nag Chowdhry (2) therein quoted, and all the cases in which similar remarks have been made, was the case of a transfer by the tenant. Not a single case has been shown me where a pure trespasser, not a transferee, authorized or unauthorized, from the tenant, has been allowed to set up against the landlord the rights of the real tenant. Even if such a plea could be taken, the defendants have themselves in this case asserted and proved as between themselves and the landlord the abandonment of the holding by the tenant, by proving the issue of a Settlement parcha in their own name. The real tenant is not a party to this suit and may be left to look after her own interests. The defendants, having succeeded in proving as against the landlord the abandonment by the tenant, cannot be allowed to succeed on the mere supposition that they represent a tenant whose rights are still subsisting. The decrees of the lower Courts will be set aside and the plaintiff will be granted a decree for possession as prayed for, with costs in all Courts.

Decree set aside.

Tender—Interest—Bond payable by instalments—Tender of payment of overdue instalments without interest, whether proper.

Where the money due on a bond was payable by instalments, one of the conditions being that if three instalments remained in arrears, the whole money would become payable at once and where after three instalments had fallen due, the debtor tendered payment of the principal money of those instalments without the addition of the interest:

Held, that there was not a proper tender and the plaintiff was entitled to recover the interest on the overdue instalments.

Petitions, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Ramnad, in Small Cause Suits Nos. 77 and 73 of 1913.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Court is obviously in error in thinking that the tender made was a proper tender. Admittedly the tender was made after three instalments had fallen due and the amount that was tendered was only the principalsums of the three instalments without the addition of the interest as it should have been. The plaintiffs were entitled to interest on the 31st to 33rd instalments. Owing to the non-payment and non-tender of those instalments, the whole money had become due; and the subsequent instalments, even if they were tendered on the dates fixed in the bond, were not properly tendered. The plaintiffs are entitled to a decree as asked for. I modify the decrees of the lower Court and give a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the sum sued for in both the suits. The petitioners are entitled to their costs throughout.

in Original Suit No. 31 of 1909.

FACTS.—The defendant obtained an ex parte money decree for rent against the undivided brother's sons of the present plaintiff. In execution of that decree, he brought the suit properties to sale, purchased them himself and got delivery. In the meanwhile, the guardian of the defendants in that suit put in a petition for setting aside the ex parte decree, but before the order was actually passed setting aside the decree, the sale had taken place. No subsequent proceedings were taken to set aside the sale. In a family partition, however, which took place between the present plaintiff and the defendants in that suit subsequent to the said sale, the suit properties fell to the share of the present plaintiff and he, thereupon, filed the present suit for possession of the said properties. The 1st defendant, (the decree-holder purchaser and the real contesting defendant) contended that the suit was not maintainable as the sale had not been set aside. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, but the lower Appellate Court, relying on Set Umedmal v. Srinath Ray (1), reversed that decision and decreed the suit. The 1st defendant appealed to the High Court.

(1) 27 C. 810; 4 C. W. N. 692.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for Mr. N. S. Narasimhachariar, for the Appellant:—The decree of the lower Appellate Court cannot be supported. Though the ex parte decree is set aside, the sale is not affected thereby. It remains valid unless and until it is actually set aside. It is only voidable and not void. Vide Paresh Nath Mallik v. Hari Charan Dey (2).

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that when a decree-holder purchases property in execution of an ex parte decree which is set aside, the sale becomes ipso facto void. Set Umedmal v. Srinath Ray (1). The decree-holder was the party having the conduct of the suit, and it is difficult to see what equities can arise in his favour in cases where he obtains an ex parte decree which is set aside on the ground that the defendants were not served. Cases where strangers have purchased in execution are distinguishable, as also where the purchaser is a defendant. It is unnecessary to consider whether in cases of purchase by defendant, the sale is voidable or absolutely void. In the view we take, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right. We dismiss this second appeal with costs.

Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

MAHADEV RAGHUNATH P. RAMA TUKARAM.

s. 21, scope of.—Immunity of agriculturists' house from sale, extent of.

The true construction of section 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is, first, a general provision that immoveable property belonging to an agriculturist shall be immune from sale, and secondly, a proviso directing that this immunity is subject to exception where the two following conditions are both satisfied, that is to say, (a) where the decree or order in question relates to the re-payment of a debt, and (b) where the agriculturist's property has been specifically mortgaged for the re-payment of that debt. The limiting words in the section referring to a debt occur only in the proviso and cannot be imported into the main rule so as to restrict its express generality. [p. 306, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Sholapur, in Appeal No. 32 of 1913, confirming the order passed by the first Class Subordinate Judge at Sholapur, in Darkhast No. 822 of 1912.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. D. Bhile, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant before us was the original plaintiff, who in 1901 brought a suit in ejectment against the defendants. It was found, however, that the plaintiff was a purchaser from a mere mortgagee, and the Court consequently gave the defendants a decree for redemption. The sum to be re-paid was Rs. 960, of which Rs. 550 were to be paid on 25th March 1909. The balance was payable by yearly instalments of Rs. 100. The defendants paid in all a sum of Rs. 660. In the meanwhile, however, they had lodged an appeal, and the lower Appellate Court reversed and remanded the original Court's decree. Therefore, on the 3rd August 1912 the defendants applied under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code asking for restitution in respect of the payments which they had made, and for interest at twelve per cent. There was an added prayer that in the event of the plaintiff failing to pay, his house should be attached and sold.

The lower Courts have ordered the sale of the plaintiff's house.

The plaintiff complains that since he is an agriculturist, his house is immune from sale under section 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. If that contention is justified, then it would follow that the plaintiff must have an opportunity of proving that he is an agriculturist, such opportunity not yet having been afforded to him.

The question, therefore, is whether assuming that the plaintiff is an agriculturist, his house is not liable to sale under section 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. That section, in so far as it is now material, runs as follows:—"Immoveable property belonging to an agriculturist shall not be attached or sold in execution of any decree or order unless it has been specifically mortgaged for the re-payment of the debt to which such decree or order relates." The learned District Judge reads this section as pre-supposing the existence of a contractual debt in all cases, and he, therefore, decides that, since no such debt was in existence here, the section is inapplicable. The phraseology of the section does perhaps lend some colour to the District Judge's view, but it appears to us that the true reading of the section is that for which the plaintiff contends. The learned Judge's construction is only to be arrived at if we read into the main general clause the restrictive words implying the existence of a debt, and those restrictive words do not occur in the main general clause; but occur only in the limiting proviso. We cannot, therefore, but think that the true construction of the section is, first, a general provision that immoveable property belonging to an agriculturist shall always be immune from sale, and, secondly, a proviso directing that this immunity is subject to exception where the two following conditions are both satisfied, that is to say, (a) where the decree or order in question relates to the re-payment of a debt, and (b) where the agriculturist's property has been specifically mortgaged for the re-payment of that debt. The provision would have been clearer if it had been expressed at greater length, but it seems that the draftsman preferred terseness and concision. Nevertheless the limiting words referring to a debt occur only in the proviso and cannot, we think, be imported into the main rule so as to restrict its express generality. This view seems to derive support both from the general character of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act itself and from the wideness of the preceding sections 20 and 21.

We, therefore, think that the lower Court's decree must be reversed and the case must be remanded in order that the plaintiff may

I am asked to treat this as a petition to revise the decision in the suit itself though it is a petition to revise the order, refusing to grant a review. It was, however, admitted that there is pending in this Court a separate petition already filed to revise the decision in the suit.

r. 3—Decision passed 'forthwith,' whether one on merits.

A decision passed 'forthwith' under Order XVII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, is a decision passed on the merits on the materials then before the Court.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Ongole, dated the 8th May 1914, in Interlocutory Petition No. 693 of 1914, in Original Suit No. 584 of 1913.

FACTS.—The District Munsif of Ongole, purporting to act under Order XVII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, "forthwith decided" a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. He also dismissed a petition praying for a review of the judgment. Against the order refusing to grant the review the present civil revision petition was filed in the High Court.

Mr P. Chenchiah for Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Petitioner, contended that a review ought to have been granted as there was no decision on the merits.

JUDGMENT.—A decision passed "forthwith" under order XVII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code is a decision passed on the merits on the materials then before the Court and if it is a decision in a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, a review of such a decision is barred by section 9 itself.

Landlord and tenant—Abadi land—Central Provinces—Wajib-ul-arz—Tenant or village resident, position of—Licensee—Tenant of house—Landlord, right of—Transferee, position of—Site ceasing to be used as dwelling house—Ejectment

In the Central Provinces the whole of the abadi site belongs to the landlord, and, prima facie, every tenant or village resident dwelling thereon and growing crops in the bari attached to his house is a licensee, protected in his occupation by the terms of the wajib-ul-arz. [p. 308, col. 2.]

Where the house in the occupation of one tenant passes by sale to another person, the landlord may claim that, the license to occupy the site being non-transferable, the vendee shall vacate, taking away the house materials, but where the vendee is also a tenant or a regular resident of the village, the landlord may allow the transfer of occupation expressly or impliedly by raising no objection. [p. 308 col. 2.]

A transferee of a house standing on an abadi site whose occupancy of the site is not objected to by the landlord, must be presumed to have been permitted to occupy it on the same terms as his transferor, namely, as the licensee of the landlord, subject to the village wajib-ul-arz. [p. 309, col. 2.]

Where such an occupant ceases to use such site for the purposes of a dwelling house, he loses the protection of the wajib-ul-arz and becomes a bare licensee liable to ejectment at the will of the landlord, unless he expressly sets up and earns by lapse of time, a prescriptive title to occupy the land, [p. 309, col. 2.]

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT. This appeal and second Appeal No. 666 of 1914 arise out of suits by the same malguzar for different abadi sites in the same village against different defendants. The plaintiffs' case is that the defendants in each case, having purchased the house belonging to a tenant who had given up his holding, gradually allowed the building to fall into ruin and have now diverted the site into a plot for the cultivation of tobacco and maize. The plaintiffs are non-resident landlords and they assert that they only became aware of this diversion of the site in 1911. They sue to eject the defendants. The Courts below have concurred in dismissing both suits, and they have done so on the following grounds:—

(1) that in each case the tenant, who occupied the site with his dwelling house, sold the house more than 12 years before the suit;

(2) that under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz such sale conveyed to the purchasers only a right to carry away the materials of the house and gave them no right to occupy the site;

(3) that the sale gave the landlords a right of re-entry on the site;

(4) that the landlords did not in fact re-enter, and the purchasers continued to occupy the site;

(5) that this occupation by the purchaser was adverse to the landlords, whose title in the site or at any rate whose right to re-enter the same, has been extinguished by prescription.

The plaintiffs have, therefore appealed to this Court, and I have no doubt whatever that the appeals are well laid. This judgment will govern the disposal of both of them. Such decisions afford proof of the wisdom of the Legislature in enacting that suits between landlords and tenants as such shall be tried by officers trained in Revenue Law. I do not think that any Revenue Officer, familiar with the circumstances of village life and the principles underlying the revenue system in the Central Provinces, would have delivered a judgment so inconsistent with those circumstances and so foreign to that system as has been given in each of these two cases upon a misapplication of a rule of Civil Law.

In the first place, it has not been ascertained whether or not the defendants are agricultural tenants possessed of holdings in the village. It is not known whether they purchased the dwellings of the former tenants simultaneously with a purchase of their holdings. The whole of the abadi site belongs to the landlord, and prima facie every tenant or village resident dwelling thereon and growing crops in the bari attached to his house is a licensee, protected in his occupation by the terms of the wajib-ul-arz. Where the house in the occupation of one tenant passes by sale to another person, the landlord may claim that, the license to occupy the site being non-transferable, the vendee shall vacate, taking away the house materials. But where the vendee is also a tenant or a regular resident of the village, the landlord may allow the transfer of occupation expressly or impliedly by raising no objection. That is a course which landlords constantly take: but it would undermine the whole scheme of village life to hold that in the absence of any express agreement, the transferee of the license becomes an adverse holder, who will extinguish the landlord's title in 12 years if allowed to hold on unquestioned. That is a preposterous proposition. It is neither Revenue Law nor Civil Law. It is a misapprehension of the law of prescription. When A buys a house and site from B, he takes only what B has to transfer, and no more. If he claims to earn a higher right by prescription, he must make an overt assertion of that right to the knowledge of the person against whom prescription is to operate. A tenant in a Central Provinces village is ordinarily the owner of the house in which he lives and a licensee of the site on which the house is built. Every such site is only partly built over, while the remainder of the plot is used for certain subsidiary purposes customary as a part of the village life. Some land in front of and sometimes also on one or both sides of the dwelling house, is used as a yard (angan) and a plot at the back, called a bari, is used as a kitchen garden or for growing small crops of certain kinds, among which tobacco and maize are very common. All this occupation is under licenses protected by the wajib-ul-arz. When, therefore, a tenant sells his house and bari, the landlord may object to the transfer of the license to occupy. But he is not bound to do so, and in a large majority of cases, especially where the transferee is himself one of the villagers, he allows the transfer to stand. In such a case, the vendee gets all that the vendor had, namely, a dwelling house coupled with a license to occupy the site on which it stands, according to village custom. Unless he expressly sets up an adverse title, e. g., by claiming to be the owner of the land, he continues to occupy with the permission of the landlord. Even when the house tumbles down he may, if the landlord does not object, continue to grow the usual crops on the bari. By doing so, he does not publish any possession adverse to the landlord. There is this difference only, that while he uses the site for its primary purpose, namely, that of dwelling in a house standing thereon, the wajib-ul-arz will protect him from disturbance: when the house disappears and its appurtenant bari cultivation alone remains, the license to occupy becomes terminable at the will of the landlord. It may happen that a dwelling house may tumble down owing to heavy rain or an earthquake or the like, and it may take some years to re-build owing to lack of funds or other cause. The license to occupy would be preserved in such a case and the tenant would cultivate his bari. A reasonable landlord will not seek re-entry merely because for the time being a house has become unfit for habitation. It is only where, as in the cases now before me, the conduct of the occupant indicates with certainty a desire to permanently transform the building site and compound into an agricultural field that the landlord is justified in putting an end to his license. If the judgments of the Courts below were to prevail, we should soon have the abadi of every village dotted about with petty proprietors or rent-free tenants in perpetuity, and the whole system of settlement and revenue now in vogue, would be dislocated by the vagaries of the Civil Courts. If that was a result which flowed out of the law as it stands, it could not be avoided: but it is not. There is a good deal of confusion and technicality in the application of the lex prescriptionis by our subordinate Courts, and the cases now before me are an example. But the Courts below have overlooked the elementary rules that, in the absence of anything to the contrary, a vendee succeeds to the right, title and interest of his vendor, and that where he succeeds to a permissive occupation, he must openly assert an adverse title if he wishes to earn it by prescription.

As a general rule then, the transferee of a house standing on an abadi site whose occupancy of the site is not objected to by the landlord, must be presumed to have been permitted to occupy it on the same terms as his transferor, namely, as the licensee of the landlord subject to the village wajib-ul-arz. Where such an occupant ceases to use such site for the purposes of a dwelling house, he loses the protection of the wajib-ul-arz and becomes a bare licensee liable to ejectment at the will of the landlord, unless he expressly sets up and earns by lapse of time a prescriptive title to occupy the land. Whether by such prescription he would become a proprietor or a tenant would depend on the circumstances of the case. It is not a question which arises here.

The above remarks apply only to land strictly included in the abadi area of the village. They have no application to fields on the outskirts of the village habitations, which may temporarily have been used as building sites and have subsequently been cleared and again brought under cultivation. In such a case a transferee of a dwelling house and premises, if he was allowed to pull down the buildings and cultivate the field for a year or two without objection by the landlord, might claim to be an ordinary tenant. But no such case has been pleaded here. Tenancies cannot be allowed to grow up amid village habitations. The defendants have set up prescriptive titles to purely abadi sites, and no such titles have been established. Both appeals must be allowed and the plaintiffs' claims decreed. But as the plaintiffs have displayed considerable laches in both cases and given the defendants some reason to think that they are entitled to continue occupancy of the sites, I will not allow them their costs.

For the above reasons, this appeal is allowed. The decrees of the Courts below are reversed, and the plaintiffs will be given a decree requiring the defendants to vacate the plaintiff land as soon as any crop or crops now standing thereon sown by the defendants has or have been reaped. Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Person holding vakalatnamah, appearance by—Privilege denied—Suit to declare right, maintainability of.*

Under section 24 of the Madras Village Courts Act, any person holding a vakalatnamah from a party may appear and plead in a Village Court; and there is no provision in the Act for debarring any one from this privilege.

Where this privilege is denied by an illegal order passed by an officer, a right of action to have that right declared exists in common law, if not under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada, in Appeal Suit No. 191 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Cocanada, in Original Suit No. 239 of 1913.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Row, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—We are not satisfied that the suit is covered by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, but it does not follow that it is not maintainable. [Vide Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1) and Ramakrishna Pattar v. Narayana Pattar (2).] We can see no reason for holding that the present suit does not lie.

The order in question is passed by the Deputy Collector in charge of the Cocanada Sub-Division, and debars plaintiff from practising in any of the village Courts of that Division. Under section 24 of the Madras Village Courts Act, any person holding a vakalatnamah from a party may appear and plead in a Village Court; and there is no provision in the Act for debarring any one from this privilege.

Mr. K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, who appears for the Government Pleader, is unable to support the legality of the order. Whatever general powers of supervision can be inferred from the power of appointment, suspension and removal of Village Munsifs conferred by sections 7 and 8 of the Madras Village Courts Act, cannot be held to extend to the passing of an order of this description. It is, no doubt, desirable that bad characters should be prevented from practising in Village Courts and the Act may need amendment; but as it stands, the order is undoubtedly illegal, and in our opinion the District Munsif exercised a correct discretion in granting the declaration sued for.

We set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif with costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

KRISHNAJI SAKHARAM PRABHU—

DEFENDANT NO. 2—RESPONDENT.

Execution—Decree for partition specifying several shares—One party getting more than his due share—Re-adjustment of partition in order to make it accord with terms of decree, whether allowed.

A partition-decree was passed in 1888 specifying the shares to be allotted to all the sharers and the terms on which such allotment was to take place. In 1894 defendant No. 8 applied for his share and got it, so did most of the other sharers. In 1900 defendants Nos. 10-19 applied for separate possession of their share. It was then found that the lands remaining for their share were far less than they should have got and that the plots below and adjoining their houses had been allotted to the share of other sharers. They then applied to the Collector to re-open the partition, who declined to do this but proposed that the surveyor should at the applicants' expense see if they could be compensated out of other lands. The applicants wanted time to pay the expenses and the Collector reported to the Court that the applicants refused to take possession of their share.

Held, that inasmuch as the Collector's partition had not been made in accordance with the directions of the decree, the shares of defendant No. 8 and the applicants must be re-adjusted so as to remedy the injustice done to the applicants, who were entitled to have their right share, so far as they could get it, at the expense of defendant No. 8. [p. 312, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the 1st Class Subordinate Judge at Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 438 of 1910, confirming the order passed by the Subordinate Judge at Devgad, in Darkhast No. 727 of 1900.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The partition suit in which the execution proceedings (Darkhast No. 727 of 1900) now in question are taken, was brought by the plaintiff, a member of a mirasi family interested to the extent of eight annas in certain three villages named Kuvali, Bharni and Chafet. The other eight annas in each village belonged to a Desai family. The plaintiff claimed a one-thirty-sixth share.

In November 1888, a decree was passed for partition, the main provisions of which were: (1) That the plaintiff should take into his possession his 1/36th share, division by metes and bounds being effected of the whole property in dispute except the Kulkarni Watan, but the plaintiff before taking possession of his share was to pay with their consent to certain of his mirasi co-sharers, including the present appellants, certain specified sums of money.

(2) Two equal divisions between Desais and mirasis were to be made in each village.

(3) Then from the eight annas separated share of the mirasis the shares of the sub-sharers should be separated, the respective fractions being specified in the decree.

(4) After they had paid the proper Court fee in respect of their shares their shares were to be separate, and as regards the lands which were with the sharers the same were as far as possible to be kept with them at the time of partition, subject to certain provisions to secure equality.

The plaintiff first filed his application for execution of the decree in Darkhast No. 127 of 1893 and the main inquiry in connection with the partition was held under the Collector's direction in that darkhast proceeding. Thereafter the defendant No. 8 filed Darkhast No. 404 of 1894 for his share, and the Collector's surveyor who had been employed by the Collector on this Darkhast proceeding No. 127 stated in his report in Darkhast No. 404 that no thikan having in it the houses of any other party had been allotted to defendant No. 8's share. That darkhast was disposed of in or about 1898 according to the statement of the appellant, but the date cannot be verified as many papers are missing and the only note of the Subordinate Judge which we have relating to any darkhast other than that of the appellants, relates to Darkhast No. 118 of 1896 of defendant No. 2 and notes that the warrant for Kuvalegar having been executed and the darkhastdar raising no objections this darkhast is disposed of. The appellants state that they applied for separate possession of their share in 1900, but when the surveyor prepared a list of lands remaining over after the first partition as the share of the applicants the latter found the khassgi lands in Kuvali remaining for their share far less than they should have got and that the plots below and adjoining their houses had been allotted to the share of other sharers.

INDOOR SUBBARAMI REDDI v. NELATUR SUNDARARAJA AIYANGAR.

They then applied to the Collector to re-open the partition. The Collector declined to do this but proposed that the surveyor should at the applicants' expense see if they could be compensated out of the Desais' lands. The applicants say they wanted time to pay these expenses and the Collector then reported to the Court that the applicants refused to take possession of their share.

It is stated by the Subordinate Judge in these proceedings, in confirmation of the applicants' complaint, that the Collector's surveyor has noted that the applicants' house in Survey No. 76, Falni No. 8, of Chafet village was allotted to defendant No. 8's share, while the same defendant got about double his share in the khasgi lands and for the applicants only about half their proper share remains.

The lower Courts, while recognizing the injustice to the applicants in the partition which has been effected, felt unable to interfere. The lower Appellate Court thought that the share prepared for defendant No. 8 had been and "must have been embodied in the final partition decree and it would operate as res judicata even as among the defendants, the suit being for partition." There is no trace in the proceedings of any final decree and on inquiry the District Judge has informed us that it was not the practice to make partition decrees final and reports that the last order in the proceedings is one dated the 1st of July 1897, directing the papers sent by the Collector after effecting compliance with the Court warrant and delivering possession to be filed.

It is evident from the findings of the lower Courts that the Collector's partition has not been made in accordance with the directions of the decrees. The Collector acts ministerially in executing the Court's decree, see Dev Gopal Savant v. Vasudeo Vitthal Savant (1) and an injustice has been done by awarding to defendant No. 8 the appellants' house as well as too much land. The appellants were according to the decree to get their shares on paying the proper Court-fee. No time was specified within which such payment should be made. The suit was not the defendants' suit and they should be allowed to pay at their convenience. That they paid and applied for their shares later than the others, is no reason for non-compliance by the Court's agent with the terms of the decree. The lower Courts evidently suspected fraud on the part of defendant No. 8 and possibly the Collector's surveyor in the earlier proceedings. We will not, however, assume it. It is sufficient to say that this Court cannot allow a mistake of one of its agents in carrying out its directions to work permanent injustice.

The applicants must have their right share so far as they can get it at the expense of defendant No. 8.

The case resembles that of a legatee overpaid by an executor by order of the Court. Such legatee must refund to allow of equal distribution of the estate. This principle has long been recognised. It is to be found stated in Vernon's Reports (1690) and is applied in section 135 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881.

We set aside the order of the lower Court, and direct that the papers be returned to the Collector to adjust the share of the defendant No. 8 and the appellants as far as possible according to the provisions of the decree.

The defendant No. 8 must pay the appellants' costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

In a mortgage suit plaintiff withdrew his claim against some of the defendants, while it was decreed against the others. The trial Judge ordered those defendants against whom the claim had been withdrawn to bear their own costs. On appeal the District Judge ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs. In second appeal it was contended that no appeal lay against the order of the trial Judge as it was not a decree:

Held, that as a decree was passed in the case, the defendants were entitled to appeal. [p. 313, col. 2.]

Discretion as to award of costs vested in a Court under section 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not absolute, and can be interfered with by an Appellate Court if exercised wrongly and arbitrarily. [p. 313, col. 2; p. 314, col. 1.]

Clauses (a) and (b) of rule 279 of the Civil Rules of Practice, Madras, apply equally to the word "withdrawn" as to the word "compromised" and the rule, therefore, has no application to the question of Vakils' fees in cases where the plaintiff withdraws his suit. [p. 314, col. 1.]

Order XXIII, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure fixes no time within which a plaintiff should withdraw his suit; he may do so at any time before judgment is pronounced. But where he withdraws the suit against some of the defendants after both parties have adduced evidence on a preliminary issue, he does so only "after contest" within the meaning of rule 278 (a) of the Civil Rules of Practice. Even if the case is not covered by rule 278 (a), the Court has under Order XXIII, rule 1 (3), of the Code of Civil Procedure power to award against the plaintiff such costs as it thinks fit. [p. 314, col. 2.]

Where there are several defendants raising various defences a Court has power to award different sets of costs. [p. 315, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court of Nellore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 45 and 46 of 1913, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Nellore, in Original Suit No. 9 of 1912.

Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Varadachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are two second appeals from decrees of the District Judge of Nellore ordering the plaintiffs to pay the costs of defendants Nos. 13 to 16 in a mortgage suit. The Subordinate Judge had originally ordered those defendants to bear their own costs. Four points are taken in these appeals.

The first is that no appeal lay against the order of the Subordinate Judge as it was not a decree. That objection has now been amplified by the learned Vakil in reply by an argument that under Order XXIII of the Civil Procedure Code costs can be ordered to be paid in the circumstances of this case and that, therefore, it is not a decree. I express no opinion as to the question whether, if the suit had been entirely withdrawn against all the defendants, and no order other than that contemplated under Order XXIII had been made, it would have been a decree. But as undoubtedly a decree was passed in this case, I have no hesitation in holding that these defendants could appeal against that decree.

The next point taken was that the costs in a case where a suit is withdrawn against any defendant are in the discretion of the Court under section 35 of the Code just as in any other case, and alternatively, in reply, that section 35 does not apply. Assuming that section 35 did apply, the learned Vakil argues that the discretion is absolute provided that it is purported to be exercised, and relies on a decision of the English Court of Appeal in Bew v. Bew (1), where the learned Lords Justices say that the Appellate Court will assume the exercise of discretion unless it is satisfied that the Judge has not exercised it. He then points out that Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice of Bombay, has adopted that view in Parshram Bhaico v. Dorabji Pestonji (2). It is true that the learned Chief Justice does adopt those words, but the case shows that he subsequently proceeded to consider whether it was shown that the absolute discretion had been exercised properly by the learned Judge on the original side of the Court. With the greatest deference to a Judge of the eminence of the late Chief Justice of Calcutta, I am unable to see how a discretion can be absolute subject to a proviso. That case was considered by the late Chief Justice of this Court in the case of Rao Sahab T. Numberumal Chettiar v. Krishnaje (3), and reliance is placed on the language used by him where he says: "I do not want to suggest that I am not prepared to accept the proposition as laid down by Sir Lawrence Jenkins." But the proposition there referred to is not the statement that the discretion is absolute, but the statement that an Appellate Court will not interfere with the exercise of discretion unless it has proceeded on a manifestly wrong ground, etc. In my view it is not an absolute discretion. I can find nothing in the language of section 35 specifically providing that the discretion is absolute, and I find a strong indication in sub-section (2) to the contrary: "Where the Court directs that any costs shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reasons in writing." It is a recognised canon of construction that where a Court is directed to give its reasons, it is so directed for the purpose of assisting the Court that has to consider that decision either in appeal or revision. And I am satisfied that the same rule applies here, and that this sub-section indicates clearly that the discretion is not absolute. I entirely agree with what is stated by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Vadlamanuati Bala Tripura Sundaramma v. Dada Sahib (4) where in dealing with the main words of the section, and not the sub-section, he says: "I think the lower Court's discretion as to costs (which discretion, I admit, is a very large discretion not to be lightly interfered with) has been exercised almost arbitrarily in this case," and then proceeds to modify it. The second point, therefore, fails.

The next point is that the Vakil's fee in cases withdrawn can only be allowed under rule 279 of the Civil Rules of Practice, the words of which are: "In suits withdrawn or compromised (a) before any defence is put in, (b) before the settlement of issues but after defence is put in, etc," the argument being that the words to be found in clauses (a) and (b) do not apply to the word "withdrawn." In my view that suggestion is unarguable, as the language is perfectly clear, and everything contained in clauses (a) and (b) must apply equally to the word 'withdrawn' as to the word 'compromised'. Therefore, the rule does not apply.

It is then argued that if it does not come within rule 279, there is no provision for it and that rule 278 (a) does not apply. Rule 278 (a) is as follows:

(4) 19 Ind. Cas. 474; (1913) M. W. N. 334.

"When such suits or appeals are decided on the merits after contest, etc." Now the facts of this case are as follows. The defendants Nos. 13 to 16 pleaded discharge and want of notice. The Subordinate Judge very properly framed issues on those pleas and required the defendants to prove them. They called their evidence and filed a number of documents. The plaintiffs called two witnesses and filed four documents. The case on these issues was argued, and at that stage, the plaintiffs withdrew their suit. I have very grave doubt whether in those circumstances, it can be said that the suit has not been decided on the merits after contest. There is no limit to the power of a plaintiff to withdraw his suit, (vide Order XXIII). He may do so at any time until judgment is delivered. It seems to me that the rule should if necessary be given a wide construction so as to cover cases where the plaintiff, realizing that the judgment of the Court will be against him, withdraws his suit. But at the last moment the power to give costs can be supported on the words of Order XXIII, rule 1, sub-clause (3): "Where the plaintiff withdraws from a suit.....he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award." I see no reason why there should be any limit to the power of the Court to fix these costs, if rule 278 (a) of the Civil Rules of Practice does not apply. The Subordinate Judge ordered the defendants to bear their own costs. The lower Appellate Court has ordered the plaintiffs to pay the defendants' costs which have been fixed on the ordinary scale. In my opinion the lower Appellate Court had power to make this order, assuming of course that it rightly interfered with the discretion of the first Court.

The last point of law taken is that there was no power to order two sets of costs, rule 284 of the Civil Rules of Practice providing that if several defendants who have separate interests, set up separate and distinct defences and succeed thereon, a fee for one Legal Practitioner for each of the defendants.....may be allowed irrespective of his separate interest." It is argued that they have not succeeded on those issues, because they could not plead that those issues are res judicata in another suit. I do not think it necessary to decide this point either; for I think the powers given under Order XXIII, rule 1 (3), are wide enough to authorize the Court to award two sets of costs.

The sole remaining question is whether the lower Appellate Court has acted properly in interfering with the discretion of the first Court, assuming that the case is covered by section 35. I have examined the reasons given by the first Court, and, agreeing with the lower Appellate Court, can only describe them as incomprehensible. I think the lower Appellate Court's decision to vary that order by making the plaintiffs pay these defendants' costs, was right.

The result will be that these two appeals will be dismissed with costs.

The Court of Appeal should be slow to interfere with the exercise of a discretion by a lower Court. [p. 317, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 1st July 1915.

FACTS of the case appear from the following Order dated 1st July 1915 of GREAVES, J.—On the 11th May 1915 of this year I made an order directing the applicant to pay into Court certain sums on certain dates mentioned in the order, in default of which a warrant for his arrest was to issue. That order was appealed against and on appeal it was ordered that the warrant was not to issue until four days after the instalments fell due, in order to enable the applicant, if he so desired, to make an application to me to vary the order that I made on the 11th May 1915 by extending the time in which the sums mentioned in that order were to be paid into Court. In pursuance of that order the applicant has paid into Court two sums of one lac each and according to my order a further sum of Rs. 1,00,000 falls to be paid into Court to-day. The application that is now made to me is that the applicant may be ordered now to pay into Court Rs. 16,000, as being the balance of the principal payable by him under the original decree in pursuance of which my order was made and that he may be given easier and more lenient terms for payment of the interest due by him under the decree and that the order for the issuing of the warrant of arrest may be suspended. Now by the order of Mr. Justice Fletcher, which as slightly varied by the Appeal Court was confirmed by the Judicial Committee, the applicant had to pay into Court a sum of roughly about Rs. 50,000 together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from the 1st July 1907, which it is admitted, amounts to about a further sum of rupees two lacs, that is to say, the applicant had to pay into Court the sum of Rs. 6,30,000. As before stated he has paid into Court rupees two lacs of this amount and he urges before me that with the exception of the sum of one lac of the interest and a sum of Rs. 18,000 for principal, any further sum that he pays into Court will come back to him ultimately. He says that it would be a hardship on him if he is compelled to pay the whole amount directed by the order of the Judicial Committee to be paid into Court including the sum which he says will come back to him. When the matter came before me to-day, Counsel on behalf of the applicant made this proposal that he should be directed to pay into Court on the 4th July a sum of Rs. 50,000 and a further sum of Rs. 6,000 on or before the 4th of August 1915 and that he should be treated with the utmost leniency with regard to the payment of any further sums which, he contends, will come back to him and which he says are really his moneys. Now the amount that will come back to him is disputed by Sir S. P. Sinha on behalf of Mamooji and he urges with considerable force before me that this matter can never be concluded until the whole sum which represents the partnership assets is paid into Court, when it would be definitely ascertained what is to come back to the parties according to their respective shares in the partnership after discharging the debts and liabilities of the partnership and the costs of the suit. When I originally made the order of the 11th May of this year, the matter of the applicant's ability to pay was fully gone into upon affidavit evidence and I then satisfied myself upon the affidavit evidence placed before me that the applicant was really in a position to pay the sums in question, but to make assurance doubly sure when an application was made to me in June of this year for an extension of the time for making the June payment directed by my order of the 11th May, I directed that the applicant should be cross-examined and he was cross-examined before me for nearly one day with regard to his ability to pay the amount and I think it right to state shortly what the effect of that cross-examination was. He stated that between the 17th May and 1st or 4th June when the application was made, his firm had had large business dealings to the extent of lacs, although of course, they had payments to make. He stated that his firm had not purchased largely but that they had made large sales for which they had got large sums of money. He was cross-examined with regard to the amounts and the value of goods which they had sent between the 17th May and the 1st June by steamer to Rangoon. After considerable hesitation and considerable pressure and considerable prevarication with regard to certain of the goods, it was extracted from him that between those dates his firm had sent goods to the value of Rs. 50,000 to Rangoon and Akyab. Both with regard to the applicant's own property and with regard to the property of the firm (between which it is somewhat difficult to distinguish) I was not treated with frankness. For example, the applicant told me that he owned a three-annas share in the business, but it afterwards transpired that he really owned a considerably larger share than what he stated and that he and Ismail, Ahmed Mohomedi and Mohommed owned the whole business between them, the applicant's share amounting to six annas.

With regard to the applicant's property and the property of the firm I ascertained that the applicant had three shares in a Company, called the Surti Burabazar Company, which were worth Rs. 2,500 each; that his firm had shares in a property called the Twinza Oil Company which shares were worth at the market price one lac of rupees. It is true that he stated that these shares were pledged and Ismail in the witness-box gave further information with regard to this, stating that the shares had been pledged to a gentleman in Rangoon named F. K. H. Chetti. It is in evidence that there was no deed or document relating to the pledge of these shares and in the absence of some proof of the pledge of these shares, I am not prepared to believe, as I was asked to believe, that these shares were pledged and if pledged that they were pledged to their full value. It seems to me that the applicant has entirely misapprehended his position. If he comes to the Court to ask for an indulgence, he ought to place before the Court all materials that are in his possession and not have the facts dragged out one by one as was the case here.

In addition to the Twinza Oil shares worth one lac, the applicant stated that he had two houses of his own in King's Road, Howrah, and Mirzapore Street, Calcutta, which he had bought for Rs. 37,500 in all. He valued the houses at Rs. 50,000 and he stated that he could sell these properties at this price if he could get a month to do so; he stated that he would not sell at Rs. 50,000 now as it would not be the proper value, and he was not prepared to sell unless he got full value for the properties, a somewhat extraordinary statement to make in view of his position as a debtor.

Then again he stated that there was a house in Gobind Chandra Dhur's Lane in Calcutta which belonged to the firm and that it was unincumbered. He stated that he had been offered Rs. 65,000 for the house and he was prepared to sell if he could get this sum, but not otherwise; although it is fair to say that he stated that there was some difficulty with regard to the documents relating to the property. Then he said that since the war, the firm had made a profit to the extent of one lac on sugar.

CHINNIAH CHETTY v. TIKKANI RAMASWAMI CHETTY.

He also stated that from the 19th May to the 1st June his firm had drawn Rs. 1,50,000 or Rs. 1,25,000 from the Chartered Bank and also a further sum of Rs. 10,000 from the Mercantile Bank.

He also stated that he had a share in his father's estate, but that the estate was in the hands of the Receivers, that the estate was worth Rs. 4,00,000, his share being Rs. 3,00,000, that his share in this estate had been made over as security for the money; that it was good security, but the capitalists said that they would not advance money on it as it had already been given as security.

I think these are the principal matters that I need mention with regard to the cross-examination of the applicant before me at the beginning of June and the conclusion I then came to is that he was in a position, if he chose to do so, to pay the sums referred to in the order within the time limited by the order and to comply with the order. No evidence was adduced before me to-day to show any change for the worst in the applicant's position or to lead me to suppose that he cannot comply with the order if he wishes. The result is, I am not prepared to give the applicant any further time than he got under the original order as varied by the Court of Appeal for the payment of the lac payable to-day and I dismiss this application with costs. I will allow one set of costs.

Mr. Bagram, for the Appellant.

Sir S. P. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT

JENKINS, C. J.—We certainly do not decide that there is any right of appeal in this case. But even if there were such a right we would decline to interfere.

The obligation of the defendants is clearly defined by an order of the 11th May 1915, which fixed certain dates for payment of instalments of the considerable sum of money which their Lordships of the Privy Council directed to be paid into Court. Instead of imposing upon the defendants the obligation, which was strictly theirs, of paying the whole sum at once, a provision was made for this payment by instalments. The matter came before the Court of Appeal not by way of appeal from that order, but from an order for enforcement of payment. As I was a member of the Court of Appeal, I think I can say that I doubt the wisdom of the indulgence that was then granted by the Court. It was an indulgence which was intended to be used properly and we did not anticipate that it would be abused.

Assuming an appeal lies, did Mr. Justice Greaves err in such a way as to justify our interference in appeal when he refused to grant time beyond that limited by the order of the 11th May 1915 as modified by the order of the Court of Appeal in respect of the July instalment? The learned Judge has dealt with the matter most carefully and with complete knowledge of the facts, for it is not the first application of the kind that has come before him. In the exercise of the discretion he has considered that further time should not be allowed. The Court of Appeal is at all times slow to interfere with the exercise of a discretion and on that ground, it would be enough to say that we refuse to interfere. But apart from that, the presentation of the case by Mr. Bagram, who I am sure, has told all that, could be said on behalf of his client, has failed to convince me that there is anything in the merits that would justify the further indulgence that has been sought. Therefore, in my opinion, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Each of the four sets of respondents will get his costs of this appeal.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit on a promissory note executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and the other defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are sought to be made liable on the ground that the debt borrowed by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was borrowed for the purposes of the joint family of which all the defendants are members. The lower Court has given a decree against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and has declined to give a decree against defendants Nos. 3 and 4, on the ground that as the note was a negotiable note, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who did not execute it ought not to be made liable. I think the lower Court is wrong in so holding. The Full Bench decision in Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (1) really concludes this matter. The mistake that is made is in supposing that persons other than the party who executes the note, are sought to be made liable on the contract itself. The other persons are sought to be made liable on account of the debt which is contracted by the managing member or managing members. It is a liability imposed on them by the Hindu Law apart from the contract entered into by the other members. The decree of the lower Court is, therefore, modified, and there will be a decree against defendants Nos. 3 and 4 also; but they would not be personally liable on the note, but the plaintiff will be entitled to attach the family property in execution. I make no order as to costs.

Mr. K. R. Narayanaswami Aiyar for Mr. T. Natesa Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Varadachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question of limitation. The lower Courts have held that the appellant's petition for execution was barred and that the alleged part payments which are relied upon to save limitation, though made within three years and would therefore be operative for that purpose, did not have the desired effect, because they were certified to the Court by the decree holder more than three years after the date of the last application. The matter has to be construed with reference to section 20 of the Limitation Act read along with Order XXI rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code.

PANCHUMONI DASSI v. CHANDRA KUMAR GHOSE.

Section 20 of the Limitation Act says that "debt" within the meaning of the section includes money payable under a decree or order of the Court. The learned Plender for the respondents has argued his clients' case on the basis that there is no distinction to be drawn between a decree and money payable under a decree of the Court. For the purposes of this section it is rightly conceded that there is no period of limitation prescribed for certifying payment to Court by the decree-holder; but it is argued on behalf of the respondents that clause 3 of rule 2 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, which says that "a payment or adjustment, which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree", should be construed to mean that the Court cannot recognize payments made within time if they were not certified before the expiry of the period of limitation, that is, three years. But it seems to us that the decree-holder not being tied down to any time for certifying payment to the Court, the necessary result must be that once the certificate is made, the Court is bound to recognize the payments previously made and then section 20 of the Limitation Act comes in to save limitation. There is a conflict of decisions on the point. The Calcutta High Court takes [the view which we have suggested in the case Lakhi Narain Ganguli v. Felamani Dasi (1) and that ruling is followed in an unreported decision of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar in this Court in C. R. P. No. 880 of 1914. A different view has prevailed in the Allahabad High Court. See the decisions in cases Gokul Chand v. Bhika (2) and Bhajan Lal v. Cheda Lal (3) and the decision in the case Amir Singh v. Chhattar Singh (4). For the reasons which we have given, we are inclined to agree with the decision in the case Lakhi Narain Ganguli v. Felamani Dasi (1) and of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar.

The result will be that we allow the appeal and the case must be remitted to the Court of first instance to ascertain whether the alleged part payments were actually made and whether the other provisions of section 20 of the Limitation Act were complied with. Costs will follow the result.

think that it is perfectly clear that an appeal does lie under clause 15 of the Letters Patent. Any other conclusion would lead to a very anomalous result.

Having said so much in favour of the appellants, I think there is nothing more to be said in their favour in this case. It is a pure question of fact as to whether the Will was executed or not. Mr. Richardson, as he then was, the District Judge of Alipur, decided in favour of the Will and he did not do so lightly and without thought, because at the very outset of his judgment he made it clear that there were circumstances which made it clear, in his opinion incumbent, that the evidence should be examined with more than usual care. He certainly did not fail in carrying out that obligation. His judgment is a very careful judgment, in which he gave specific reasons for accepting the oral evidence that had been adduced in favour of the Will. On appeal to this Court, the same view was taken by Mr. Justice Coxe. Mr. Justice Harinath Roy, however, thought that the case had not been rightly decided. In that he was very greatly influenced by his inspection of the signatures on the Will and his estimate of these signatures as derived from a comparison with other admitted signatures, written seven or eight years before the signature on the Will. This is at all times a dangerous ground on which to proceed and to reverse the appreciation of fact by the trial Judge. In this case it seems to me that there really was very little that justified the learned Judge's conclusion. First, he seems to think that the learned District Judge was not fully able to appreciate all that calligraphy suggested to him. But it is well known to us that the learned District Judge, as he then was, was very familiar with Bengali writing and there can be no doubt that he carefully did study these signatures, and I find that both my learned colleagues, who are certainly in a position to pronounce a very valuable opinion, so far from agreeing with Mr. Justice Harinath Roy, take the opposite view and think that there are remarkable and significant characteristics in the signatures on the Will and the admitted signatures which go to prove the identity of the authorship. I have looked at the signatures and I am unable to form any conclusion which would lend any support to Mr. Justice Harinath Roy's view.

This is how the whole matter stands. Two learned Judges including the trial Judge were satisfied on the facts that the Will had been proved. One learned Judge, however, from an examination of the handwriting principally, thinks otherwise.

Something has been said to us as to the provisions of the Will. I must confess that the provisions seem to me not unnatural. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, e.g., the propriety and the desire of people in the position of the testator to keep the immoveable property in the family, I think there is nothing improbable in the provisions of the Will.

In my opinion we ought to dismiss this appeal. But we will say nothing as to costs.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. Doraiswamy Aiyangar and S. Rangaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The High Court's preliminary decree superseded the District Court's preliminary decree. An error in the High Court's preliminary decree cannot be corrected by the District Court. The District Court was legally bound to draw up its final decree only in accordance with the High Court's preliminary decree.

The District Judge, therefore, rightly refused the application to correct his final decree, which was in accordance with the preliminary decree passed by the High Court. There was, therefore, no ground for interference under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, with his said order of refusal. We dismiss the Letters Patent Appeal with costs on this ground, though we differ respectfully from the view of the learned Judge whose decision is now under appeal, namely, that there is anything in Order XXXIV, rule 2, to prevent a Court from providing in its decree for interest on the total amount awarded to the plaintiff because such total includes interest on the bond sued on.

Babu Hirendra Nath Ganguly, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the learned District Judge of Bankura reversing the decision of the Munsif of the first Court of Bishenpore. There were certain proceedings in execution. The decree-holder is the appellant before us and the respondent is the widow and the legal representative of the judgment-debtor. In execution of the decree, the appellant before us attached a certain property that stood in the name of the respondent, on the allegation that it formed part of the assets of her deceased husband. The learned Munsif held that it did so. On appeal, the learned District Judge reversed the finding of the Munsif, holding that the property was not a portion of the estate of the deceased judgment-debtor. The only point that has been raised in this appeal is as to whether an appeal lay to the District Judge from the decision of the Munsif, that is, whether the proceedings before the Court were taken under Order XXI, rule 58, Code of Civil Procedure, or they came under section 47 of the Code itself. It is not possible to reconcile the various decisions in this Court; but we are bound by those decisions as they stand. This case cannot be distinguished from the Full Bench case of Punchanun Bundopadhya v. Rabi Bibi (1). It is quite true that that case was observed upon in the judgment delivered by another Full Bench of this Court in the case of Kartick Chandra Ghose v. Ashutosh Dhara (2). There, the facts were the converse of what they were in the case of Punchanun Bundopadhya v. Rabi Bibi (1). But, as is pointed out by the Full Bench in the case of Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (2), the Benches of this Court are bound by the decision in the case of Punchann Bundopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (1), until the same is overruled by a Special Bench. That being so, we are bound by the decision in that case. There have been two later cases in this Court, one being the case of Ajo Koer v. Gorak Nath (3) and the other being the case of Upendra Nath Kalamuri v. Kusum Kumari Dasi (4). The case of Ajo Koer v. Gorak Nath (3) is substantially the same as the case before us and the learned Judges in that case followed, as they were bound to follow, the decision in Punchann Bundopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (1). The case of Upendra Nath Kalamuri v. Kusum Kumari Dasi (4) is difficult to distinguish from the case of Punchann Bundopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (1), although the learned Judges who decided that case appear to have found reasons satisfactory to themselves which would differentiate the case from that reported in 20 C. L. J. All that is necessary for us to state in the present case is that we are bound by the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Punchann Bundopadhya v. Rabia Bibi (1). The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs, one gold mohur.

Madras District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884), s. 250 (1) (a), rules under, r. 4, note 1—Duty of Chairman to register voters—Acting "in good faith," meaning of—Liability in damages—Test.

The plaintiff firm applied to the Chairman of the Municipal Committee that the name of its representative be registered as a voter. The application was rejected and the firm's representative was not allowed to vote at the election. The plaintiff sued for damages:

Held, (1) that the real test to determine whether the Chairman was liable or not on the ground that the name of the firm was not clearly described in the register of voters, was whether he when he passed the order was acting "in good faith" which implied "due care and diligence;" [p. 323, col. 1.]

(2) that inasmuch as the Chairman was himself responsible for the ambiguous entry in the register, it was his duty to hold an enquiry if he entertained any doubt as to the identity of the firm's representative; [p. 324, col. 1.]

(3) that since he had rejected the plaintiffs' application without good cause he was liable in damages. [p. 324, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decrees of the District Court of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 181 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Tuticorin, in Original Suit No. 23 of 1911.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, V. S. Govindachariar and V. S. Kallabhiram Aiyangar, for the Appellants.—The Municipal Chairman held no enquiry and refused to register the name of the other partner. He has no power to refuse to register and he can't be said to have acted bona fide.

Messrs. J. L. Rosario, K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar and C. Krishnamachariar, for the Respondents.—If the register of voters was altered, it would be an amendment of the register of voters, to do which the Municipal Chairman has no power.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are very simple. Plaintiffs are the firm of K. E. P. T. V. Draviyam Pillai and Venkatchellam Pillai. They are registered in the voting register of the Tuticorin Municipality as "K. E. P. T. V. Draviyam Pillai and another." Note (1) to rule 4 of the rules promulgated by Government under section 250 (1) (a) of the District Municipalities Act provides that a firm desirous of voting, "when entitled to be registered, must cause the name of a partner, member, agent or secretary to be entered in the register maintained under rule 3 supra as their representative, and he alone shall be entitled to vote on behalf of the Company or family." This rule has been interpreted in G. O. No. 2020 M, dated 27th September 1905, as follows:—"It is the duty of the Chairman to see that proper representatives for purposes of voting are registered by the Companies, Associations and undivided families entitled to such privileges and brought on the register of voters at the time of its preparation."

"2. There is, however, no objection to the registration of the representatives of these bodies or to modifications of such registration under the note 1 to rule 4 at any time during the year. The nomination of a representative does not necessarily constitute an amendment of the register of voters, but is merely by way of subsidiary instruction which is essential to make the accepted list effective."

A Municipal election was held in Tuticorin on 6th October 1910. On the previous day the following petition was presented to the Chairman (1st defendant) (Exhibit N):

"The petition written by K. E. P. T. V. Draviam Pillai and Venkatachellam Pillai of the said place is as follows:—

"We request that Venkatachellam Pillai of us would be accepted as a representative of us two and that his name be registered in the voters' register of the 5th ward."

The following order was passed on this by the 1st defendant apparently early on the following day (6th October 1910):

"Rejected.....The names of both the persons mentioned in this, do not appear in the voter's list."

When Venkatachellam Pillai presented himself on that day at the polling booth, 2nd defendant who was the identifying officer referred him to this order and refused to allow him to vote. He, therefore, did not vote. The firm now sue for Rs. 1,000 damages.

That the order of the 1st defendant on Exhibit N was not justifiable is admitted by the District Judge. He says:

"There can, I think, be no doubt that under the rules, 1st defendant had power to allow Venkatachellam Pillai to vote as the firm's representative. The description in the list, however ambiguous, could have been modified by him and no reason is shown why he did not modify it and allow Venkatachellam Pillai's vote. I must, therefore, hold that he exercised his discretion wrongly in disallowing the vote." He has, however, dismissed the suit, holding on the supposed authority of Chunilal Maneklal v. Kirpashankar (1) that malice, meaning presumably "express malice", is necessary to sustain the action and that such malice is not proved.

In our opinion the word "malice" which occurs in the penultimate sentence of the reported judgment in that case, means nothing more than a lack of bona fides. The learned Judges merely lay down that an officer in a position of this kind "is not liable to a suit because he made a mistake in good faith in determining questions that arose for his decision." [Vide also Sabhapat Singh v. Abdul Gaffur (2)]. The real test is whether 1st defendant when he passed his order was acting "in good faith", which implies "due care and diligence."

Viewed from this standpoint, we find it impossible to exonerate the 1st defendant. The grounds on which he seeks to justify his action are these, as set out in paragraph 6 of his written statement: "Under these circumstances, as in the suit petition which was received by defendant on 6th October 1910, it was requested that the name of Venkatachellam Pillai, an individual not found in the said list, may, be newly entered therein as the representative of two persons named in the petition, and as in the said petition the name of the particular firm of which that individual was required to be registered as the representative was not clearly described, and as it was not clear that the voter numbered as 136 was the said identical firm under the name K. E. P. T. V. or if it referred to the two individuals named in the suit petition and as an objection petition had been received in connection with vote No. 136, the defendant reasonably surmised that he had no authority to grant an order in compliance with the petition and in accordance with law and mamool, and to the best of his discretion rightly and with bona fide intentions, the defendant came to be of opinion that it could not be registered as requested in the petition and in pursuance of this opinion, the endorsement on the suit petition was made."

Now as regards this, it may be observed (1) that the 1st defendant, as Chairman, was himself responsible for the ambiguous entry of "Draviyam Pillai and another" in the voting register, (2) that if he entertained any doubt of the identity of Venkatachellam Pillai with the person entered as 'another' it was easy and his plain duty to hold an enquiry, (3) that in a precisely similar case a firm was allowed to record a vote by a representative, although the names of all the partners were not specified in the voting register (vide paragraph 16 of the District Munsif's judgment), and (4) that the mere presentation of an objection petition by someone else could not possibly be an excuse for denying to plaintiffs their right of voting or, at any rate, for refusing to enquire into whether they did possess such a right. His learned Vakil has suggested that the G. O. above referred to has no legal effect and that it is doubtful if the Chairman has power to enter the name of the representative in the register except at the time of its preparation or revision. We see no reason to put a different interpretation on the rule than that set forth in the G. O. But, however this may be, the 1st defendant never pleaded that his action was in any way influenced by doubts on this score, and this argument cannot be considered in judging of his good faith. In our opinion, the 1st defendant was not acting in good faith in rejecting the petition, Exhibit N, and he is liable for damages. We see no reason to call for a finding from the lower Appellate Court as to the amount, as there is no basis for assessment; and we agree with the District Munsif that the plaintiffs are only entitled to nominal damages.

The decrees of the lower Courts will be set aside and the plaintiffs will be given a decree for Rs. 50 damages and full costs throughout against the 1st defendant only. Plaintiffs seek for no remedy in this Court against the 2nd defendant, who is exonerated; but we make no order as to his costs.

Suit decreed; Appeal allowed.

Present:—Mr. Justice Young.

MG THA HLA—APPELLANT

versus

MOKHLAS—RESPONDENT.

Malicious prosecution, damages for, suit for—Proof essential—Damages, when awarded—Principle.

In an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff has to prove first that he was innocent and that his innocence was pronounced by the Tribunal before which the accusation was made. [p. 325, col. 1.]

A man is not to be mulcted in damages merely because he fails to prove another's guilt, nor is a man to receive compensation merely because there is a reasonable doubt about his guilt: if there is any doubt about his innocence, he fails to prove the absence of reasonable and probable cause. [p. 325, col. 1.]

A man is acquitted in a criminal case if there is a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, but a Civil Court will not award him compensation in a subsequent suit for damages for malicious prosecution unless it has not only itself no reasonable doubt as to his innocence but considers the prosecutor either bad, or should as a reasonable man have had, none either. [p. 325, col. 2.]

Mr. Sin Hla Aung, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. E. Lambert, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT. This is a suit brought by a revenue surveyor named, Mg. Tha Hla, against one Mokhlas for damages for an alleged malicious prosecution, in which Mokhlas charged Mg. Tha Hla under section 151, Indian Penal Code, with taking from him a bribe of Rs. 15. The complaint was dismissed and characterised as false and malicious. Mg Tha Hla then prosecuted Mokhlas under section 211, Indian Penal Code, for bringing a false charge against him. In this he in his turn was unsuccessful. He then brought the present suit in which he succeeded in the Court of first instance but failed in first appeal. He now appeals to this Court. I may say at once that I agree with the decision of the lower Appellate Court. It is one of those almost hopeless cases in which a person of ordinary common sense should have realised that any further attempt to vindicate his honour than that afforded by his acquittal, was under the circumstances doomed to failure. He (Mg. Tha Hla) who was admittedly within a mile or two of the defendant on the day on which he was charged with having extorted a bribe from him, completely failed to show where he was at the time when he was alleged to have committed the offence. One of his witnesses knows nothing of his movements after 8 o'clock in the morning, the other commences his story at a time when the plaintiff might well have been to the defendant and returned. The defendant's witnesses were not materially shaken by cross-examination. The defendant, it is true, delayed in bringing the charge, and it is very probable that in bringing he was actuated by malice, but it need hardly be said that this is very poor evidence that the charge was false, and that, however malicious a charge may be, the Court must convict if satisfied of its truth. As a fact, the charge of taking a bribe was found to be unproved; the complaint against the plaintiff was dismissed and was classified false and malicious. But in these criminal proceedings Mokhlas had to prove that Mg. Tha Hla had actually taken a bribe; in the civil proceedings brought by Mg. Tha Hla, Mg. Tha Hla had to prove his innocence, vide per Brown, L. J., in Abrath v. North Eastern Railway Company (1), a decision confirmed by the House of Lords in Abrath v. North Eastern Railway Company (2) and in which that learned Judge remarked, "In an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff has to prove, first, that he was innocent and that his innocence was pronounced by the Tribunal before which the accusation was made." It may be at once admitted that the dictum as to its being necessary for the plaintiff to prove his innocence was not necessary for the decision of the case, that the exact point seems never to have been actually judicially decided in England: vide Halsbury's Laws of England, but it has been so decided in India: vide Nalluappa Goundan v. Kailappa Goundan (3) and I agree with the decision. A man is not to be mulcted in damages merely because he fails to prove another's guilt; and a man is not to receive compensation merely because there is a reasonable doubt about his guilt. Usually speaking if there is any doubt about his innocence, he will fail to prove the second essential ingredient to success, namely, the absence of reasonable and probable cause, which is perhaps the reason why the point has never apparently been actually decided in England where the reported cases do not appear to have been based on the direct testimony of the prosecutor, but upon information given to him, and the question has been whether the prosecutor believed this information and whether he was justified in doing so. Unless the plaintiff can prove either that the defendant did not believe the information on which he launched his prosecution or that if he believed it, he ought not have to do so, and in so doing did what a reasonable man would have not done, he will fail if there is, however at the close of the case, any doubt in the mind of the Court not only as to the acquittal but as to his actual innocence. It is difficult to see how a Court can find a man had no reason to believe evidence which leaves the Court itself doubtful. There are, however, cases where as here the prosecution, to adopt Brown, L. J.'s words, must know whether his story is false or true, and where if the accused is innocent, the prosecutor must be telling a falsehood and there must be want of reasonable and probable cause. This was the line adopted by the appellant's Counsel before this Court. He argued that Mokhlas himself professed to have given the bribe and that, therefore, as Mg. Tha Hla was acquitted on the charge of having received a bribe the accusation was not only false but false to Mokhlas' own knowledge, or at any rate that it was for him (Mokhlas) in the events that had happened, to prove that the decision was wrong and that Mg. Tha Hla had really taken the bribe, a shifting of the onus which would obviously lead to his client's victory. The reasoning, however, seems to me fallacious. A man is acquitted in a criminal case if there is a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, but a Civil Court will not award him compensation in a subsequent suit for malicious prosecution unless it has not only itself no reasonable doubt as to his innocence, but considers that the prosecutor either had, or should as a reasonable man have had, none either. If the plaintiff had either been able to account for his own movements on the day in question or so to shatter by his cross-examination the defendant's witnesses as to leave no doubt that their story was false, he would have won, but he has failed in doing so and having failed, though I dare say that it is through no fault of his own, I cannot hold that he has proved his case, though I desire to say that the evidence leaves me without a doubt that Mokhlas entirely failed to substantiate his charge and that the verdict of not guilty was absolutely correct.

I also desire to say that the learned Judge of the District Court erred in not considering the evidence brought before him. He virtually treated the acquittal of Mokhlas on the charge under section 211, Indian Penal Code, as decisive of the present case. I must doubt whether the judgment was even evidence. A fortiori he erred in criticising the reasoning of the Magistrates who tried the two cases and in hinting that they were biased, when he was not exercising appellate jurisdiction over them. I desire to say that I have read the report of the one Magistrate and the judgment of the other in the two cases and consider that each dealt with the case carefully and that the criticisms are in my opinion unjustified. It is obviously a case when neither litigant could prove that the other was guilty. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mr. N. Srinivasa Charya, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. A. Govinda Raghav Aiyar, for the Respondents.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 25th March 1915, and having stood over for consideration till the 9th April 1915, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

NAPIER, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore dismissing a suit brought by one Narayanaswamy Aiyar, a sub-lessee of certain ryotwari lands, against ryotwari owners to recover damages for an alleged illegal distraint by the defendant for rent, the ground for the dismissal being that the District Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

The plaintiff together with his immediate lessor had previously instituted a suit in the Revenue Court against the same two defendants under section 95 of Madras Act I of 1908, praying for the cancellation of the attachment of the crops and costs and such further and other relief as the Court might deem fit. The Deputy Collector directed that one Palani Mudali, the other co-lessor of the plaintiff, should be added as plaintiff, and this was done. Subsequently the three plaintiffs withdrew their suit, stating that they intended to bring a fresh suit for damages before the Civil Court.

The lower Appellate Court held on the construction of section 213 and the Schedule of the Madras Estates Land Act that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction.

The Madras Estates Land Act, I of 1908, was passed to amend and declare the law relating to the holding of land in estates. An estate is defined by section 3 of the Act as being the whole or any part of any permanently settled estate or zemandari, any unsettled palaiyam or jaghir, certain plots in village inams and any portion of such villages. Admittedly, land held under ryotwari tenure does not come within the definition of an estate. We find, however, that one chapter of the Act has been made partially applicable to such holdings. This is Chapter VI, which deals with the recovery of rent by suit or by distraint and sale of moveable properties or of the holding. Section 77 of that chapter entitles a landholder to bring a suit before the Collector for the recovery of the arrear of rent and also to distrain the produce of the land or trees in the defaulter's holding. The distraint complained of in this suit was of the produce in the defaulter's holding, though the crops distrained belonged to the sub-lessee.

Section 93 entitles a defaulting ryot or cultivator to file a suit before the Collector to set aside distraint within 15 days from the date of the service of notice by the sale officer on the defaulter under section 95. It was under this provision that the lessee from the ryot and his sub-lessee brought their suit in the Deputy Collector's Court. Section 134 is as follows:— "The provisions contained in this chapter for the recovery of rent, ... by distraint and sale of moveable property shall apply, as far as may be, ... to the recovery of rent by a land-owner under ryotwari settlement, ... from a tenant from whom he has taken a written agreement..." The first thing to be noticed is that section 134 does not extend to a ryotwari land-owner the whole of the rights given by Chapter VI. It does not entitle him to bring a suit before the Collector to recover his rent. Nor does it entitle him to exercise the powers given to a land-holder of selling the holding. The omission of these two powers of a land-holder from the section throws, in my opinion, considerable light on the extent to which the other sections of the chapter are applicable. The Revenue Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for rent and it has no jurisdiction to permit the sale of the holding; that is to say, where the remedy requires the intervention of the Collector, the procedure is not applicable to ryotwari holdings. No permission or intervention of a Revenue Officer is required for the exercise of the right of distraint and it is only after the property has been distrained and it is sought to recover the amount by the sale of the property, that any public officer intervenes. That is the sale officer referred to in section 79, a statutory official created by Act VII of 1839. This officer's position is analogous to that of a sheriff with regard to sales in execution. Section 2 of the Act referred to, is as follows:—"All Tahsildars shall be vested with powers of Commissioners for the sale of property distrained for arrears of the rent or of revenue..." His functions have always been the same whether he was selling the property taken by the process of distress under the provisions of the Rent Recovery Act (Madras Act VIII of 1865) or the Revenue Recovery Act (Madras Act II of 1864) (vide section 2 of the former Act and section 9 of the latter). It is, therefore, clear that so far as the procedure for recovery of arrears by distraint is concerned, there is no intervention by the Collector. Turning again to section 134 of the Madras Estates Land Act, we find that the provisions applicable are limited to those for the recovery of rent and they are made applicable by sub-clause 2 to the recovery of rent. No section in this chapter which does not provide for the recovery of rent is applicable to the case of ryotwari tenants and no portion of any section which does not deal with the recovery of rent is applicable either; and further, the language being "shall apply to the recovery of rents by a land-owner," any provision under which a person whose property has been distrained can seek relief is not applicable either, such provision not being one for the recovery of rent by a land-owner. This conclusion based on the strict language of the section is, in my opinion, fortified by the examination of the procedure in the remaining sections. In my view, all the section does is to make statutory provision for the exercise of the right of distraint by a ryotwari land-owner and to provide certain formalities for the protection of the lessee. It was not intended to give the Revenue Court any jurisdiction to entertain a suit either by the land-owner to recover the rent or by the tenant to set aside the distraint. I now turn to the other provisions of the Act. Section 189 provides that a Collector shall hear and determine all suits and applications of the nature specified in parts A and B of the Schedule. The Schedule contains an enumeration of suits. One of them is by a ryot to set aside distress under section 95. This description obviously does not apply to a ryotwari tenant, for admittedly he is not a ryot within the meaning of the Act. And it is a fair observation that the failure to provide for a suit by any other person to set aside a distress is an indication that the procedure under section 95 was not intended to be made applicable to persons other than ryots. The last description in Schedule A is a suit for damages not otherwise provided for. The Subordinate Judge applies section 213 to description of suits—the language of section 213 is “any person deeming himself aggrieved by any proceeding taken under colour of this Act, or by neglect or breach of any of its provisions, shall be at liberty to seek redress by filing a suit for damages before the Collector”—and holds that section 189 ousts jurisdiction of the Civil Court with reference to any dispute or matter in respect of which such suits might be brought. In my opinion, this is giving too wide a meaning to the words “for damages not otherwise provided for”. Section 213 itself does not bar the right of action in a Civil Court, unless that right of action is taken out of the jurisdiction of the Court by the Act. If the words in the Schedule are to be given the wide meaning contended for, then the provisions of sub-sections 2 and 3 of section 213 are nugatory. Therefore, some limitation must be put on the words “damages not otherwise provided for.” It is extremely difficult to say what those limitations are and I do not propose to consider any case other than the one before us.

As pointed out above, nothing but the provisions laying down the procedure for distress is incorporated in the law governing the relations between a ryotwari land-owner and his tenant. It seems to me, therefore, that the Legislature, which refrained from extending the right of suit under section 95 to such a tenant, cannot have intended to make the Collector's Court the sole Court in which a tenant could seek damages for an illegal distraint. The suit under section 95 is one to contest the distraint. In nature it does not differ from one for damages; and as the former is not extended to the ryotwari tenant, I cannot think that the Legislature intended to bar his suit in the ordinary Court by the wide words “for damages not otherwise provided for” in the Schedule. I am inclined to the view that the Schedule suits are all suits with reference to land in an estate. As the matter, however, is not free from doubt, and as my learned brother feels more difficulty in the matter than I do, I agree that the following question be referred to a Full Bench.

“Is a suit by the tenant of a ryotwari land-owner or of any sub-tenant or such for damages for illegal distraint of moveable property, growing crops or the produce of land or trees, in a defaulter's holding solely cognisable by the Revenue Court.”

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I also think that it is appropriate that the question should be settled by a Full Bench. While section 76 (paragraph 1) of the old Act VIII of 1865 allowed an unqualified right of resort to the Civil Court to obtain damages for acts “professedly done under the authority” of that Act, notwithstanding the “summary suit” remedy given by section 49 of that Act to be filed before the Collector for that same relief of damages, section 213, clause 2, of the Estates Land Act gives a right of action in the Civil Court only in cases “not taken out of its (the Civil Court's) jurisdiction by this Act.” Further, suits before the Collector are not distinguished by the designation of “summary” suits in the new Act, that is, distinguished from suits before the Civil Court. It seems also clear that resort to Civil Courts was intended by the new Act to be discouraged as far as possible. Suits which are not for damages, though arising from acts professedly done under the Statute, lie no doubt ordinarily in the Civil Courts [see Ghouse Moideen Sahib v. Muthialu Chettiar (1)].

This second appeal coming on for hearing as per above order on the 2nd and 3rd August 1915, upon perusing the said Order of Reference, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. N. Srinirasa Charya, for the Appellant, and of Mr. L. A. Govinduraghava Aiyar, for the Respondents, and the question having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court expressed the following

WALLIS, C. J.—I do not think that the fact, the proceedings for the recovery of rent by distraint and sale of moveable property which have given rise to this suit, were taken by a land-owner under ryotwari settlement pursuant to section 134 of the Madras Estates Land Act, or the fact that the present suit was instituted in respect of proceedings so taken not by a tenant of such land-owner but by a sub-tenant, makes any difference, because in my opinion the effect of section 134 is to enable such a land-owner, though not governed by the general provisions of the Act, to avail himself of the summary remedy thereby provided for the recovery of rent, and the effect of section 213, sub-section (1), is to give "any person deeming himself aggrieved by any proceedings taken under colour of this Act" a right to sue for damages before the Collector, words which are sufficient to give the Collector jurisdiction in a suit of this nature if filed before him.

The question is as to whether suits as to which jurisdiction is conferred upon the Collector under section 213 (1) are withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts by section 189.

Sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 213 seem at first sight to suggest that it was contemplated that there should be concurrent jurisdiction in the Collector and the Civil Court in suits falling under sub-section (1), but as against this we have the express provisions of section 189, which after collecting in Schedules A and B all the suits and applications to be entertained by the Collector mentioning in each case the governing section, goes on to provide explicitly that no Civil Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction shall take cognizance of any dispute—matter in respect of which such suit or application might be brought or made. These provisions are express and I cannot find anything repugnant to them in the terms of section 213 which would justify us in holding that suits which fall under sub-section 1 of that section are triable concurrently by the Civil Court. It is, I think, immaterial whether the result of so holding is to leave little or no effective operation for sub-sections (2) and (3), for these sub-sections are in the nature of provisoes, and as pointed out in West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (2), it would not be legitimate to cut down the operative portion of section 189 to which these provisoes do not in terms apply merely because otherwise the provisoes would be "meaningless and even senseless". What seems to me probable in this case is that sub-sections (2) and (3) which were drafted in place of sections 49 and 78 of the old Act, were retained by inadvertence after the jurisdiction of the Civil Court had been taken away by section 189 in its present form. After all both sub-section (2) of section 213 and section 78 of the old Act are nothing but statements of a well-known rule of statutory construction that the creation of new jurisdiction does not affect previously existing jurisdiction in the absence of express provision. I desire to say, though the point in my opinion does not arise for decision, that the effect of provisions of sub-section (2) is not to preserve a concurrent jurisdiction in the Collector in the case of suits under section 91; in my opinion suits under section 91 are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Civil Court and do not come within the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 213 giving the Collector jurisdiction, because I think that apart from section 91, no suit would lie to call in question lawful orders of the Collector passed under section 89 or 90 on the ground that the plaintiff was aggrieved by such lawful orders. The proceedings contemplated under section 213 (1) are in my opinion unlawful proceedings done under the colour of the Act.

Next as regards sub-section (3), I find it difficult to accept the suggestion that the Legislature went to the trouble for enacting sub-section (3) for the purpose of saving the right to sue in a Civil Court for reliefs other than damages in respect of causes of action as to which suits for damages lie before the Collector under sub-section (1), even if sub-section (3) as drafted, permits of such suits.

NARAYANASWAMY AIYAR V. VENKATARAMANA AIYAR.

These considerations here do not affect my judgment in the order in question and I would answer the reference in the affirmative.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—It seemed to be admitted in the arguments on both sides that clause (2) of section 213 of the Estates Land Act and the proviso which forms clause (3) of the same section, are somewhat ambiguously worded.

Reading, however, section 213 (1), section 189 and clause (2) of Schedule A together, I feel little doubt that the present suit (which is a suit seeking redress by way of damages and brought by a person feeling himself aggrieved by proceedings taken under the colour of sections 77 and 134 of the Act) has been taken away out of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. Clause 2 of section 213 preserves the Civil Court's jurisdiction only in cases "not taken out of its jurisdiction by this Act", and suits for damages brought on particular causes of action are so taken away by section 189 of the Act read with section 213, clause (1), and Schedule A No. 21. In other words, clause 2 of section 213 saves the Civil Court's jurisdiction only where the suit is not brought for the relief of pecuniary damages for proceedings taken under colour of the Act, that is, where it is brought for other remedies (such as injunction, declaration, possession, etc.), if any, open to the plaintiff under the ordinary law. Similar provisions in other rent, revenue and similar special Acts showing a reluctance on the part of the Legislature to take away the jurisdiction of Civil Courts over suits involving claims for other than pecuniary damages, while conferring jurisdiction on Revenue Courts to entertain suits for the award of pecuniary damages in particular cases, can, it seems to me, be quoted in support of the above view. The proviso forming clause 3 of section 213 takes away the jurisdiction of the Civil Court even in respect of cases claiming other redress than pecuniary damages, if the redress of damages had been already claimed by the plaintiff in a suit filed before the Collector under clause 1 of section 213.

After giving my best consideration to the whole matter, I agree with my Lord that the present suit is exclusively cognizable by the Revenue Court. It is unnecessary for the decision of this case to express a final opinion on the questions whether the remedy by a suit in the Collector's Court to set aside a distress under section 95 can be availed of by a Government ryot's tenant whose moveables have been distrained under section 77 and whether assuming that he could do so, the jurisdiction is an exclusive one in the Revenue Court, Schedule A, clause 10, referring only to a suit by a "ryot" under section 95, and the word "ryot" being defined in clause 15 of section 3 of the Act so as to exclude a Government ryot's tenant from its connotation.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—Defendants Nos. 1 & 2, who are land-owners under ryotwari settlement with the Government, availing themselves of the powers given them under section 134 of the Madras Estates Land Act, distrained the crops on the land of the plaintiff, their tenant. The distrained crops were subsequently sold. The plaintiff complains that the distraint was illegal and files this suit for damages in the District Munsif's Court, Tirupur. The question is whether a Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit of this description. The solution depends on the correct interpretation of sections 213 and 189 of the Estates Land Act. Clause 1 of section 213, which corresponds to section 49 of the repealed Rent Recovery Act, Madras Act VIII of 1865, gives jurisdiction to Revenue Courts to entertain suits for damages filed by persons deeming themselves aggrieved by any proceedings taken under colour of the Act. That the present suit is a suit of that nature, scarcely admits of doubt and the plaintiff, if he had chosen, could have filed this suit before the Collector. But this would not take away the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts and clause 2 of section 213, which corresponds to the 1st clause of section 78 of the repealed Act, provides that "this section shall not be deemed to bar any right of action in a Civil Court in any case not taken out of its jurisdiction by this Act." Now section 189 of the Act takes away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in respect of suits of the nature specified in part A of the Schedule to the Act and suits of the nature now in question are specified in the Schedule (see No. 21 of the Schedule). The words of the section are quite clear and unambiguous, and if the matter had rested there, there could be no doubt that a Civil Court could not take cognizance of this suit. But it is said that this construction renders the proviso to section 213 meaningless, because there can hardly ever be a case to which it would apply. I think it quite possible to give a meaning to the proviso consistent with the construction I put on section 189. Persons deeming themselves aggrieved by proceedings taken under colour of the Act are not confined to relief by way of damages. They may be entitled to ask for other reliefs such as an injunction, a declaration, or recovery of the specific property. [See Zamindar of Ettayapuram v. Sankarappa Reddiar (3).] Even if the appellant is correct in his contention that the proviso would be rendered nugatory by the construction I put on section 189, following the principle of the decision in West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (2), I should still come to the same conclusion as the words of section 189 are quite clear and unambiguous.

I agree to the answer to the reference.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 17, 37, 44—Decree for dissolution of marriage passed by Divisional Judge and confirmed by High Court—Application for alimony—Jurisdiction.

Where a decree for dissolution of marriage passed by a Divisional Judge was confirmed by the High Court under section 17 of the Divorce Act and the successful petitioner applied to the High Court for an order for payment of alimony:

Held, (1) that the Court which was empowered to make the order either for alimony or for the maintenance and education of the children was the Court of the Divisional Judge and not the High Court; [p. 331, col. 2.]

(2) that in view of the nature of the High Court's jurisdiction the Court of the Divisional Judge was not a subordinate Court within the meaning of section 24(1) (a) of the Civil Procedure Code and the High Court could not transfer the proceedings to the Divisional Court for disposal. [p. 332, col. 1.]

Mr. N. M. Patwardhan (with him Messrs. Dixit and Purushottamrai), for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition by the successful petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage under the Indian Divorce Act instituted in the Court of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, in which the decree of the Divisional Judge for dissolution was confirmed by this High Court on the 20th November 1914. The petitioner prays that this Court may decree such sums per month by way of alimony from the 1st April 1912 or such other date as to this Honourable Court may seem proper. This petition was, when presented, served through the War Office upon the respondent, and in consequence of such service a letter, dated the 11th June 1915, has been addressed by his Solicitor on his behalf to the Registrar of this Court making certain proposals for payment to the petitioner for the children of the marriage. It is now stated on behalf of the petitioner that she was re-married in the month of May last, and only claims alimony up to that date. But she has two children dependent upon her whose father is the respondent, and she desires that provision should be made for their maintenance and education. The relevant sections of the Indian Divorce Act are respectively sections 37 and 44. Each of them empowers the High Court to act on any decree absolute declaring the marriage to be dissolved, and the District Judge to act, if he thinks fit, on the confirmation of any decree for dissolution. In the present case, the decree was the decree of a District Judge confirmed by this High Court by reason of the personal jurisdiction which the High Court possesses over European British subjects under section 3 of the Indian Divorce Act. The jurisdiction is not, strictly speaking, that of a superior over a subordinate Court, but arises purely owing to the race and nationality of the persons concerned. The decree for dissolution was not a decree absolute under section 16 of the Act upon a decree nisi which could only be passed by the High Court, but it was a decree confirming the Divisional Judge's decree for dissolution under section 17. It is, therefore, clear, we think, that the Court which is empowered to make the order either for alimony or for the MAUNG SHWE PAW v. MA PAN ZI.

Pe could not sue during his mother's life-time as she was a step-child of Mi On Gaing and was, moreover, the sole heir of her husband, the adopted son Shwe Nyein. The Judge, therefore, purporting to act under Order I, rule 10, Code of Civil Procedure, joined Mi Pan Zi as a plaintiff and ultimately decided that she was entitled to 3/4ths of Mi On Gaing's estate as against Mi On Gaing's surviving husband, and that the original plaintiff, Saw Pe, was entitled to nothing.

The Divisional Judge's procedure was erroneous. On his finding that the plaintiff Saw Pe had no right of action in his mother's life time, the proper course would be to set aside the decree of the District Court and dismiss the suit. Neither Order I, rule 10, nor any other provision of the Code authorises a Court, on finding that the plaintiff must fail, to import into the case as co-plaintiff a person who has a different cause of action inconsistent with that of the original plaintiff and who moreover has not paid Court-fees on the new claim. The case was not an administration suit in which all those claiming to share in the estate of the deceased must be represented. It was a claim by one member of the family suing in his own right and the Judge should have adjudicated this claim on its own merits.

The defendant, Shwe Paw, having appealed to this Court and the original plaintiff, Saw Pe, not having appealed, the ordinary course would be to set aside the Divisional Court's decree so far as it amounts to a dismissal of Saw Pe's original suit. But the circumstances are peculiar. It appears that it was Mi Pan Zi who conducted the suit and the appeal in the Divisional Court for her son, Saw Pe, and it is only the action of the Divisional Court that has placed her formally in antagonism to her son. It may be inferred that Saw Pe has refrained from appealing to this Court because he expects that the decree in favour of his mother will ultimately benefit him. It does not appear that Saw Pe himself was consulted as to the addition of Ma Pan Zi as a co-plaintiff or that he waived his rights in her favour.

In the circumstances it seems that the case should be remanded to the Divisional Court for a fresh decision on the defendant, Shwe Paw's appeal uncomplicated by any claim on the part of Ma Pan Zi who should be struck out. Mr. Lambert for the appellant, Shwe Paw, agrees to this course.

The Upper Burma rulings mentioned in the District Court's judgment should be of great use in deciding the case. Attention is also invited to the instructive ruling Ma Gun Bon v. Po Kyue (3), which has many points of similarity to this case and which gives reasons for thinking (i) that when there are no children surviving but only the grandchildren the latter succeed on the same footing as children and (ii) that the rule as to "out-of-time" grandchildren is requisite only when a distinction has to be made between different classes of heirs (e. g., children and grandchildren) and has no application when the nearest heirs all stand in the same degree of relationship to the deceased.

It has been urged that Saw Pe has a brother, Tun Win, and that he should be joined as co-plaintiff. This is not necessary. If Saw Pe is one of two sons of the kittima son, Shwe Nyein, and if it is held that Saw Pe is entitled to a share, he should get only one-half of the share to which he would be entitled as the only son. The other half would be claimable by his brother, Tun Win, but it need not be awarded in this suit.

It may be questioned whether the Divisional Judge is right in regarding Mi Pan Zi as Shwe Paw's step-daughter. Shwe Paw is the subsequent husband of Mi Pan Zi's step-mother, Mi On Gaing, and the rules relating to partition between step-child and step-father seems to have no application as between them. When Mi Pan Zi's father, Tun U, died, Mi Pan Zi might have claimed partition from her step-mother, Mi On Gaing, but apparently did not do so because she was the wife of Mi On Gaing's kittima son.

"Step-children", the Divisional Judge remarks, "would seem to be treated under Buddhist Law upon the same principles as children." This is true only when there are no children of the whole blood. Children of the half blood cannot succeed on the footing of children when there are children of the whole blood. And one of the points which has to be decided in this case is whether a kittima son, as being for all purposes equivalent to a natural born son of his adoptive parents, does not exclude a child of the half blood.

(3) U. B. R. (1897-01), II, 66.

MARJI JETA V. HONNAVAR PUTHU HARI PAI,

When a son dies before his parents and the parents afterwards die, the question arises whether the deceased son's widow or his children or both widow and children represent him in the ultimate partition of the parental estate. Among other authorities sections 162 and 164 of the Digest may be consulted on this point.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case is remanded to the Divisional Court for a fresh decision after striking out Mi Pan Zi's name as co-plaintiff. The costs of this appeal will be borne by the estate.

A certificate will be given to the appellant under section 13, Court Fees Act, for the refund of the Court fee on the memorandum of appeal.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 83, 91—Shipment of goods—No letter of requisition to Captain—Liability in case of loss—Difference between Indian and English Law

Where the plaintiff in pursuance of the instructions given by the 2nd defendant as agent of the 1st defendant, who carried on business at Honnavar, shipped 101 bags of Rangoon rice on board the "Machva" to Honnavar without indicating the consignee to the Captain but desiring that the rice should be delivered only on payment of the price, and owing to a storm in Mangalore harbour, the ship was stranded and the rice damaged; on the question as to who was to bear the loss representing the difference between the contract rate and the rate at which the damaged rice was sold, there being no evidence as to the intention of the parties:

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Canara in Appeal Suit No. 148 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Mangalore in Original Suit No. 181 of 1909.

Messrs. K. P. Madhava Rau, B. Sitarama Rau and K. P. Lakshmana Rau, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Yegnanarayana Adiga, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised by this second appeal is whether the purchaser, i.e., the 1st defendant is liable for the price of Rangoon rice shipped to him in pursuance of the instructions given by the 2nd defendant. The facts are that the 2nd defendant, as the agent of the 1st defendant who carried on business at Honnavar, instructed plaintiff at Mangalore to send to the 1st defendant 101 gunny bags of Rangoon rice by loading them in the "Machva." This instruction is referred to in Exhibit A, dated 1st May. On the 4th May the plaintiff shipped 101 bags of rice on board the "Machva" to Honnavar. No letter of requisition was given to the Captain of the ship instructing him to deliver the goods to the 1st defendant, the purchaser, but the plaintiff sent his servant in advance with the letter, Exhibit F, to the 1st defendant, dated 4th May, in which occurs the following passage: "As soon as they reach you, you should obtain them and write to that effect. The rate, description and ankda thereof will be communicated to you later on. As there is a great urgency for money you should pay Rs. 700 to Mr. Venkatesa Prabhu, the bearer of this letter." On the 7th May, there was a storm in Mangalore harbour, the ship was stranded and the rice was damaged and had to be sold at a considerable loss.

The question to be considered is, which of these persons is to bear the loss representing the difference between the contract rate and the rate at which the damaged rice was sold. The Courts below have held that the loss must be borne by the plaintiff, on the ground apparently that as the vendor shipped the goods without indicating the consignee to the Captain and desired that the rice should not be delivered until its price was paid, it could not be held that the property in the goods passed from the vendor to the purchaser. It is suggested that in the Indian Law the position is different from that under the English Law. It is quite clear in English Law that the passing of the property will be governed by the intention of the parties, and that the rules laid down in section 18 of the Sale of Goods Act for the determination of what the intention of the parties is are not to override the intention of the parties, if that intention is otherwise clear. It is suggested that in India, the law is different and whatever be the intention of the parties in fact, the Statute lays down definite rules in accordance with which the property passes at the time and in the circumstances prescribed in the rules. That appears to be the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Brij Coomaree v. Salamander Fire Insurance Co. (1). It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to decide whether this is the true construction of the Statute or not, because in this case there is no evidence that the intention of the parties, i.e., of both of them was that the passing of the property should not follow the ordinary course. In the ordinary course, as a result of section 83 and section 91 of the Indian Contract Act, property would pass on shipment. When the 2nd defendant instructed the plaintiff to sell him rice and send it on board the ship, he must be taken to have proposed to the plaintiff that the property should pass to the purchaser upon shipment. That was the offer and plaintiff accepted it by shipping the goods and the acceptance was not made subject to the condition that plaintiff should reserve to himself the right of disposal until the price of the goods was paid.

On these grounds we hold that the property passed as soon as the goods were shipped and the loss must fall on the 1st defendant. We allow the appeal with costs in this Court and dismiss the memorandum of objections.

Appeal allowed.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the judgment and decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Rajahmundry, in Small Cause Suit No. 1032 of 1913.

FACTS.—The plaintiff brought this suit to recover Rs. 60, being the value of tiles, or 30,000 tiles due under a letter executed by 1st defendant and father of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 in his favour, dated 22nd May 1905. The letter ran as follows:—

"As there are no ready-made tiles available for the temple of the village deity, called Vemulamma, in the village of Madburapudis, the (number of) tiles borrowed from you is thirty thousand. These thirty thousand tiles, any one of us will deliver to you on demand after Pushya B 10 of the year Visvavasu (20th January 1906).

If you do not approve of the burning, etc., of the said tiles, and if any four respectable men you like, do not also approve of it, then we shall have your own tiles brought down from the roof of the temple and delivered to you. We shall have the delivery of the tiles to be made to you at your house."

The suit was brought six years after the tiles were lent and it was alleged that the plaintiff demanded the return of the tiles three months before the suit. The plaintiff contended that the cause of action arose on the date of actual demand and refusal and consequently he was in time. The defendants contended that the cause of action arose on 21st January 1906, when the plaintiff became entitled to performance under the letter and the suit, having been brought more than three years after that date, was barred. The District Munsif upheld the contention of the defendants and dismissed the suit.

JUDGMENT.—I am satisfied from a perusal of Exhibit A that the contract between the parties was, that to discharge the loan of 30,000 burnt tiles made to the defendants by the plaintiff in May 1905, the same number of properly-burnt tiles (not the identical 30,000 tiles after they had been, as intended, used by the 1st defendant and the father of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 in covering the temple roof, but the same number of burnt tiles) should be returned to the plaintiff on demand after 20th January 1906 and if the tiles offered in satisfaction are not approved by the plaintiff and his four panchayatdars the identical tiles lent, though they had been used in covering the temple roof, should be brought down from that roof and returned to the plaintiff. I think this contract was broken when the defendants failed to offer to deliver thirty thousand properly-burnt tiles on the 21st January 1906, the plaintiff's right to make a demand on the defendants for satisfaction of his claim under Exhibit A having arisen on the said 21st January 1906. That an actual demand is not necessary to establish a starting point under Article 132 of the Limitation Act, even though the document makes the money payable "on demand," has been established by the decisions of this Court. See Perumal Ayyan v. Alagirisami Bhagavathar 1 and Perianna Gounden v. Muthuvira Gounden (2).

As is said in Perumal Ayyan v. Alagirisami Bhagavathar (1), "on demand" is a technical expression meaning "immediately or forthwith." I cannot admit the petitioner's learned Vakil's contention that Article 49 applies to this suit brought for damages for breach of contract (based on a contract of loan of tiles), this suit not being a suit in tort for the wrongful taking, injuring or wrongful detention of specific moveable property or for the recovery of specific moveables.

Article 115 seems to me to clearly apply to this case, and not Article 120 (which was relied on by Mr. Chenchiah for the respondents and which is a much more general Article than 115 and which should be relied on only in the last resort). The suit was clearly barred when it was brought in 1913, and this revision petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Revision—Unreliable evidence—Conviction, legality of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act I of 1898), s. 439.

Where the persons who restored the stolen property to its owner deposed that it was recovered from the petitioner and he was consequently convicted under section 457, Indian Penal Code, but no name of any burglar was given in the first report to the Police and their evidence was not reliable according to the circumstances of the case:

Held, on revision that the lower Courts were not justified in believing it and convicting the petitioner.

Petition for revision under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code of the order of the Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 18th November 1914, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Lyallpur, dated the 12th September 1914, convicting the petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The bare perusal of the judgment of the Magistrate is sufficient to show that the conviction of the petitioner of an offence under section 457, Indian Penal Code, was wholly unjustified. The alleged burglary took place on the night between the 4-5th August 1914, the matter was reported to the Police on the evening of the 7th August; and the Police came to the village and commenced the investigation only on the 13th August. For this belated investigation the Police put forward the excuse that they were too busy with other matters to turn their attention to this case; but the question of the Police being busy or not is perfectly immaterial, and the fact that the investigation did not commence until about ten days after the alleged burglary has a very material bearing on the question whether any value can be attached to the result of that investigation.

For the prosecution it is stated that the complainant's cattle which had been stolen from his enclosure on the night in question were recovered by Hussain Ali Shah and Nadir from two thieves, one of them being the petitioner, before the report was made to the Police by Walia chaukidar. In the report the names of the burglars are not mentioned. Hussain Ali Shah and Nadir when they restored the cattle to the complainant did not mention to him the names of the person or persons from whom they had recovered them; and it was for the first time on the 19th of August that they (Hussain Ali Shah and Nadir) stated to the Police that the thieves were the petitioner and one Alia. Alia has been acquitted by the Magistrate, but the petitioner has been convicted upon grounds which appear to me to be thoroughly unsatisfactory. To his brother Walia ambavilar, Hussain Ali Shah stated on the 14th August that he had recovered the cattle from the petitioner and one Shami, but on the 19th August Hussain Ali Shah admitted to the Police that he had mentioned the name of Shami purely as guess work (qiayason), whatever that may mean. It is clear to my mind that Hussain Ali Shah is a perfectly unreliable witness, and I am surprised that the Magistrate should have convicted the petitioner on the strength of this man's testimony. The circumstances under which Hussain Ali Shah and Nadir came forward to give evidence against the petitioner clearly point to a false story having been concocted by the prosecution; in any case both these prosecution witnesses are unreliable and it was improper for the Magistrate to convict the petitioner on their evidence.

I accept this revision and setting aside the petitioner's conviction and sentence I acquit him.

Revision accepted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act I of 1898), s. 227—Charge, addition of, in appeal—Able to charge under section 143, Penal Code—Addition, whether valid—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 113, 426, 431.

EMPEROR P. BHIMAPPA ULVAPPA.

The addition by an Appellate Court to charges under sections 451 and 426 of a charge under section 143 of the Penal Code in appeal is not permissible inasmuch as the addition would have the effect of imposing a constructive responsibility for individual acts of all persons who were members at the time of the assembly.

The mere carrying of savalai kalis will not be presumed to be unlawful, and in determining the object of an unlawful assembly, the Court must find that the accused had an intention to use criminal force or commit some other offence at all costs and were not acting in self-defence.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1893, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate of Trichinopoly, in Criminal Appeal No. 35 of 1914, preferred against the judgment of the Town Second Class Magistrate of Trichinopoly, in Calendar Case No. 382 of 1913.

Messrs. E. R. Osborne and P. R. Narayanaswami Aiyar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.—We are unable to agree with the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that the addition of section 143, Indian Penal Code, to the charge at the hearing of the appeal did not place the appellants at any disadvantage in their defence under the second count of the charge.

The addition of this section would have the effect of imposing a constructive responsibility for individual acts of all persons who were members at the time of the assembly, whereas it would be necessary to prove the guilt of each of the persons charged for his individual acts if the charges were only under sections 451 and 426 of the Indian Penal Code. The section 143 should not have been added and must now be struck out.

As regards the first count of charge, the Magistrate has not addressed himself to a consideration whether the object of the assembly was unlawful as defined in section 141, Indian Penal Code. Ordinarily it may be said that there would be no presumption that the mere carrying of savalai kalis would be unlawful, and the Court must, therefore, find that the accused had an intention to use criminal force or commit some other offence at all costs and were not acting in self-defence.

We reverse the judgment and direct the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to re-hear the appeal in the light of the above remarks.

Where proceedings are submitted to a First Class Magistrate under section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code and he passes sentence in the case under section 380, the conviction must, for the purposes of appeal, be considered to be within the meaning of section 408 of the Code and the order is appealable to the Sessions Court. [p. 339, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate of Dharwar.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case notices were issued to the District Magistrate and the appellant, but there is no appearance. The facts which have given rise to this reference are briefly these:

The accused was tried on a charge under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code by a Second Class Magistrate. The Magistrate convicted the accused; but being of opinion that it was a case to which the provisions of section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code might be applied, under the proviso to that section he submitted the proceedings to a Magistrate of the First Class on the 22nd February 1915. The First Class Magistrate then, acting under section 380 of the Code, passed an order on the 4th March 1915 convicting the accused and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for one month and a fine of Rs. 25. The accused appealed to the Court of Session against this order of the First Class Magistrate. The learned Additional Sessions Judge, before whom the appeal came on for hearing, however, held that the appeal would not lie to his Court, but to the District Magistrate under section 407, Criminal Procedure Code, as he was of opinion that originally there was in this case a conviction by the Second Class Magistrate, and that that was the conviction from which an appeal could be and ought to be preferred. When the matter came by way of appeal before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate he was of opinion that the appeal really lay to the Court of Session, and accordingly submitted the papers to the District Magistrate in order that a reference may be made, if necessary, to this Court. The District Magistrate has now made a reference to this Court, and we have to consider the question, whether in this case an appeal lies to the District Magistrate from the Second Class Magistrate's order of conviction or whether it lies to the Court of Session from the conviction and sentence passed by the First Class Magistrate under section 380 of the Code.

It seems to me to be clear under the provisions of section 380 that when a case is submitted to a Magistrate of the First Class or a Sub-Divisional Magistrate as provided by section 562, that Magistrate may, thereupon, pass such sentence or make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been heard by him. It follows, therefore, that for the purposes of appeal ultimately the conviction recorded is a conviction by the First Class Magistrate or the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the sentence passed also is unquestionably a sentence passed by that Magistrate. Under section 408, therefore, the appeal lies to the Court of Session in this case, as the order of conviction and sentence complained of and to be complained of is passed by a First Class Magistrate under section 380.

The view taken by the Additional Sessions Judge involves a curious anomaly. According to him there would be an appeal from a conviction by a Second Class Magistrate to the District Magistrate, at a time when there would be no sentence to appeal from and when the proceedings might be pending before a First Class Magistrate under section 380 of the Criminal Procedure Code with powers to consider the propriety of that very conviction. Further, there would be either no appeal from the sentence or an appeal to the Court of Session when an appealable sentence is passed by a First Class Magistrate under section 380 of the Code. I do not see any indication in the Code to justify such a dissipation of conviction from sentence in one and the same case. I do not think that the scheme of the Code favours any such view, nor can I think that the proper interpretation of sections 380 and 562 leads to any such result.

We hold that the appeal in this case lay to the Court of Session. We accordingly set aside the order made by the Additional Sessions Judge on the 4th of May 1915 and direct that the appeal be heard and disposed of by the Court of Session according to law.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur that just as a sentence by a First Class Magistrate under section 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code is appealable to the Sessions Court, so a sentence by a First Class Magistrate under section 380 must also be held to be appealable to the Sessions Court. I think this must be so held, because the First Class Magistrate is given power not only to pass sentence, but to make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been heard by him, and if he thinks further inquiry or additional evidence on any point necessary, he may make such inquiry as specifically prescribed by section 380. His proceedings appear, therefore, to me to be practically a trial. The only difficulty in the way of this conclusion is that specific reference is made to section 349, but no reference is made to section 380 in the provision allowing appeals from the decisions of First Class Magistrates to the Sessions Court in section 408 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But after giving the matter my best consideration, it seems to me that the proceedings of the First Class Magistrate practically amount to a trial, and that, therefore, his decision must be held to be appealable within the meaning of section 408 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Order set aside.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), in support of the reference.

EMPEROR V. RAMA DHAN POWAR.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Thana, under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in a case where one Rama Dhan Powar was charged, under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, with murder by causing the death of his uncle, Balu Rama Powar, on the night of the 22nd April 1915. The Jury unanimously returned a verdict of "not guilty." But the learned Judge disagreed with that Jury, and being clearly of opinion that it was necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, he has accordingly submitted it, recording the grounds of his opinion that the accused should have been convicted of murder.

Upon this reference the whole case is open before us, and we have heard a complete argument. The result of that argument on our minds is to satisfy us that upon the evidence on the record the accused is entitled to a verdict of acquittal.

There is, we think, no doubt that the accused bore ill-will to his uncle, the deceased, whom he regarded as a sorcerer and to whose malign influences he attributed the illnesses which had befallen his wife and son. That, no doubt, would supply to the accused a motive for wishing to kill his uncle. It would also supply to the villagers and the Police a reason for suspecting the accused of his murder if no other more likely clue happened to present itself. It was natural then in the circumstances stated that suspicion should fall upon the accused, and it may be that that suspicion still rests upon him. But a man cannot be convicted of murder on suspicion, and the question remains whether the evidence on the record is such as would justify a conviction. It is clear that the learned and experienced Sessions Judge before whom this trial was had bestowed great care on the case. But we could wish that his charge to the Jury had been somewhat more moderate and neutral in tone, having regard to the undeniable infirmities which attach to the evidence for the Crown.

The evidence for the prosecution falls into three classes: the so-called judicial confession, the alleged extra-judicial confession, and the conduct of the accused. Dealing, first, with the judicial confession as it has been called, that is Exhibit 19 on the record and the record of it was made by Mr. V. H. Thakor, Second Class Magistrate and Mamlatdar of Kalyan. In place, however, of the certificate required by section 164 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, for the admissibility of such statements, we have a certificate in these words:

"I believe that this confession is not voluntary. It was taken in my presence and hearing and was read out to the person making it and admitted by him to be correct and it contains a full and true account of the statement made by him."

Upon this certificate it appears to us that the confessional statement is inadmissible in evidence being made under circumstances diametrically the opposite of those which the law requires as a condition precedent to the admissibility of a confession. The case appears to us stronger than that in Reg. v. Garbud Berhar (1), where a detailed confession, made by an accused before a Magistrate but retracted on being read over to the accused, was held to be inadmissible in evidence. It seems to us that the only course which the Second Class Magistrate could properly follow when he came to the conclusion that the accused was not speaking voluntarily before him was to refuse to continue to record the examining any further. The prosecution sought to remove this difficulty by calling the Second Class Magistrate and examining him as to the precise parts of the statement which, in his opinion, were involuntarily made. In our opinion, however, it is not competent for the prosecution by this means to supply the deficiencies which exist in this confession and which existed in it from the time it was recorded. Moreover, even if the confessional statement were held to be admissible in evidence, its value would, in our judgment, be nil, for a confession must be read as a whole, and this statement, which is self-contradictory, is simply incapable of being read as a whole so as to give it any sensible meaning. The Court would be driven to speculate whether it should believe the first inculpatory part of the statement or the second exculpatory part. For, both parts cannot be believed at once. We think, therefore, that the case of the prosecution is not advanced by reason of this so-called confession. We observe further that in one not unimportant particular the confession is curiously at variance with the evidence, which admits of no doubt. According to the confession the accused strangled the deceased with his own hands. According to the medical evidence that is an impossible theory, and the marks left on the deceased's body show decisively that the strangulation was by means not of human hands but of a cord or rope.

Next the prosecution relied upon what is called an extra-judicial confession, that is to say, a confession alleged to have been made by the prisoner to a group of villagers on the 23rd April at some time, presumably in the afternoon, though the time is not definitely stated. The case, however, for the Crown is that this confession was made before the arrival of the District Police on the night of the 23rd April. It is unfortunate that evidence as to this confession was excluded by the Committing Magistrate on the ground that the confession was made in the presence of the Police. We do not suggest that the learned Magistrate was not right in excluding that evidence. We mean only that for purposes of the present argument it is unfortunate that we are without the assistance which we should derive from a study of the depositions of the material witnesses before the Magistrate. For, the result is that the evidence concerning this extra-judicial confession is first disclosed before the Court of Session, and there the witnesses to it are Soma and Valku. Soma, whether for the reasons stated or for other reasons, made no allusion to this incident in the Magistrate's Court. Valku was not examined before the Magistrate at all. He was first called in the Court of Session. Now if Valku is to be believed, when this confession was made by the accused to a group of villagers the Patil was among the group, and it was the Patil who directed the questioning of the prisoner. If the Patil was present at all, it is, we think, natural and probable to suppose that it would be he who would conduct this informal examination of the suspect. But a confession thus made to the Police Patil would clearly be invalid. It is true that Soma says that the Patil was not present when the villagers were examining the prisoner. But we see no particular reason why the evidence of Soma on this point should be preferred to that of Valku. And, as we have said, if Valku's statement be accepted, the confession goes out of the case. The matter, however, does not rest there; for there is, it appears to us, grave reason to doubt whether this extra-judicial confession was ever made at all. The witness Hari Rama who was the deceased's employer, and who seems to be a witness of credit, deposes that "before the arrival of the Police we made inquiries about the murder. The accused did not make any statement before the Police came". And this is the more significant as Hari Rama was one of the village party who found the deceased's dead body on the bank of the river. The inference, therefore, would naturally arise that the alleged confession made to this group of villagers would be as familiar to Hari Rama as to any one else. Hari was examined on the 6th July before the Court of Session, and on the same day the Village Police Patil, Dharma Hari, was first examined. In this statement the Patil says: "We did not make any inquiry before the Police came. The accused Rama did not give me any information". Soma and Valku were examined on the 12th July, and the Patil recalled on the 12th July bethinks himself for the first time of this alleged confession made to the villagers. It seems to us, therefore, to detract materially from the value of his evidence that throughout his deposition made on the 9th July this circumstance seems never to have occurred to his memory. Moreover the Head Constable, Parbati Haibati, deposes that he arrived in the village on the night of the 23rd April, which would be some hours after this alleged confession to the villagers, yet Parbati makes no effort to arrest the accused, nor is the accused arrested even when the Sub-Inspector arrives on the following morning at 7-30. He is merely kept under surveillance, such as would be amply accounted for by the villagers' suspicion to which we have alluded, and is not arrested till the night of the 24th. It seems to us that this delay in the arrest of the accused is also difficult to reconcile with the theory that the accused had made a clean breast of his crime to his fellow-villagers on the afternoon of the 23rd. In this connection it may be added that the Patil's report, Exhibit 4, made after the villagers had found the body by the bank of the river, contains no mention of the name of the accused. We think, therefore, that the case against the accused is not materially strengthened by this alleged confession to the villagers.

There remains only the third piece of evidence upon which the prosecution have relied, and that consists in this that while the accused was under the surveillance of the District Police he was allowed to go home to take his meal, and that thereafter, under the pretext of retiring for natural purposes, he broke away from those who were guarding him and leapt down a well some twenty cubits deep. We see no reason whatever to doubt the truth of this evidence. But the significance of it is much more uncertain. For the prosecution it is contended that the true meaning of it is that the accused, conscious of his guilt which he had confessed, made this attempt to commit suicide, and it cannot be denied that the accused's conduct is consistent with such a theory. On the other hand, it seems to us to be even more consistent with the theory that the accused had not confessed, but that being goaded and annoyed and harassed by the villagers who were endeavouring to force him to confess the offence of which they suspected him, he was unable to tolerate such treatment further and jumped into the well in order, temporarily at least, to liberate himself. It seems to us that this explanation of the admitted conduct is even more probable than the explanation offered on behalf of the Crown. For if the accused, being guilty of this crime, had made a clean breast of it by means of an open confession to his co-villagers, we regard it as not specially likely that he would, within a short time of such confession, have sought to commit suicide. While, therefore, we have no doubt as to the truth of this evidence of the third item in the case for the Crown, we very gravely doubt whether the meaning of it is in favour of the theory which the Crown submits.

There is no other evidence in the case and, for the reasons which we have given, it seems to us impossible to hold that on this evidence any man could safely or properly be convicted whether of murder or of any other crime.

We direct, therefore, that the accused be acquitted and discharged.

Accused acquitted.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate of Trichinopoly, in Criminal Appeal No. 18

of 1915, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Town Second Class Magistrate of Trichinopoly, in Calendar Case No. 382 of 1913.

Messrs. E. R. Osborne and P. R. Narayanasami Aiyar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. R. Gant, for the Government.

ORDER.—After re-hearing the appeal the Deputy Magistrate has acquitted the appellants on the charges of house-trespass and mischief for the acts alleged to have been committed during the second stage of the disturbance.

He has confirmed the conviction of the present petitioners on the charges of rioting and voluntarily causing simple hurt for the acts alleged to have been committed during the first part of the occurrence, namely, when the car was being taken in procession through the streets and when the Ambalagars were carrying "sevalai kalis" in front of the car.

He draws the inference that the Ambalagars intended to commit rioting because the carrying of these bamboo sticks, which are said to be used for catching flower balls, was unprecedented on the occasion of the festival and was objected to by the Pallars. He adds: "To explain it still further, these sticks have been in the end the cause of the rioting, for it was the use of those sticks that was remonstrated (sic) by the Pallars and the obstinate attitude of the appellants in refusing to lay down the sticks that led to the riot." The Second Class Magistrate expressed his views in this way: "The Ambalagars (accused) have not gone to the Village Munsif or to the Police Station, which is close by, to represent the apprehended disturbance. The accused have on the other hand taken the law into their own hands. In the first place, the accused should not have taken the "sevalai kalis" in the face of the evidence tendered on their behalf that at a previous festival the sticks were wrested from their hands by the then Village Munsif as it foreboded rioting. They have committed this initial error. Secondly, the accused, knowing that the Pallars are stoutly opposing this procedure, should have lost no time to seek the help of the Police and Magistracy, who are in close vicinity, to prevent the disturbance."

This Court has already pointed out in In re Mukka Muthiriyar (1) that ordinarily there would be no presumption that the mere carrying of "sevalai kalis" would be unlawful.

In itself it was a perfectly lawful act although it may have been resented by the Pallars as against "mamul" and as an infringement of their rights. An assembly lawful in itself does not become unlawful merely by reason of its lawful acts exciting others to do unlawful acts [vide Beatty v. Gillbanks (2)].

Of course, if the Ambalagars used their sevalai kalis to make an unprovoked attack on the Pallars, the assembly, lawful in its origin, would have become at once an unlawful one. But the Deputy Magistrate has not found that these accused were the aggressors. He says it is not necessary to decide which party was the aggressor and how the riot actually arose. In his opinion, "these points need no consideration in a disturbance of this kind where both the parties have been accused of rioting." In this he is mistaken. The defence let in evidence to prove that while the accused were peacefully carrying the sevalai kalis, a large body of Pallars with sticks set upon them and beat and wounded them. The truth of this story has not been determined. At any rate there is no finding that it is false.

It was held in Kunja Bhuniya v. Emperor (3) that an assembly of persons lawfully exercising their lawful rights would not become an unlawful assembly by repelling an attack made on them by persons who had no right to obstruct them, nor by exceeding the lawful use of their right of private defence.

Individuals would doubtless be liable for particular acts of hurt committed by them, which they failed to justify as done in self-defence, but here the Magistrates have not found any of the petitioners guilty of causing hurt, except constructively.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 149, 34, 141, 144—Gang of twenty persons armed with deadly weapons—Arrest of two members of this gang by villagers—Subsequent murder of one of villagers by a member of gang at large—Arrested men whether liable for murder—Intention to commit dacoity—Burden of proof—Common object of gang.

Where a gang of persons making preparations to commit dacoity was discovered and pursued by a body of villagers who succeeded in arresting two members of the gang and just about this time one of the dacoits at large fired his gun and killed one of the pursuing party:

Held, that inasmuch as the separation of the two accused from the gang was prior to the murder, neither section 149 nor section 34 of the Penal Code applied, and the accused could not be held liable for a murder committed by a member of the gang to which they no longer belonged; [p. 346, col. 1.]

(2) that as the prosecution had failed to prove that there was an intent to commit dacoity, or that the party made any movement towards the commission of a dacoity, the charge under section 399 of the Penal Code must fail; [p. 346, col. 2.]

(3) that since there was no proof that the common object was dacoity, nor any evidence that any force or violence was used by the accused party up till the time when the two accused were unwillingly removed from membership of the party, the accused were not guilty of an offence under section 148, Indian Penal Code; [p. 347, col. 1.]

(4) that the accused assembly of about 20 persons in a field at dead of night, many of these persons being armed with deadly weapons, was undoubtedly an unlawful assembly within the meaning of section 141, Indian Penal Code, and since both the accused were so armed, they were liable to punishment under section 144. JUDGMENT.—This is a reference made by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad in a case in which the two accused, Hari Bijal and Ganda Hari, were charged inter alia with the murder of a village Pagi, named Jiva Becher. The learned Sessions Judge was for convicting the accused on the evidence, but the Jury were unanimously of opinion that the accused were "not guilty." The learned Judge, thinking it necessary in the interests of justice to do so, has submitted the case for this Court's orders.

Very briefly stated, the story for the prosecution is that on the night of the 8th April a gang of persons, making preparations to commit dacoity, was discovered in the village limits and was pursued by a body of villagers. But while the dacoits—so to call them—were yielding before the advance of the villagers, these two accused were seized and arrested by two of the villagers, and that at or about this critical moment one of the dacoits at large fired his gun and killed the deceased Pagi. The evidence is not consistent as to the precise time at which the Pagi was killed, and it seems to us that we are bound to adopt that version of the prosecution story which bears least heavily upon the accused. That is, the version, to which several prosecution witnesses deposed, that the two accused were arrested before the unseized dacoit shot at and killed the deceased. On that state of facts it appears to us that the two accused cannot be visited with liability for the murder committed by a member of that gang to which they no longer belonged. In so far as the common object of the unlawful assembly had been originally to commit a dacoity, that object at the critical time must, in our view, be taken to have been abandoned. And the two accused being by force of circumstances separated from the gang, the subsequent murder committed by one who still remained a member of the gang ought, we think, to be regarded in fact as an independent and isolated act for which the two accused cannot be held liable. The case would seem clearer if an interval of half an hour, say, had elapsed between the arrest of the two accused by the villagers and the shooting of the Pagi by the dacoit. Yet in substance there seems to us to be no difference between that case and the case which we have here, where some unknown interval, less than half an hour but appreciable, separated the two events. The important point is that the separation of the two accused from the gang was prior to the murder on the evidence for the prosecution, and in that view of the case we hold that neither sections 149 nor section 34 of the Indian Penal Code can render the accused liable for the murder as if the murder had been within the common intention or the common object of the accused and other persons. We find as a fact that it was not within such common intention or object.

We think, therefore, that on this reference the accused are entitled to be acquitted and discharged on the charge of murder.

We have now to deal with the appeals from the convictions recorded under sections 148 and 399 of the Indian Penal Code, the former section dealing with the offence of rioting when armed with a deadly weapon and the latter dealing with the offence of preparation made for dacoity. Here the Assessors were of opinion that the accused should be acquitted. In our opinion the evidence does not suffice to establish the guilt of either of these appellants under either of these charges.

It seems to us that much significance is due to the prosecution evidence as to the occurrences on the 7th April, that is, the day preceding this alleged crime. On that day it is clear that, according to the case for the prosecution, the Pagis of Pachham and the Pagis of Fedra had an interview concerning their reciprocal tendencies to theft, which ended in angry words and angry feelings. The accused No. 1 is Pagi of Pachham, and, according to the case for the prosecution, was the leader of the gang of the dacoits as the prosecution described them. The evidence, however, as to the events of the 7th April suggests that the mere assembly of the accused's party in the field of Devising to the south of Fedra is insufficient to show that the common object of that assembly was the offence of dacoity, or that the persons assembled were preparing to commit a dacoity. The more probable view, it seems to us, upon the prosecution's own evidence, is that the accused party were assembled there in order to intimidate the villagers of Fedra, but without any specific intent to commit dacoity. The burden of proving that there was an intent to commit dacoity lies, of course, upon the prosecution and that burden has not been discharged by the evidence which has been produced. Indeed, there is practically no evidence at all on the subject, if we except the doubtful statement of the witness Budhia that the accused's party were "sitting secretly as if lying in ambush to commit a dacoity." But the party made no movement towards the commission of a dacoity. On the contrary, they stayed where they were until challenged by the villagers of Fedra. This view of the case seems to us to receive support from the two great difficulties which confronted the prosecution before the Sessions Court. We mean, first, the grave divergence between the account given in the Mukhi's report and the account given in the eye-witnesses' depositions, and, secondly, the inability of these eye-witnesses to supply an intelligible explanation of how it happened, on the theory of a dacoity, that two of the intending dacoits were arrested, although the intending dacoits and the pursuing villagers do not seem to have come into any actual conflict, and of the pursuing villagers not one received any blow or injury except, of course, the unfortunate man who was killed on the spot.

We think that if due weight is allowed to these circumstances and to the evidence concerning the meeting at Ratanpur on the 7th April, the only conclusion possible is that the prosecution have failed to show that the accused's party were assembled with the object of committing a dacoity. The charge, therefore, under section 399 must fail.

The charge under section 148 is also unsustainable, because by the definition in section 146 the offence of rioting is constituted where force or violence is used by an unlawful assembly in prosecution of their common object. Now, here, as we have said, there is no proof that the common object was dacoity, and moreover, there is no evidence that any force or violence whatever was used by the accused's party up till the time when two accused were unwillingly removed from membership of that party. Therefore, the charge under section 148 also fails.

It seems to us, however, that the accused's assembly of about twenty persons in the field of Devising at dead of night, many of those persons being armed with deadly weapons, was undoubtedly an unlawful assembly within the meaning of section 141, the common object of those persons being, as is proved by the evidence, to commit mischief or criminal trespass. That being so, the two accused are properly liable as members of an unlawful assembly. The evidence shows that the first accused was armed with a gun and the second accused with a somewhat formidable knife. The consequence, therefore, is that both are liable to punishment under section 144. We convict the appellants under that section and sentence each of them to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

Convictions and sentences modified.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—This application arises out of a complaint made by one Kanaiyalal against two persons, Bai Mahalaxmi and Shankarlal. He charged these two persons under section 477 of the Indian Penal Code and alleged that a certain page containing two khatas of the accused in an account-book of his was torn and burnt by Bai Mahalaxmi in the presence of Shankarlal, when he had gone with his account book to demand money which was due by these persons to him.

The proceedings before the Magistrate were under Chapter XVIII of the Criminal Procedure Code, the offence charged being exclusively triable by a Court of Session. The Magistrate did not issue any process against Shankarlal, but examined him as a witness in the course of the inquiry before him. After recording the evidence which the complainant adduced, the learned Magistrate discharged the accused, Bai Mahalaxmi, on the ground that in his opinion the evidence was very interested and unreliable and that he did not at all believe it.

Against this order of discharge there was an application by way of revision to the Court of Session by the complainant. On this application the learned Sessions Judge has set aside the order of discharge and remanded the case to the Magistrate with instructions to commit. It is this order of the Sessions Judge that is now sought to be revised.

It is urged on behalf of the applicants, who were the persons originally charged by Kanaiyalal, that the learned Sessions Judge has erred in law in stating the powers of the Magistrate in dealing with a case under Chapter XVIII. The learned Sessions Judge says in his order that "the Magistrate has strained his powers. In the first place he seems to have himself cross-examined the prosecution witnesses. In the second place it is no part of the duty of the Committing Magistrate to find on the truthfulness of witnesses. If the evidence of witnesses, if true, make out a prima facie case against the accused and if the witnesses are not patently false, he ought to commit." And further on he says as follows:—"Yet the circumstances might be such—I do not say that they are or are not—that the trying Court ought to convict on the evidence of the complainant." In the order which he has made there is no indication of his opinion as to the credibility of the witnesses examined on behalf of the complainant, nor is there any indication of any circumstances which, in the opinion of the learned Judge, might justify a conviction by the trying Court.

With this view of the powers of the Magistrate before whom an inquiry is held under Chapter XVIII, I am unable to agree. It has been pointed out in a number of cases of this Court, of which I need refer to only one—In re Bai Parvati (1)—that if the evidence tendered for the prosecution is totally unworthy of credit it is not only within the power of the Magistrate, but it is his duty to discharge the accused under section 209 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It seems to me that in this case the Magistrate was well within his powers in cross-examining the prosecution witnesses and in considering whether the witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution were credible.

As regards the circumstances in the case outside the oral evidence, as I have already said, we have no indication in the order of the learned Sessions Judge nor have they been indicated to us in the course of the argument here on behalf of the complainant. We have heard the learned Pleaders on the merits of the case, and I am unable to say on a consideration of those arguments that the Magistrate under the circumstances of this case was not justified in describing the evidence as being very interested and unreliable. On that view of the case I am clearly of opinion that the Magistrate was not only justified but bound to discharge the accused.

There is one other point with regard to the accused Shankarlal. So far as he is concerned, there was no inquiry whatever against him under Chapter XVIII. On the contrary, he was examined as a witness in the case by the Magistrate. The learned Sessions Judge, however, in setting aside the order of discharge and in issuing instructions to the Magistrate to commit, apparently made an order against this petitioner also. It is difficult to see how, so far as he is concerned, any order to commit him to the Court of Session could be made without a preliminary inquiry under Chapter XVIII of the Code. In his case, there is this additional reason for not upholding the order of the Sessions Judge.

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 631; 35 B. 163; 12 Bom. L. R. 923; 11 Cr. L. J. 692.

EMPEROR v. BAI MA ALAXMI.

On these grounds I make the Rule absolute and set aside the order of the Sessions Judge.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. The complainant, Kanaiyalal's case briefly was that he had taken two khatas from the two accused, Bai Mahalaxmi and Shankarlal, and that some time afterwards on going to recover his money, they had been torn up by the accused Bai Mahalaxmi, with the connivance of the accused Shankarlal. Kanaiyalal had, therefore, to prove two things, one that he actually had taken khatas from the accused, and secondly, that they had been torn up by the accused woman with the connivance of the other debtor.

With regard to the first point the direct evidence consisted solely of the statement of Kanaiyalal. He produced, it is true, an account book, but that was unpagged and unindexed and was not capable of being tested by reference to any other account books, such as the day-book commonly kept by money-lenders. It is true that the remnants of a torn page appear in this book, but they were only the remnants containing no writing whatever on them and could, without any difficulty, have been subsequently inserted in the book. It is true that he called the Manager, Trikamlal, of the firm from whom, it was alleged, he got the money to pay the two accused, but that Manager was not able to give any very definite evidence in corroboration of the loan. His statements in fact did not agree with those of the complainant and the books of the firm merely showed loans to the complainant without any reference to their having been taken for the purpose of payment to either of the accused. Two other witnesses were cited in the vain endeavour to support the alleged khatas, one named Keshavlal, who alleged that he had been shown the khatas, and the other witness, Chimanlal, who alleged that he had heard an admission made to the effect that there were such khatas. It is difficult, in my opinion, to hold that these were credible witnesses as to the existence of the khatas.

With regard to the other point, the tearing up of the khatas, the sole evidence was that of the complainant, Kanaiyalal, and that was to the effect that they were torn up by the accused woman, Bai Mahalaxmi. He introduced another witness, Manilal, who was either a client or debtor of his who said that the following day some admission was made as to the matter by accused Shankarlal. It is again, in my opinion, difficult to hold that these were credible witnesses of the somewhat improbable story of the tearing up of the khatas.

It seems to me, therefore, that prima facie it was rightly held that there were no credible witnesses of the alleged offence and that the two accused were rightly discharged by the Magistrate. Nor does it appear to me that the witnesses were actually considered to have been credible witnesses by the learned Sessions Judge. What he stated was that their truthfulness ought not to have been considered and that they should not have been cross-examined and if their truthfulness had not been considered and they had not been cross-examined, then it would have been impossible to say that they were patently false witnesses, that is to say, that their bare statements without further investigation ought to have been acted on, and that if these bare assertions were not patently false, then the accused ought to have been committed for trial by the Sessions Court. But this does not seem to me to be the law laid down in the decisions. What has been insisted on in them is that not only shall there be witnesses in support of the charge but that they shall be credible witnesses. And in departing from this position and stating that all that is required is that they shall not be patently false, it appears to me that an error of law has been committed by the learned

SANKAR RANGAYYA v. SANKAR RAMAYYA.

Sessions Judge. The legal position has been sufficiently indicated in the case of Emperor v. Rautji Hari (2) and in a recent case in In re Bai Parvati (1). It appears to me, therefore, that for these reasons the order to commit the accused No. 1, Bai Mahalaxmi, and the accused No. 2, Shankarlal, passed by the learned Sessions Judge cannot be supported by this Court.

There is also in the case of accused No. 2 Shankarlal this further serious objection that no inquiry at all has as yet been made into the case against him with a view to his committal to the Sessions. No process seems to have been ever issued against this accused. He would, therefore, appear not to have been liable to any immediate order of committal by the Sessions Court.

I concur, therefore, that the order of the learned Sessions Judge in the case of both the accused must be set aside by this Court.

Rule made absolute.

ORDER.

TYABJI, J.—The first point involved in this revision case is, whether the desire of the parties to compound the offence of causing grievous hurt punishable under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code can affect our decision. The point arises in a case where two brothers brought a charge and counter-charge against each other for causing grievous hurt and rioting and each of them was sentenced by the Joint Magistrate to one month's rigorous imprisonment.

From these sentences they could not appeal, but they have applied in revision and are now desirous of compounding.

The composition of offences is dealt with in section 345 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Sub-section (1) specifies the offences which may be compounded without leave of Court by the injured person. It contains no reference to the stage at which the proceedings may lie.

Sub-section (2) provides that the offence of causing grievous hurt may, with the permission of the Court before which any prosecution for such offence is pending, be compounded by the person to whom the hurt has been caused.

Sub-sections (3) and (4) extend the sphere of composition by permitting it: (a) in the cases of abetments of and attempts to commit the offences that may be compounded and (b) by permitting guardians of minors, etc., to compound.

Sub-section (5) refers to cases where a person has been committed to trial or where he has been convicted and he has appealed, in either of which cases it is provided that no composition for the offence shall be allowed without the leave of the Court concerned.

Sub-section (6) gives to a composition the effect of an acquittal.

Sub-section (7) disallows composition except as provided by the section.

The section, therefore, contains provisions with regard to (a) the persons who may compound; (b) the nature of the offences that may be compounded; (c) the stage of the criminal proceedings at which the composition is sought to be made; (d) it also provides that in regard to some offences the mere consent of the injured person shall not suffice for composition; he must obtain the permission of the Court, the Courts being specified whose permission to compound has to be obtained.

Sub-section (7) must, therefore, be taken to mean that no offence shall be compounded except where the provisions of section 345 are satisfied as to each of these four matters.

The section mentions the Court before which the prosecution is pending, to which the accused is committed for trial and before which an appeal is pending. There is no reference to the High Court in its revisional powers. Conversely it is noteworthy that section 439 (which defines the powers and functions of the High Court in revision) does not refer to section 345.

It would, therefore, seem that if an offence were allowed to be compounded when the matter is pending before the High Court in revision, it could not be said that the composition was as provided by section 345 in two respects (1) as to the stage of the proceedings, (2) as to the Court which, it is provided by the section, must give leave. It follows that the offence cannot now be compounded.

It was argued before us that we are empowered (sitting in revision) to allow the composition to be made by reason of section 423 (1) (d) read with section 439 (1). For this argument it is contended that the giving of leave to compound is merely a consequential or incidental order, a contention that was accepted in Ram Piyari v. Emperor (1), but rejected in Ram Chandra v. Emperor (2). Knox, J., who decided the latter case sitting alone, was a party to the earlier decision also but his attention was not drawn to it and he does not notice it.

In connection with this argument I observe that the Code in no place specifically empowers any Court to give permission to compound; nowhere is there any special provision conferring distinct powers to sanction compositions. In section 345 (2) the permission of the Court is referred to as a condition precedent to the act of the parties having any effect; and in section 345 (5) the absence of such permission is mentioned as depriving the composition of any effect; but in each case it is assumed that the Court has power to give permission provided there is any occasion for granting permission.

The point of view from which the sub-sections are drafted is, however, that it is the injured person who has to be empowered to compromise and the difficulty in the way of compromise in revision is, in my opinion, not so much that the Revision Court has not been specifically authorised to grant permission, but that the parties are not allowed to compound except at the stages when the prosecution is pending, or the accused has been committed for trial, or an appeal is being heard from a conviction. The absence of any power being given to the injured person to compromise when matters are before the Revision Court is fatal by reason of section 345 (7).

In my opinion, therefore, the offence cannot be compounded at the present stage.

AYLING, J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment of my learned brother, and concur in the conclusion at which he has arrived on the preliminary question for our decision.

In my opinion section 345, Criminal Procedure Code, is exhaustive of the circumstances and conditions under which composition can be effected. No other meaning can be given to clause (7). With great respect to the learned Judges who decided Ram Piyari v. Emperor (1), I cannot see how an order permitting composition can be treated as an "incidental order" within the meaning of clause (d) of section 423, Criminal Procedure Code and I do not think that section confers on an Appellate Court any powers relating to composition independent of section 345.

BY THE COURT.—Dealing with the revision petitions on their merits we see no reason to interfere with the convictions. As regards sentences, the Public Prosecutor represents that in view of the family nature of the quarrel and the other circumstances of the case, it is not necessary to send the petitioners (who are now on bail) back to prison. We are disposed to take the same view, and we reduce the sentences in each case to the terms of imprisonment already undergone by the petitioners. The bail bonds are discharged.

Convictions upheld ; Sentence reduced.

Trial—Criminal Circulars of Bombay High Court, Circular No. 37—Trial on holiday, if irregular—Right of accused to defend himself.

A trial of an accused person on a Sunday or any other holiday would not necessarily make the proceedings invalid, but is irregular as being contrary to the provisions of Circular No. 37 of the Criminal Circulars of the Bombay High Court. [p. 352, col. 2; p. 353, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, the trial of an accused was commenced and practically finished on a Sunday, the accused being unable to engage a Pleader, and the judgment was pronounced on the following day:

Held, (1) that there was an irregularity in procedure which had prejudiced the accused who could not be said to have had a fair opportunity to defend himself; [p. 353, col. 1.]

(2) that the fact that the accused did not ask the Court to adjourn the case did not make any difference. [p. 353, col. 1.]

Criminal application for revision from conviction and sentence passed by the First Class Magistrate at Pandharpur confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge at Sholapur.

Mr. Jinnah (with him Mr. D. G. Dalvi), for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The petitioner in this case was arrested on a charge under section 457 of the Indian Penal Code on the 13th of January 1913. He was kept in custody at Pandharpur and tried on the 17th of January 1915, which was a Sunday. The trial was commenced and practically finished on that day. The judgment was given on the 18th of January. He was convicted and sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

In the petition before us he has complained that he was improperly tried on a Sunday, and that if he had not been so tried, he would have been in a position to engage a Pleader and to defend himself properly. It is not argued before us that the trial held on a Sunday is illegal. It seems to me, however, that having regard to Circular No. 37 of the Criminal Circulars of this Court, ordinarily it is not proper to hold a trial on a Sunday. In the present case it is not suggested that there was any urgency or any special circumstance for adopting this unusual course. I am, therefore, of opinion that under the circumstances of this case it was not proper for the Magistrate to have tried the petitioner on a Sunday.

From the facts disclosed in the petition here and from the report of the Magistrate which was called for on the petition to this Court, it appears that the accused was probably prejudiced in this case on account of the trial having been held on a Sunday. While he was in custody at Pandharpur on the 15th of January, he had sent a letter to his father at Hotgi through the Mamlatdar informing him that he was arrested and requesting his father and mother to go at once with money to Pandharpur. The mother arrived at Pandharpur with the money on Sunday, the 17th January, after the trial was over.

In re VENGOPAL MUDALY.

If the trial had not been held on the 17th January, it is probable that on the following day the accused would have been in a position to engage a Pleader and to make such arrangement for his defence as he might have thought proper. Under these circumstances it seems to me that there has been an irregularity in the procedure which has prejudiced the accused, and that the accused cannot be said to have had a fair opportunity to defend himself. It is quite true, as pointed out by the Magistrate in his report, that the accused did not request the Court on the 17th to adjourn the case, and when he was asked whether he had a Pleader, he said that he had none. But this circumstance by itself does not, in my opinion, affect the conclusion which I have already stated.

The result, therefore, is that we set aside the conviction and sentence and order a re-trial of the accused according to law.

We leave it to the District Magistrate to determine whether under the circumstances the re-trial should take place before the same or any other Magistrate.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. I have no doubt that the applicant bona fide intended to engage a Pleader. He was arrested on Wednesday night and on the Friday sent a letter to his father asking for pecuniary assistance. In reply to that letter, his mother arrived after the trial was over on the night of Sunday. It is true he was asked at the trial whether he had got a Pleader, but at that time having no answer to his letter, he naturally replied he had not got a Pleader. When his mother arrived on the night of Sunday, the trial was practically over. It was not, therefore, unnatural that she also did not specifically mention the need of a Pleader. It is moreover to be observed that there would probably have been no opportunity of engaging a Pleader on the spot on that day, which was a Sunday when Pleaders would not ordinarily attend the Court. The trial on a Sunday or any other holiday would not necessarily make the proceedings invalid, but it would, in my opinion, be irregular as contrary to the provisions of Circular No. 37 of the Criminal Circulars of this High Court.

It seems to me that the applicant was distinctly prejudiced by this irregularity in respect of his right to be represented by a Pleader, a right given to every accused person by the specific provisions of section 340 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The case against the applicant was not a petty one but serious, and was, in my opinion, one in which it was desirable that he should be defended by a Pleader. It is, therefore, necessary, in my opinion, to set aside the conviction and sentence and order a re-trial, which should be either before the same Magistrate or such other Magistrate as might be selected by the District Magistrate.

Conviction and sentence set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 415—Cheating—Wrongful gain & loss.

Section 4-5 of the Indian Penal Code does not require, and does not say, that to constitute the offence of cheating, the wrongful gain must be made out of the person deceived. It simply provides that there may be either wrongful loss to the person deceived or wrongful gain to the person who deceives. [p. 354, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—I think that in this case there can be no doubt that the convictions are right. The accused somehow or other got hold of orders sent to two different firms and sent value payable articles to the persons who had sent the orders. In one case it appears that the articles sent were not what were wanted, though, as stated, it may be that the market price of the articles actually sent was the same as or even a little more than the price of the articles ordered. In the other case, it appears that three tins of a particular medicine were wanted, and the accused sent two larger tins. The evidence is that they were practically of the same value as the three tins ordered. The accused in common with a large number of other persons in Georgetown carry on the business of what is called "V. P. firms"; that is to say, when men living outside Madras want certain articles which are to be had at the market these men receive their orders, buy the articles and send them by value payable parcel realising the price in that way. The profit they make is the commission which they receive from the shopkeepers. I think there can be little doubt that prosecution witnesses Nos. 2 and 7 were really deceived as to the man they were dealing with. They thought they were dealing with two other firms and not with the accused. The accused undoubtedly also made a profit in the nature of commission. It is argued by the learned Vakil for the accused that, granted there was deception, there was no fraud or dishonesty within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, and he has cited in support of his contention a ruling of the Punjab Chief Court reported as Kahn Singh v. Empress (1). I am of opinion that there was clearly dishonesty in this case, the dishonesty consisting in the wrongful gain which the accused made by imposing upon the prosecution witnesses Nos. 2 and 7. The law does not require, and does not say, that the wrongful gain must be made out of the person deceived. That is the other case of wrongful loss which also is a constituent of dishonesty. But the Code provides that it may be either wrongful loss to the person deceived or wrongful gain to the person who deceived. I confirm the convictions, but this is apparently the first offence of the accused and the sentences are heavier than called for. The sentence on the first charge is two months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 250, in default further rigorous imprisonment for four months. The sentence on the second charge is the same. The sentences of imprisonment are to run one after another. The accused is said to have already undergone about ten days' imprisonment. I remit the rest of the sentence of imprisonment. The fines will stand.

Conviction affirmed; Sentence modified.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), ss. 33, 145—Criminal trial—Statement made by witness before Committing Magistrate, admissibility of, in Sessions trial—Witness procurable—Practice—Procedure.

The application of section 33 of the Evidence Act in criminal cases ought to be confined within the narrowest limits. Where a witness is material, justice requires that he should, if possible, be examined at the trial in the presence of the accused. Where the evidence of a witness is not material, there is no need to introduce it under section 33. [p. 357, col. 2.]

Where in a Sessions trial, the evidence of an absent witness was very material and was relied upon by the Sessions Judge in his charge to the Jury, but he was not produced although he resided within the Court's jurisdiction and could have been procured without any very great delay or expense:

Held, that the deposition ought not to have been admitted and was not evidence. [p. 357, col. 2.]

Where the entire evidence of the complainant given before the Magistrate was admitted as a whole during the cross-examination of that witness in the Sessions Court and where it was intended to be used to contradict him:

Held that it was contrary to principle to admit the evidence in this manner without first drawing the attention of the witness to every point upon which it was to be used to contradict him. [p. 358, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—In this case we are of opinion that the conviction and sentence must be reversed and set aside. There are points in the case which tell very strongly against the accused. All these points have not, in our opinion, been satisfactorily cleared up. There are other points in the case, however, which create so strong and reasonable a doubt as makes it, in our opinion, impossible to uphold the conviction.

LAKSHMAN TOTARAM v. EMPEROR.

The particular facts which are necessary to be mentioned, as alleged by the prosecution, are that, on the 23rd of July 1913, the complainant, Supdu, an old man, purchased two stamp-papers of the value of Rs. 6 and 4 respectively with the object of executing a mortgage of one of his fields to a man called Dagdu for a sum of Rs. 1,000. He says that he was in need of the money to pay a Savkar Patil to whom, it appears, Dadu himself was also indebted. Having procured the stamp-papers, the complainant Supdu, contends that he took them to Waman, the kulkarni of the village, with the object of getting the mortgage-deed drafted, at any rate, to the extent of obtaining the boundaries of the land, which he proposed to mortgage, from the kulkarni. The kulkarni declined to write the deed until the mortgagee was brought before him. It is part of the complainant's case that the kulkarni desired to write the deed in order to obtain the writing fee. Supdu says that he then went in quest of Dagdu who lives in the village of Mamoorabad, some distance away from Neri. Dagdu, according to Supdu, was unwell and refused to return with him and when Supdu returned five days later, on the 28th of July 1913, he says that he learnt that Waman had given the blank papers to Laxman Totaram. Two days later Supdu says that he was informed that Laxman Totaram had forged a sale-deed of 3rd of Survey No. 57, a land belonging to Supdu in his (Laxman Totaram's) own favour. It appears that, on the 28th of July 1913, Laxman Totaram, the accused, did present such a deed attested by four witnesses and written by one Nathu Laxman purporting to be signed by the line or mark of the complainant, Supdu, for registration at the Sub-Registrar's office at Jamner. As the executant, Supdu, was not there, the Registrar refused to register. Subsequently, on the 18th of August 1913, Supdu filed a complaint against both Waman and Laxman Totaram in respect of the same deed which had thus been presented for registration. This complaint was verified on the 20th of August 1913. On the same day, the accused Laxman Totaram applied to the Registrar for notice calling upon the complainant, Supdu, to appear and acknowledge the execution of the deed. This notice was served on Supdu but he did not comply with it. Accordingly, on the 30th August 1913, the Sub-Registrar finally declined to register, and, according to a statement made by the accused before the Magistrate, Mr. Joglekar, the impugned deed was returned to him by post. Now the trial upon the complaint made on the 20th August by Supdu was referred in the first instance by Mr. Kelkar, the Magistrate to whom the complaint was presented, to a mamlatdar called Mr. Raoji for preliminary investigation. This investigation appears to have gone on for some time between the 20th and 30th of August. It is a curious circumstance that although the inquiry was into the alleged forgery of this sale-deed, the deed itself was not before the inquiring officer. He appears to have procured the particulars of it, the names of the writer and attesting witnesses from the Registration Office and it is thus clear that the deed was with the Registrar while the inquiry was in progress. Afterwards by the order of his superior officer, Mr. Kelkar, the mamlatdar, Mr. Raoji, obtained the deed probably, though this is not apparent from his own report, from the accused himself and forwarded it to Mr. Kelkar. That Magistrate, after duly considering the preliminary inquiry made by the mamlatdar, Mr. Raoji, dismissed the complaint under section 203, that is to say, the conclusion of both these officers was that there was not even a prima facie case against the accused, Laxman Totaram. The Sessions Judge, probably Mr. Clements, directed further inquiry under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This inquiry was entrusted to another Magistrate, Mr. Joglekar, who took it up sometime in March 1914 and appears to have gone very thoroughly into the matter. Many witnesses were examined before him and he wrote an elaborate judgment ending with the discharge of the accused persons, Waman and Laxman Totaram. It is to be borne in mind that up to this time both these men were charged equally by the complainant, Supdu, with the forging of this sale-deed. On the 27th of November 1914, the Sessions Judge (Mr. Dutt) this time, we believe, (though this is not apparent on the record) acting under section 436 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directed Mr. Joglekar to commit the accused person, Laxman Totaram, to the Sessions. He accepted the Magistrate's conclusion with regard to the other accused Waman.

Now the statement of Waman throughout had been that Supdu's story about giving him the two blank stamp-papers in order to write the mortgage-deed upon them was absolutely false, and this story, as we have now shown, appears to have been accepted by three inquiring Magistrates and the Sessions Judge himself. But if that story is true, it strikes at the foundation of the whole case, and that is one point which, we think, tells very strongly in favour of the accused Laxman Totaram. If we are correct in saying that it was Mr. Dutt himself who directed Mr. Joglekar to commit Laxman Totaram for trial, then it is clear that the trial conducted before that learned Judge would have been, from the prisoner's point of view, open to very serious exception. We have not the learned Judge's order under section 436, but we presume that he must have entirely rejected the whole of Mr. Joglekar's reasoning and appreciation of the evidence, so far as that went in favour of the accused Laxman Totaram.

If we are right so far, then it is equally clear that when Laxman Totaram's trial began before the Sessions Judge, that officer's mind must have been considerably biassed against the accused. We do not mean to impute any impropriety to the Judge in this matter since, no doubt, it is the practice in the mofussil to direct Magistrates under section 436 to commit to the Sessions Court and not infrequently it is the same Judge who, after having made the order under section 436, himself tries the case. On general principles, however, this we should say, is, where avoidable, very undesirable. And where the case, as here, presents so many doubtful points, it is a consideration which, we think, ought not to be entirely overlooked. But we do not make it in any way determinative of our decision. That rests upon reasons drawn from the evidence on record as it stands in the light of certain admitted facts and dates. It is quite clear, in our opinion, there would have been no conviction of Laxman Totaram but for his own conduct. What tells most strongly against him is that very shortly after the inquiry conducted by Mr. Kalkar had resulted in the dismissal of the complaint, the accused, Laxman Totaram, managed to lose the impugned sale-deed. His account of this is that after the termination of this inquiry in October 1913 he had taken the deed to a Vakil to obtain that legal gentleman's advice upon it. The Vakil then informed him that since registration had been refused and could not now be obtained, the deed was, for all practical purposes, mere waste paper. Adopting that view, the accused says, he took no particular care of it and that he believes that he dropped it out of his pocket while driving to his own village. The fact, however, lends itself to sinister comment and it is the more regrettable in a case of this nature that a document which is alleged to be a forgery should not be before the trying Court.

Again, the prosecution most strongly relied upon, the testimony of the four attesting witnesses. These agree in saying that they did not attest the signature of the complainant, Supdu, at all. That signature, as we are told, takes the form of a mere line which, the writer says, was made in his presence by the executant, Supdu, and the attestation of the witnesses is intended to guarantee that fact. All of them, however, say that the deed was brought to each separately by Laxman Totaram and that each in turn thus attested it, although the word "attest" so used is really an abuse of language. What they did attest was merely the deed as it stood, having a line which was said to be the mark of Supdu, and that is, of course, no guarantee that the line was in fact drawn by Supdu himself. It is contended, and there is force in the contention, that this is the kind of story which witnesses, situated as these witnesses were, would have been likely to tell. They knew that there was a great trouble about this document and they might very well have thought that the safest course was to tell a story which, whatever the decision of the Courts might ultimately be as to the genuineness or otherwise of the document, would have exposed them to no risk. There is, on the other hand, the writer Nathu who, of course, is obliged to substantiate the version of the accused. His position is quite different from that of the attesting witnesses and since he did write the deed and purports to have witnessed the mark made by Supdu, he could hardly go back upon that in his evidence without making himself liable as an abettor of forgery, if there had been a forgery. His evidence, therefore, although it tells in the accused's favour, has to be materially discounted upon such grounds.

The prosecution, again, very strongly relies upon the fact that the accused, although he must have known that no registration could be effected in the absence of the executant, Supdu, took the deed to the Registrar's office on the 28th of July.

It is further urged upon us that the accused says that the deed was in fact executed by Supdu on the 24th of July, whereas the evidence in the case proves conclusively that he was not in Neri on that day. It is, indeed, the conduct of the accused himself with reference to the registration of this document which has occasioned us so much difficulty in coming to our conclusion on the case as a whole. It is true that he must have known that his journey on the 28th to Jamner could produce no result and the only way it can be explained is by adopting his own explanation, namely, that he believed that Supdu was following him. However that may be, Supdu did not come to the Registrar's office and it was not until the 29th, the very day on which Supdu's complaint was verified, that the accused applied for notice. Now after that notice had been served and not complied with by the complainant, Supdu, and, as a result, registration had been finally refused by the Sub-Registrar on the 30th August, the accused took no further steps whatever to obtain registration of the deed. It is, therefore, true that by the time the deed was lost, it could have been of no use to him. It had remained unregistered till the time prescribed for appealing had elapsed. The rejection would, therefore, have been final and the deed being unregistered, could have no legal effect. Nevertheless, if the accused's story is true, it is strange that he should have allowed a genuine document of this kind to become nugatory without an effort. Against this, must be set the consideration that a complaint had been actually made by that time with reference to this very deed and that the complainant declared that it was a forgery. In such circumstances the accused might well have thought that there was very little likelihood of an appeal to the Registrar being successful, at any rate until the criminal inquiry had terminated.

Now we have to consider another point which is of capital importance. The story of the complainant, Supdu, is that he required Rs. 1,000 from Dagdu and Dagdu had agreed to advance this to him upon a mortgage. It is obvious that upon this point the evidence of Dagdu was very material. He was not, however, examined in the Sessions Court, but the Judge appears to have admitted the deposition he made before the Magistrate under section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act. The conditions of that section, however, have not been complied with and no attempt appears to have been made in the Sessions Court to comply with them. Dagdu is, we are informed, still alive. He resides in a village within the jurisdiction of the Sessions Court and his attendance could have been procured without any very great delay or expense. Now, the application of such a section as 33 in criminal cases ought, in our opinion, to be confined within the narrowest limits. Where a witness is material, justice requires that he should, if possible, be examined at the trial in the presence of the accused. Where the evidence of a witness is not material, there is no need to introduce it under section 33. In this case, there can be no doubt that Dagdu's evidence was very material and the learned Sessions Judge has relied upon it in his charge to the Jury. There could have been no serious difficulty in bringing him before the Court and it was the right of the accused to have him there subjected to cross-examination, so that the Judge and the Jury might form their own opinion of the trustworthiness of the witness. It can only be in very extreme cases that it is right to make use of the evidence of an absent witness under section 33 in a criminal trial where that evidence, if true, would be extremely material, and this certainly was not such a case. We think, therefore, that the deposition of Dagdu ought not to have been admitted at all and is not evidence with which we are competent to deal now.

Again, it appears to us in view of all that had occurred that the evidence of Waman, kulkarni, was very material. The prosecution might well say that since that evidence practically destroyed their own case, it was not for them to call him. We think, however, that the Court itself might very well have required his attendance, even if the accused had declined to call evidence on his own behalf. If Waman had given evidence in the Court of the same kind as his statement made during the inquiry before Mr. Joglekar and if that evidence had been believed, it is difficult to see how the present conviction could have been arrived at. There are other witnesses who were examined at earlier stages in the course of this inquiry, but who were not tendered for cross-examination in the Sessions Court. It is the accused's allegation that had many of these witnesses been cross-examined at the trial, their evidence would have been of great assistance to him.

Another defect in the procedure of the Sessions Judge is that the entire evidence of the complainant given before the Magistrate, Mr. Joglekar, was admitted as a whole during the cross-examination of that witness. Now, it is quite clear that if his previous deposition was intended to contradict him, it was contrary to principle to admit the evidence in this manner without first drawing the attention of the witness to every point upon which it was to be used to contradict him. It is equally clear that if the statement was intended to corroborate the witness as a whole, it could not have been put in in cross-examination. What actually happened, appears to have been that the witness was old and deaf and as the accused desired to make use of many statements in his former deposition which the prosecution had neglected to elicit from him at the Sessions trial, it was suggested by the cross-examining Counsel that if the witness admitted generally that all these statements were true, they might be put in, thus saving a great deal of time and trouble in the way of repeating each question and eliciting the same answers from him again in detail. To such a procedure no serious exception need be taken, but when it is combined with the same use of the same material for the purpose of contradicting the witness, the procedure followed by the learned Judge is obviously objectionable, and we think that in every criminal trial Judges cannot be too careful to conform strictly with the principles of evidence.

Now, in the absence of Dagdu's evidence before the Sessions Court we should certainly not make use of any part of the statement he made before the Magistrate which, we think, had been wrongly admitted, to prejudice the accused. But there is much in it which favours the accused person here and, therefore, we think no injustice can be done if we point out that Dagdu clearly had not the command of so much money as to be able to make a loan of Rs. 1,000. His statement before the Magistrate, such as it is, suggests to us that the preliminaries of Supdu's story, in so far as they relate to the first transaction with Dagdu, are probably untrue. If, then, we find the story shaken at its foundation by the statement made by Waman on his own trial and accepted there and if we find again that the preliminaries of that story are not borne out by the evidence of the only material witness, Dagdu, it is clear that the conclusions reached by the learned Judge and one Assessor become at once exposed to criticisms from points of view not taken by the Judge himself and are open to serious and reasonable doubt. There is, in our opinion, an antecedent improbability in the kulkarni having deliberately given these blank papers to the Patil, Laxman Totaram. No reason is suggested why he should have done so and since it is the complainant's case that he (the kulkarni) wished to retain the papers in order to earn a fee by drafting the mortgage-deed upon them, this conduct becomes the more inexplicable. Then we have his own statement that they were never entrusted to him and that he never saw the papers. We say this from the attitude he adopted throughout the double trials in which he was himself an accused and there can be no doubt that had he been called, he would have adhered to the statements he then made. The fact that he was not called proves conclusively enough that the prosecution did not expect any assistance from him.

Then, again, there is to be considered the undeniable fact that after this complaint had already been made against him, the accused required the Sub-Registrar to issue notice to the complainant, Supdu, to come before him and acknowledge the correctness of the deed. If it had really been a forgery, it seems strange that the accused, Laxman Totaram, should have taken so bold a course at such a time. It may be suggested that as he had the writer with him and inasmuch as

In re KARUPPAN SAMBAN.

Supdu cannot write at all, he might hope easily to prove, in face of Supdu's own denial, that the line on the document was really Supdu's mark. Again, it is a strong point which we have not overlooked against the accused, that the consideration he alleges for the forged deed is money which he says that he advanced about a year before the events we have mentioned, occurred, on the occasion of the marriage of Supdu's granddaughter, Tulsi, with the accused's son, Kanya. There was such a marriage undoubtedly and we may accept Ganpat's (son of Supdu's) statement corroborated by that of the accused, that the marriage occurred somewhere about June 1912. The story which Supdu tells appears to us to be, on the face of it, absurd. He says he himself was wrongly confined and that he contributed Rs. 50 only to the marriage expense while Laxman Totaram defrayed the balance. On the other hand, it has not been made clear on behalf of the accused that he really expended Rs. 1,000 on Supdu's account for the purpose of this marriage. If that be the true story, Laxman Totaram should have had little difficulty in proving this by the production of vouchers and memos, of accounts. Nothing of the kind was attempted in the Sessions Court and Counsel for the appellant here protests that the point did not occur to any one during that trial, and that is the only reason why the accused did not meet it. It is certainly true that no great stress seems to have been laid upon this point, obviously material, even essential, we might say, though it is.

Lastly, the Government Pleader relies upon Sakham's evidence. In our opinion he belongs to a class of witnesses with whom we are too familiar in mofussil experience. If we could have said anything with confidence about any part of the case, we should have said that this witness, at any rate, was entitled to no credence whatever. He pretends to have come from his village which is at a distance of some fifteen miles from Neri on the evening of the 22nd of July. He admits that he is a relative of the accused and that is the sole ground upon which the learned Government Pleader insists that he ought to be believed. But if he were the relative of the accused and not acquainted with Supdu, it is certainly strange that he should not have gone to the house of the accused, the Patil of the village. Next morning he learned that Supdu and his son had gone to the kulkarni. He followed them there just in time to witness Supdu making over the two stamp-papers to the kulkarni and requesting him to fill them in with the boundaries of his land. He then appears to have departed, accompanied by Supdu, to a village in which Dagdu does not reside. The whole of his story is absolutely false and tends to strengthen doubts arising out of the many grounds we have already indicated.

Our conclusion upon the whole matter is that although we think the case is one of very grave suspicion against the accused, there survive so many elements of doubt and the trial is so irregular in more than one important point that it would be unsafe to confirm the conviction and sentence. We, therefore, set it aside and direct that the accused be acquitted and discharged.

Conviction set aside.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.—Apart from the evidence of prosecution witnesses Nos. 7 and 8 that they recognise the accused, which the Sessions Judge considers doubtful, there is the evidence of prosecution witnesses Nos. 5 and 6 that they saw the accused running away after stabbing, and there are three dying declarations (Exhibits D, E and H) in which the deceased named the accused as his assailant.

But it is contended that Exhibit D, the principal of these, has not been properly proved, because the Magistrate who recorded it was not examined as a witness in the case. Reliance for this contention is placed on In the matter of the Petition of Samiruddin (1), Gouridas Nomasudra v. Emperor (2) and King-Emperor v. Mathura Thakur (3). A similar observation to that in In the matter of the Petition of Samiruddin (1), to the effect that when the Magistrate who records the dying declaration is not the Committing Magistrate and it is taken in the absence of the accused, it is not admissible unless the recording officer is examined as a witness, occurs also in Panchu Das v. Emperor (4). The learned Judges have not stated their reasons for this position, nor have they explained on what sections of the Criminal Procedure

Code and the Evidence Act it is based. In Gouridas Nomasudra v. Emperor (2), it is conceded that an oral statement of a deceased person as to the cause of his death, if made in the absence of the accused, may be proved by any one who heard it made, as well as by the person who recorded it. That is sufficient for the purpose of the case, as Exhibit D has been proved by the Sub-Assistant Surgeon who heard the statement being made and signed it. With all due deference, we are unable to follow the learned Judges who decided In the matter of the Petition of Samiruddin (1) and King-Emperor v. Mathura Thakur (3), when they say that the only way of proving such a statement is by calling a person who heard it made and permitting him to refresh his memory from the writing under section 159 of the Evidence Act. Whether they are treated as written statements of deceased persons or as written records of verbal statements, section 32 (1) allows dying declarations which have been reduced to writing to be admitted as relevant facts. They thus become substantive evidence of the circumstances leading to the deceased person's death when the cause of the death is in question. A statement taken in the absence of the accused from a witness for the prosecution is described as a 'deposition' in section 512, Criminal Procedure Code, but sections 157 and 158, Evidence Act, show that, if it satisfies the conditions of section 32, it is nevertheless a 'statement' and as such is relevant whether the absence of the witness is caused by his death or by some other cause which makes him incapable of giving evidence in person. Since the explanation to section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code was added by the Code of 1898, the objection to Magistrates not having jurisdiction in the case recording dying declarations has lost its force.

Again section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, declares that confessions recorded under this section shall be recorded in the manner prescribed by section 364 for recording the confessions of accused persons, but mere statements of witnesses shall be recorded in one of such manners as are prescribed for recording evidence as the Magistrate may think best for the purpose. To lay down, as was done in King-Emperor v. Mathura Thakur (3), that dying declarations to be of use should, as a rule, set out the exact questions put to the dying person and the answer returned by him is, in effect, to insist on a procedure which the Code only makes obligatory in the examination of accused persons. How far the Court will treat the facts stated therein as proved by such statements is quite another matter.

When, as here, the dying declaration has appended to it a certificate that it has been read over to the deponent and declared to be correct and this is signed by the Magistrate who recorded the statement, section 80 of the Evidence Act creates a presumption that the circumstances under which it is stated to have been taken are true, the investigation by the Magistrate being a judicial proceeding. In this case, we have the additional security that the Medical Officer was present when the statement was taken and certified that the patient was in his senses at the time.

The other two statements, Exhibits E and H, recorded by the Village Magistrate and the Head Constable, have been proved by examining as witnesses Nos. 3 and 4 the officials who took them. They also are not inadmissible, although the value of Exhibit E, the earliest statement on record, is lessened by its being a joint statement of the deceased and of P. W. No. 6 who was simultaneously wounded, so that it is difficult to say how much of the statement represents the deceased's own words.

Some discrepancies are apparent by comparing the statements of the deceased made at different times with each other and also by comparing them with the depositions of the witnesses examined in the case, but they are not so serious as to cast doubt on the essential truth of the prosecution story.

We think that the Sessions Judge and the Assessors were right in coming to the conclusion that the accused was the person who stabbed the deceased. The nature of the wound which pierced the heart indicates his intention to kill. Two motives have been put forward for the crime, one being the immorality of the deceased who was admittedly keeping the accused's sister, and the other being the deceased's refusal to send his sister, who was the accused's wife, to her husband. Both motives are mentioned in the deceased's statement to the Police, but only the former in his statement to the Magistrate. The Judge accepts the latter. It is difficult to say which was the real cause of the murder, but we consider that from any point of view, this is not one of those cases in which we should take the extreme step of altering the sentence from transportation for life to one of death.

We, therefore, confirm the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal. We do not interfere in the criminal revision case.

Sentence confirmed.*

Where in a trial for an offence under section 471, Indian Penal Code, for using a promissory note as genuine knowing or having reason to believe that it was a forged document, it appeared that the accused had previously been tried for abetting the forgery of the same document under sections 467 and 109, Indian Penal Code, but had been acquitted:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as no doubt could have arisen in the first trial as to the offence constituted by the facts proved, the case did not fall within the scope of section 236 of the Criminal Procedure Code and, therefore, was not governed by sub-section (1) of section 403; [p. 362, col. 1; p. 364, col. 1.]

(2) that the series of acts beginning with the forgery and ending with the user of the forged document in a Civil Court to support a civil claim must be regarded as so connected together as to form the same transaction or carrying through of a single pre-determined plan, so that under section 235 (1) of the Code it would have been competent to try the accused for both offences at the same trial,

(3) that the plea of autrefois acquit was bad also for the reason that the case fell under sub-section (4) of section 403 of the Code, since the Court which acquitted the accused on the charge of abetment of forgery was not competent to try the offence under section 471, Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as at the time of the earlier trial no sanction for prosecution under section 471 had been given under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Criminal appeal from conviction and sentence passed by the Additional Sessions Judge at Ahmedabad.

Mr. T. R. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

BACHELOR, J.—This is an appeal from a conviction and sentence passed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad. The appellant has been convicted under section 471 of the Indian Penal Code of using as genuine a forged document. He was previously tried before the Court of Session in Ahmedabad under sections 467 and 109, that is to say, on a charge of abetment of forgery in relation to the same document, Exhibit 4, in respect of which he is now charged under section 471, and on the charges under sections 467 and 109 the appellant was acquitted by the Court of Session.

The first point taken in the appellant's favour is that this previous acquittal was a bar to the present trial under section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The contention is that the appellant's case falls under the first sub-section of section 403. That sub-section provides that a person once acquitted shall not be liable to be tried again on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under section 236, or for which he might have been convicted under section 237. Now, sections 236 and 237 contemplate the case where it is doubtful upon the facts, which can be proved, which of several offences will be constituted by those facts. In illustration (a) is put the case where a person is accused of an act which, upon the facts provable, may amount to theft, or to receiving stolen property, or to criminal breach of trust, or to cheating. Section 237 merely carries on the procedure applicable to cases provided for by section 236. It appears to me that the facts of the present appeal are wholly outside the scope of section 236. For, upon the facts which were capable of proof at the earlier trial, it could never, at any moment, have formed the subject of doubt what the particular offence was which could be established against the prisoner. The only facts appearing in proof at that trial were facts which went to establish the abetment of forgery: that offence, and no other, was the offence constituted by the facts then capable of proof. In the present prosecution, upon certain added facts, the evidence led goes to show that the prisoner committed the offence of dishonestly using a forged document, knowing that it was forged, and there can be no doubt but that if this evidence is believed, that is the particular offence constituted by the facts which can now be proved. We have not, therefore, before us such a case as section 236 contemplates, that is to say, a case where, upon the facts proved, it was doubtful what should be the true view of the offence constituted. It follows that the case is not governed by sub-section (1) of section 403.

In my opinion, the case falls under section 235, sub-section (1) of the Code, and if that is so, then admittedly under sub-section (2) of section 403, the accused's plea is unsustainable by virtue of the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 403. The series of acts beginning with the forgery and ending with the user of the forged document in the Civil Court to support the civil claim must, I think, be regarded as so connected together as to form the same transaction, or carrying through of a single pre-determined plan, so that under section 235 (1) it would have been competent to try the accused for both offences at the same trial. And I have no doubt that these two offences would be distinct offences within the meaning of section 403 (2), and not merely separable offences, as that term is explained in section 35 of the Code.

JIVRAM DANKARJI V. EMPEROR.

Moreover, it appears to me that the appellant's plea is bad for another reason, namely, because the case falls also under sub-section (4) of section 403. For the Court which acquitted the prisoner on the charge of the abetment of forgery was, in my opinion, not competent to try the present offence under section 471, inasmuch as at the time of the earlier trial no sanction for the prosecution under section 471 had been given under section 195 of the Code. But section 195 (c) provides that in such a case as this, "no Court shall take cognizance" of any offence punishable under section 471 of the Indian Penal Code, "except with the previous sanction" of the Court in which the document was produced; in other words, as I understand it, the grant of such a sanction is a condition precedent to the Court's jurisdiction to try the offence under section 471, so that without that sanction the Court is not competent to undertake the prosecution. This view is, I think, supported by the decision in In re Samsudin (1) and though that ruling was delivered under the Code of 1882, the section of the old Code was worded in substantially the same terms as those employed in our present section 537. It was objected by Mr. Desai that section 537, clause (b), shows that a prosecution, though undertaken without the sanction prescribed by section 195, cannot be said to have been undertaken without jurisdiction. That, however, in my view, is not a legitimate inference from the section, which aims only at curing certain irregularities of procedure and to that end enacts that, "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained", no finding is to be reversed by reason of the want of any sanction required by section 195. The very utmost that could be made of this provision would be an argument relevant only if the trial of the offence under section 471 had proceeded without a sanction and had resulted in a conviction. It might then have been contended, and contended against the appellant's interests, that the conviction was valid notwithstanding the want of the sanction. I say nothing of the merits of such an argument because, in truth, we have nothing now to do with any consideration of this sort. It is enough to say that since there has been no conviction under section 471 without a sanction, those facts do not exist which alone can call section 537 (b) into operation. For these reasons I hold that the present plea is excluded by sub-section (4) of section 403.

On the merits there can, I think, be no question but that the learned Judge below is right and that the appellant had knowledge that this document was a forged document and used it dishonestly.

As to the question of sentence, it is true that the appellant is an old man and that he has been subjected to two criminal trials. At the same time, his offence is in itself a serious one, and he has had a specially light sentence awarded to him, no doubt, on a due consideration of these circumstances in his favour which I have noticed.

I think, therefore, that the sentence cannot be reduced, but that the conviction and sentence should be confirmed.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur as to the question of law. The first trial was for abetment of forgery and failed as the forgery was not proved to have been by the particular co-accused forger. The second trial was for knowingly using the forged document in a Civil Court.

It seems to me that no doubt could have arisen in the first trial as to the offence constituted by the facts which could have been proved so as to have justified an alternative charge or conviction under section 236 or section 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was not a case like the illustration (a) to the former section, where the facts provable might have established either theft or receiving stolen property and where the necessary additional facts were not present to render possible a determination definitely whether the offence of theft or of receiving stolen property had been committed. The facts provable in the first trial, might have established that the accused had abetted the forgery by the particular co-accused forger. But they could not have established any other offence. It was not then alleged that he had used the forged document in the Civil

N. M. DEY V. EMPEROR.

Court. The facts were not the same in the two trials and recourse could not, therefore, in my opinion, be had to sub-section (1) of section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It seems to me that the abetment of the forgery was one offence and the using of the forged document in a Civil Court another and distinct offence committed in the same transaction, viz., the endeavour to recover by forgery the money claimed through the Civil Court. The matter, therefore, fell within the first sub-section of section 235. The accused was only charged with abetment for forgery at the first trial, though he might, no doubt, apart from the necessity of previous sanction, have been charged with both offences, viz., the abetment of forgery and the using of the forged document in the Civil Court. He was, therefore, liable to be charged at the second trial with this using of the forged document in the Civil Court under sub-section 2 of section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

But it seems to me in any case that the Court at the first trial on the charge of abetment of forgery was not a Court of competent jurisdiction to try the subsequent charge of using the forged document in the Civil Court. For no Court shall take cognizance of such an offence without the previous sanction of such Civil Court under section 195. The second trial on the charge of using the forged document in the Civil Court was, therefore, legal under the fourth sub-section of section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Nor could the Court at the first trial on the first charge be said, in my opinion, to have been a Court of competent jurisdiction to try the second charge of the second trial, by reason of the fact that proceeding illegally with that charge would not necessarily have vitiated the trial by virtue of section 537 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Such proceeding would, in my opinion, nevertheless have been illegal, even though the illegality might have been subsequently condoned under certain circumstances under section 537 (b) by a superior Court.

I also concur on the question of fact, viz., accused's guilty knowledge, and the propriety of the sentence.

Appeal dismissed.

Poisons Act (I of 1904), s. 10 cls. (a), (b)—Retail sale by unregistered seller, legality of.

Retail sale of poison by a person is unlawful under section 10 of the Indian Poisons Act, unless exempted under clause (a) being a sale in exercise of his profession by a medical practitioner, or under clause (b) being a sale effected by a registered chemist or druggist. [p. 365, col. 1.]

The rules apply only to retail sales and wholesale sales are left uncontrolled. [p. 365, col. 1.]

Review of the order of the Western Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Rangoon, dated the 12th June 1915, passed in Summary Trial No. 184 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was prosecuted for selling 1 lb. of cyanide of potassium in contravention of the rules made under section 2 of the Indian Poisons Act and published as Judicial Department Notification No. 24, dated 8th February 1909. He holds a diploma as qualified medical practitioner granted at Bombay, but he is also a chemist and druggist. It is quite clear he did not make the sale in exercise of his profession as a medical practitioner, so that the exemption granted by clause (a) of section 10 of the Indian Poisons Act did not apply. At the trial he also admitted that he was not duly qualified to act as a chemist and druggist under the law for the time being in force in the United Kingdom, and accordingly the exemption granted by clause (b) of the same section did not apply to him and he pleaded guilty and was convicted and fined Rs. 51.

His application for revision was admitted, because it was stated that the admission of his non-qualification as a chemist and druggist under the law in force in the United Kingdom was made under a misapprehension, and that he was in fact so qualified, and I allowed the matter to be argued so that it might be shown, if it could be that he was so qualified. Reference was made to 31 and 32 Vict., Chap. CXXI, and 32 and 33 Vict., Chap. CXVII. The general effect of those enactments appears to me to be that it is unlawful for a person in any part of Great Britain to sell poisons unless he is registered as a chemist and druggist under section 31 and 32 Vict., Chap. CXXI, or has been registered as legally qualified medical practitioner or falls into certain other clauses which have no application to the present case. The petitioner is admittedly not registered as a chemist and druggist under section 31 and 32 Vict., Chap. CXXI, nor is he registered as a legally qualified medical practitioner within the meaning of section 1 of 32 and 33 Vict., Chap. CXVII, but it is said that he possesses qualifications which would entitle him to be so registered. The provisions of the English Act, however, appear to me to be clear and to require the registration of a person in one or other capacity before he can sell poisons under the law in force in the United Kingdom. Not being so registered, petitioner is not qualified to act as a chemist and druggist under the law in force in the United Kingdom, and he cannot claim exemption under clause (b) of section 10 of the Indian Poisons Act.

A point was also raised in the argument that as the rules apply only to sales by retail, they were not infringed in the present sale as the sale in question was wholesale. The rules, it is true, only apply to retail sales, and apparently wholesale sales remain uncontrolled. The only ground suggested for holding the sale in this case to have been wholesale is that the bottle in which the poison was sold was unopened. That, however, is a manner in which ordinary retail sales of drugs are commonly made, and the argument has no force. The Acts and rules do not define retail and wholesale sales, but I feel no doubt whatever that the present sale was retail. It was of only 1 lb. of cyanide, and was combined with a sale of 1 lb. of nitric acid, certainly a small quantity for commercial purposes: it was for cash and was not made to an ostensible dealer who meant to retail it to others, but to some unknown person, evidently to the counterfeit coiner Ah Chaung himself, or an emissary of his. It was certainly retail.

As regards the sentence, I do not consider it unduly severe. The facts of the case show the need of regulating such sales, and the fact that the rules have hitherto been commonly broken is no ground for special leniency.

The application is dismissed.

The difficulty which confronts us in taking the view which was adopted by the learned Judge of trial arises from the manner in which the trial was conducted. There are several passages of importance in the judgment which we are unable to refer to any evidence upon this record. And though the learned Pleaders on both sides have done their best to assist us in this respect, none of them is able to justify these particular passages by reference to any recorded evidence. It would seem that the learned Judge allowed himself to refer to matters appearing in other litigation but not produced and proved upon the present record, as they should have been if they were to be used against the prisoner.

Apart from this generally unsatisfactory character of the trial, there has been, so far as we and the learned Pleaders can discover, a violation of the imperative provisions of section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which enacts that for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him, the Court may put such questions as it considers necessary, "and shall, for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence." On the record before us it appears that the Court omitted to question the prisoner under this section. The case, therefore, in this respect resembles Subramania Iyer v. King-Emperor (1), where the Judicial Committee observed that "their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity." And if it was enough to vitiate the trial there that the accused was tried for more offences than the three offences which are permissible at one trial, then it seems to me a fortiori enough to vitiate this trial that the prisoner was convicted and sent to prison without being asked for his explanation of the matters appearing against him. That omission in my judgment goes deeper than the illegality which was committed in Subramania Iyer's case (1). For it is, I think, repugnant to one's natural sense of justice that a man should be convicted without being heard. It is no answer to that objection to say that the appellant had an opportunity of making a statement before the Committing Magistrate. For, first, he was entitled, if he chose, to reserve his statement until the Court of Session, and in any event, the law provides imperatively that before the Court of Session, he shall have an opportunity of making his statement. This view of the consequences of the violation of section 342 follows that which was taken by a Bench of this Court in Emperor v. Savalya Atma Pasty (2), where the conviction and sentence were reversed and a re-trial was ordered, the Court observing, in words which we commend to the attention of the learned Sessions Judge, that "in all criminal matters, the utmost strictness must be observed and forms must be closely complied with where the liberty of the subject is at stake, when from the Statute prescribing those forms it appears that they were prescribed by the Legislature in the interests of the accused." I may refer also to a similar case of Emperor v. Harischandra Talcherkar (3).

On these grounds, I am of opinion that this conviction and sentence should be set aside and that the accused should be re-tried before the Court of Session at Bijapur.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur that there must be a re-trial. There are two reasons: (1) the unsatisfactory state of the record, and (2) the omission to examine the accused as required by section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

I have examined the record with care, but have found it difficult to ascertain whether all the documents therein contained were duly proved as required by law. Certain passages in the judgment moreover referred to facts drawn apparently from other documents not appearing upon the record.

It is difficult to ascertain from the judgment precisely what were the facts held established against the accused, and the difficulty has been enhanced by the omission to call on him to explain them. It is true, no doubt, that his examination before the Magistrate was formally recorded and that he was defended by a Pleader. But the examination before the Magistrate was but perfunctory, and the law requires that an opportunity shall be given to the accused himself to explain, and not that this important step in the procedure should be left to his Pleader. It appears to me that failure to give the accused the opportunity himself of explaining the points against him, as required by section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is more than a mere irregularity covered by the provisions of section 537 of the same Code. This view is confirmed by the decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Emperor v. Savalya Atma Pasty (2) and is, in my opinion, the view which must be taken upon a consideration of the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council, viz., that "their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience of an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity," this dictum appearing in the case of Subramania Iyer v. King-Emperor (1).

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 147, 439—Revision—High Court, power of, to direct Subordinate Magistrate to take additional evidence—Jurisdiction—Order prohibiting use of public street, interference with Sentimental caste objections, if to be considered.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar and Phillips, JJ.—A High Court acting as a Court of Revision either under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or under section 15 of the Charter Act has power to direct a Subordinate Magistrate to take additional evidence, but it must on that evidence come to an independent finding itself and not accept the one arrived at by the Magistrate. [p. 367, col. 2; p. 370, col. 1.]

It is undesirable that orders passed under section 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be interfered with in revision under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or section 15 of the Charter Act, unless they are made without jurisdiction or are obviously unreasonable and unjust. Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A Magistrate has jurisdiction under section 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to pass orders even against the right of passage through a public street. But he ought not to pass such a prohibitory order, unless it is clearly proved that there is a right by custom or by grant or by Statute in one section of the public to prevent another section of the public from using the public street on particular occasions or for particular purposes, when such use is ordinarily and prima facie lawful. JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J. The facts of the case are set out in my learned colleague's judgment. The points for consideration are

(1) whether the order of Tyabji, J., was correct;

(2) if not, what action should be taken by this Court in the question of revising the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

2. On the first point, I also think that section 439, Code of Criminal Procedure, even supposing that it is applicable to this case, does not give this Court power to call for a finding when exercising its powers of revision, although it does give power to call for additional evidence upon which this Court can itself come to a conclusion. I think, therefore, that the learned Judge's order, which apparently was based solely upon the finding submitted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, was not correct. The additional evidence must be weighed by the Court of Revision, and its decision based upon a consideration thereof. I agree, therefore, that the order appealed against cannot be supported.

3. In this view it is necessary to consider the second point and determine what action is to be taken on the revision petition. In Kamal Kutty v. Udaya Varma Rayavalia Raja of Chirakal (1) Ayling and Napier, JJ., have held in a carefully considered judgment that this Court has no power under section 439, Code of Criminal Procedure, to revise proceedings under Chapter XII of that Code, and support their conclusion by a consideration of the various authorities. Proceedings under Chapter XII are of a special nature and are such that the Magistracy may well be allowed greater liberty in carrying out those provisions than they are allowed in trying ordinary crime. The provisions of the Chapter are concerned with disputes relating to immoveable property which are likely to cause a breach of the peace, and give Magistrates power to deal with matters of a quasi-civil nature, because upon the Magistracy and Police is thrown the burden of maintaining the public peace. In this view I think it undesirable that such orders should be interfered with in revision, unless they are made without jurisdiction or are obviously unreasonable or unjust. I can, therefore, see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at in Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja Valia Raja of Chirakal (1), which is also the view of the other High Courts.

The power of revision in this case must be exercised, if at all, under section 15 of the Charter Act, and as pointed out by Ayling and Napier, JJ., in the same case, it has never been customary for this or other High Courts to interfere except where it can be said that the Magistrate's order was passed without jurisdiction. I will not deal with the one or two cases which have not followed this custom, such as Reid v. Richardson (2), for when a discretionary power is to be exercised it may happen that certain circumstances exist in a particular case which would justify interference in revision on grounds which would not ordinarily justify such interference, and I am far from holding that the powers of this Court under the Charter Act should be construed in a limited manner. Can it be now said that the Magistrate's order was passed without jurisdiction or that it is such an exceptional case that it warrants a departure from the ordinary custom of this Court? The latter part of the question must certainly be answered in the negative. As regards the question of jurisdiction, the only contention raised is that an order under section 147, Code of Criminal Procedure, cannot be passed in respect of a public road or street and that, therefore the Magistrate's order was without jurisdiction. In support of this argument we are referred to the dictum of Subramania Aiyar and Davis, JJ., in Kolandai Nayakan v. Karabudda Savudri (3): "It is open to question whether section 147, Criminal Procedure Code, applies to a question like the present—the right to use a public highway." I see nothing in the language of section 147 which necessarily debar a Magistrate from passing an order with reference to a public street and in Karuppana Kownden v. Kandasami Kownden (4) it was expressly held that the terms of the section were wide enough to cover disputes when the right of way claimed is a right to a public path. Further, it does not appear certain that in this case the order does refer to a public street. No doubt the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has submitted a finding that A-B, B-C on the plan is a public street, but it was his predecessor that passed the order under section 147, Code of Criminal Procedure, in which he remarked: "Further the right is claimed for Sambans only and it is said that other castes higher than they, are not allowed to pass by the street." Such a prohibition is quite inconsistent with the view that it is a public street, over which the public generally has a right to pass. In the later finding also it is observed that the site of an oil mill in the middle of the street is private property, and on one side of the oil mill, there is a passage wide enough to take two persons abreast, while on the other side, the passage is even narrower. The ground surrounding the oil mill is also claimed as private property. In these circumstances, I cannot hold that the passage in question has been proved to be a public street, although it is quite possible that the portion B-C may be a public street. Whether a portion of the prohibited area is public street or not, I am of opinion that the order passed was not made without jurisdiction and I would, therefore, allow the Letters Patent appeal and restore the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

SADASIYA AIYAR, J.—This Letters Patent appeal has been presented against the order of Mr. Justice Tyabji, passed on a revision petition preferred against the order of the Tuticorin Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The order of the Magistrate is dated 23rd April 1914 and was passed under section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The order is to the effect that processions connected with weddings, funerals and festivals shall not be taken by Sambans residing in the Paracherry (past an oil mill along A-B) and then northwards from along the oil-mongers' street B-C, until the Sambans obtained the order of a competent Court authorising them to do so. (See the plan in the case.) The reason given for the order is that though the claim of the Sambans is supported by the oral evidence of the village officers, the Magistrate does not believe it because the Sambans have not exercised the right unchallenged to pass by the street of the oil-mongers. It seems clear that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate made no distinction between A-B and B-C. His reference to "other castes higher than" the Sambans not being allowed by the Chetties "to pass by the street" applies evidently to both A-B and B-C, and I think it very probable that the question of private or public street was not considered by him at all. The higher castes referred to in the Magistrate's order are two castes higher than "Sambans" (Pallars and Nadars) and not higher than the Chetties. (See paragraph 5 of the statement of the Chetties as counter-petitioners.) It is also clear from paragraphs 7 and 5 of the said statement that except as regards the portion A-B (a comparatively small length of the whole disputed length of street), the Chetties did not claim private right of ownership over the Chetty street and based their claim to prohibit the Sambans on the ground of caste pollution by processions of Sambans being allowed to go through. I do not think that such sentimental caste objections should be countenanced by the Magistrates acting under section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code, though of course they can, in emergent cases, pass temporary orders under section 144 (even if such orders encourage caste 'bigotry') when the preservation of the public peace is required. Even in such cases, the temporary nature of the order cannot be attempted to be changed by continued renewals [see Govinda Chetti v. Perumal Chetti (5)].

Mr. Justice Tyabji on revision held (a) that if the roads A-B and B-C in question are public roads, an order prohibiting certain members of the public from passing over such public roads until they established their right to do so in a competent Court was a "futile order" and should be set aside in revision; and (b) that as the Magistrate had not in his order dealt with the question whether the roads were public roads or not, the case should be remitted to the Magistrate to report on that question, the learned Counsel who appeared on both sides before Mr. Justice Tyabji having suggested that course.

On this first order of Mr. Justice Tyabji, the records were sent to the Magistrate who sent his report, in which he gave the following findings:—

(a) A-B in the plan is a passage used freely at all times by the people of all classes. "B-C is a public street in the fullest sense of the term, a fact which the Chetties themselves do not attempt to controvert."

(b) The mill marked 4 in the plan within the area A-B is the private property of the appellants (Vania Chetties).

(c) The whole area A-B, except the site of the mill 4 and the site of the temple

(5) 30 Ind. Cas. 453; 38 M. 489; 16 Cr. L. J. 629.

SCDALAINUTHU CHETTIAR v. ENAN SAMEAN.

5, is a public street, though the Chetties are entitled to obstruct the public from using the road to this extent, namely, that they could work the mill by yoking bullocks to a shaft attached to the mill and the public cannot at these times use that narrow fraction of the passage (varying in location) which is covered by the shaft and bullocks.

The report containing the above findings was accepted by Mr. Justice Tyabji, who in his second order on the revision petition set aside the Divisional Magistrate's order prohibiting the Sambans from using the paths A-B and B-C.

Mr. Seshachariar who appeared for the appellants (Chetties) before us contended, among other things, that the learned Judge erred in deciding the case upon the finding submitted by the Magistrate. I think there is some force in this contention. I shall take it that under section 15 of the Charter Act, this Court's power of revision can be exercised to the like extent (at least) to which the powers of revision can be exercised in a case coming under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code. Section 439 gives the High Court power to exercise all the powers of a Court of Appeal under section 428. Section 428 allows fresh evidence to be taken by the Appellate Court or by a Magistrate under the orders of the Appellate Court, but the Appellate Court has to come to its own conclusion upon the evidence so taken and there is no provision in section 428 allowing the Appellate Court to accept the finding of the Magistrate come to on such evidence. The gist of the evidence given in this case is fully set out by the Magistrate in his report and on that evidence I think the Magistrate was not justified in finding that the whole of the circle made by the round of the bullocks does not belong to the Chetties, but only the mill site. I think that the whole site included within the circumference trodden by the bullocks belongs to the Chetties.

It was contended further for the appellants that Mr. Justice Tyabji was in error in holding that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass orders under section 147 where the right of way in question was through the public streets. It is doubtful whether Mr. Justice Tyabji in his first order went so far as to say that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass such orders even in cases where the order was an order of prohibition of the use of the right of public way. So long ago as in 1896, Subramania Aiyar and Davies, JJ., had no doubt said in the case reported as Kolandai Nayakan v. Karabudda Saundri (3): "It is open to question whether section 147, Criminal Procedure Code, applies to..... the right to use a public high way". In Criminal Revision Case No. 402 of 1908 also, Benson and Sankaran Nair, JJ., set aside the order of the Divisional Magistrate prohibiting the use of the public way under section 147 as made without jurisdiction. To support that conclusion they relied (among other grounds) upon an old case, In re Narayana (6), which was decided under section 532 of the old Code of 1872. In the case of Karuppanna Kownden v. Kandasami Kownden (4), Spencer, J., and myself held generally that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass orders in respect of public streets also under section 147, though that was a case where we interfered in favour of the right of passage. I shall, therefore, take it that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass orders even against the right of passage through a public street. But, in my opinion, he ought not to pass such a prohibitory order unless it is clearly proved that there is a right by custom or by grant or by a Statute in one section of the public to prevent another section of the public from using the public street on particular occasions or for particular purposes, when such use is ordinarily and prima facie lawful. In the case of Sadagopa Chariar v. Rama Rao (7), Davies and Benson, JJ., held [following the case of Sundram v. Queen and Ponnusami v. Queen (8)] that "every member of the public, and every sect, has a right to use the public streets in a lawful manner, and it lies on those who would restrain him in its exercise to show some law or custom having the force of law depriving him of the privilege" (page 384). This decision was confirmed by the Privy Council [in the case of Sadagopa Chariar v.

Krishnamoorthy Row (9), notwithstanding the doubt thrown upon it by Justice Sir Subramania Aiyar, who sat in a Full Bench with Justices Davies and Benson, in another case reported in the same volume as the case of Vijayaraghava Chariar v. Emperor (10). In this case, no such custom having the force of law prohibiting the use of the public street (whether the public street is B-C alone or A-B and B-C together or B-C and a portion of A-B) by the Sambans was set up or proved. Even if the whole of the area A-B is private property, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order prohibiting the Sambans from going through even the portion B-C (an admitted public street) is clearly erroneous, the Sambans having public streets 15 and 2, 9, 7 in the plan through which they could come to point B besides the path A-B). On my finding that besides the greater length B-C which is admittedly public street, the remaining portion alone of the area A-B after excluding the area enclosed by the mill bullocks' round, forms the public street, I would modify the order of Mr. Justice Tyabji and pass an order that the respondents shall not use the area covered by the round of the oil mill bullocks, until they obtain the decision of a Civil Court and that in other respects the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate prohibiting the Sambans from taking processions even along the admittedly public street B-C and along the portion of A-B which I find to be the public street, should be set aside.

Under clause 36 of the Letters Patent, the order of Tyabji, J., will be modified as above mentioned.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 370 (i).

—Duty of Presidency Magistrate to give reasons for convicting accused—Reasons not given—Judgment, effect of.

Section 370, clause (i), of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that there should be a statement of the reasons which induce a Presidency Magistrate to believe the evidence for the prosecution.

Natabar Ghose v. Prokash Chandra Chatterjee, 27 C. 461; 4 C. W. N. 467, followed.

Where, therefore, a Chief Presidency Magistrate convicted an accused, inflicting imprisonment and merely recording the following judgment:

"I convict accused. I believe the evidence of complainant and the witnesses for the prosecution."

Held, that the judgment did not satisfy the requirements of clause (i) of section 370 of the Code.

Criminal appeal from conviction and sentence recorded by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate who convicted the accused, Shankar, Ramdas under section 451 of the Indian Penal Code and, the accused having admitted certain previous convictions, passed a sentence of eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

We were compelled to call for the record and proceedings, as the learned Magistrate's judgment did not disclose to us any reasons why the evidence for the prosecution was accepted as sufficient. While we certainly have no wish to impose upon the Presidency Magistrate any further burden than is imposed by the express terms of the Criminal Procedure Code, we think his attention should be drawn to the requirements of clause (i) of section 370 of the Code and to the decision in Natabar Ghose v. Prokash Chandra Chatterjee (1) with which we agree. In the present case the learned Presidency Magistrate has written only: "I convict the accused. I believe the evidence of the complainant and the witnesses for the prosecution." That belief, however, is necessarily implied in the fact that the learned Magistrate convicted the accused. And in our opinion clause (i) of section 370 requires that there should be a statement of the reasons which induced the learned Magistrate to believe the evidence for the prosecution.

The appeal is dismissed.

Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871), s. 10—Trespass—Watchman seizing cattle, legality of.

Under section 10 of the Cattle Trespass Act, a watchman watching crops on the land on behalf of the cultivator or occupier is entitled to seize cattle trespassing on the land under his charge, when he is given general instructions to seize them while so trespassing.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1895, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kumbakonam Division, in Criminal Application No. 46 of 1915, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the third Class Magistrate of Tiru-wadamarudur, in Civil Case No. 443 of 1914.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.—The only ground for revision argued before us is that the unpounding of the cattle by prosecution witness No. 1, who is a watchman employed by the owner of the seed bed, was not authorised by section 10 of the Act. The section says that the cultivator or occupier may "seize or cause to be seized any cattle trespassing;" and we do not think that it can be contended that he is not entitled to give general instructions to his watchman or other servants to seize all trespassing cattle or that if the watchman or servant so instructed seizes cattle, the cultivator or occupier does not cause them to be seized within the meaning of the section. In the present case the legality of the 1st prosecution witness's action in this respect was not attacked in the lower Courts. He deposed that he was employed to watch the crops and that he had impounded many cattle. We do not feel called upon to direct evidence to be taken on this point in view of the late stage at which it is raised and we can find no ground for interference with the conviction.

The criminal revision petition is dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Broach, who convicted the three appellants of voluntarily causing grievous hurt otherwise than on grave and sudden provocation, and under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code sentenced accused Nos. 1 and 2 to five years' rigorous imprisonment and accused No. 3 to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

The only contention advanced by the learned Pleader on behalf of the appellants was that the learned Judge below should have acquitted the appellants, on the ground that they were entitled by their right of private defence to use the violence which in fact they did use. The evidence, however, satisfies us that the fight which resulted in the death of one man and in injuries to one or two others, took place in the public street between the accused's party and the deceased's party, and that both sides voluntarily engaged in it. There is every reason to believe that both sides were more or less drunk on the occasion in question, the quarrel having arisen about a log of wood which was thrown into the Holi fire and the parties belonging to a caste in which it is usual to make the festival of Holi a pretext for intoxication and quarrelling. Now where both sides voluntarily and deliberately engage in fighting as in the circumstances now before us, it is not, I think, open to a member of either party to claim the right of private defence. In Russell upon Crimes (7th Edn., Vol. I, p. 810, Bk. IX, Chap. I), the law is stated in the following words:—"The law is that if the blow, from the effect of which the deceased died, was given purely in self-defence, as distinguished from a desire to fight, it is excusable, and it is a question for the Jury whether the prisoner struck the blow in self-defence, or whether he really desired to fight:" see Reg. v. Knock (1). And in India we have a similar decision by the Calcutta High Court in Kabiruddin v. Emperor (2), where Mr. Justice Rampini says:—

"I have no doubt that according to the Penal Code no right of private defence arises in circumstances such as those of the present case, when both parties armed themselves for a fight to enforce their right or supposed right and deliberately engaged in very large numbers in a pitched battle, killing one man and wounding others...in the present case the appellants, if they had any right of private defence, which in the circumstances in my opinion they had not, did not act within the legal limits of such right. They did not restrict themselves merely to the use of such force as was necessary to resist trespass. On the contrary, they far exceeded their right, if they had any, for they killed a man and inflicted serious injuries on others."

So here, even if it could be shown by the appellants, on whom the onus lies, that they were entitled to the right of private defence—and in my opinion it cannot be so shown—yet it is manifest that they exceeded that right by causing the death of the deceased man on whom no less than eleven injuries were found. But, as I have said in my judgment, this appeal fails because the right of private defence cannot be successfully invoked by men who voluntarily and deliberately engage in fighting with their enemies for the sake of fighting, as opposed to the case where men are reluctantly forced to use violence in order to protect themselves from violence offered to them.

The convictions must, therefore, be confirmed. But in view of all the circumstances disclosed on the record, I think that the sentences passed upon accused Nos. 1 and 2 may safely be reduced to sentences of two years' rigorous imprisonment in the case of each.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur.

Convictions confirmed; Sentences reduced.

of the Civil and Military Station of Bangalore Division, in case No. 5 J. P. of the Calendar for 1915.

Petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the said Magistrate in the said case.

FACTS.—Accused G. G. Jeremiah, a volunteer in the "G." Company, was prosecuted before the District Magistrate, Civil and Military Station, Bangalore, for the offence of failing to take out a license for his cycle, which he rode at 2-10 p. m. on the Residency Road with a military description on the 18th May last.

Accused while admitting the offence pleaded exemption as a cyclist volunteer. The Magistrate in his finding observed that the accused, who was previously a cyclist volunteer in the "G." Company, Bangalore Rifle Volunteers, was struck off the strength of the corps on the 3rd February 1915 by order of the Officer Commanding. Since that date, consequently, accused was not borne on the rolls of the corps. Accused asserted that the Colonel's order, which appeared in the Battalion Order Book under the Adjutant's signature, was illegal and void. He contended that if he had been wrongly removed, then he was still a volunteer.

In these circumstances, the Magistrate held that whether the order was legal or illegal the fact remained that since 3rd February 1915, accused was not borne on the rolls of the corps and was not recognized by the corps as a member thereof. Finding the accused not to be a bona fide Cyclist Member of the Volunteer Corps on the date of the offence, the Magistrate fined him Rs. 3. The present appeal revision petition to the High Court are against that order.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant-Petitioner:—Bangalore was no part of British India and the Criminal Procedure Code was made applicable to Bangalore by virtue of declarations made from time to time by the Governor-General, in virtue of the powers conferred upon him by the orders in Council of His Majesty the King-Emperor under Foreign Jurisdiction Rules.

The jurisdiction of the Magistrates in Bangalore over European British subjects was by virtue of special powers conferred upon them, and there was no provision empowering them to try European British subjects summarily under section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government, submitted that he could not answer the objection raised by the Vakil for the appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Appellant (a European British subject) has been convicted by the District Magistrate of Bangalore, who is a Justice of the Peace, of an offence under section 8 of the Municipal By-law 3 after a summary trial under section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar argues in his behalf that the Magistrate's proceedings are void under section 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, inasmuch as the District Magistrate is not empowered to try a European British subject summarily. This appears to be so.

The Criminal Procedure Code does not apply primarily to Bangalore which is no part of British India, and is only in force there by virtue of the declarations of the Governor-General in Council in the exercise of powers conferred by the Indian (Foreign Jurisdiction) Order in Council, 1902. The latest declaration is No. 732-D, dated 19th March 1913, but this provides with reference to the Code of Criminal Procedure: "Nothing in the Code as applied shall be deemed to apply to proceedings against European British subjects or persons charged jointly with European British subjects."

The effect of this is to refer us back to an earlier declaration under the same authority No. 680-2B, dated 19th March 1912, which is still in force and which regulates the powers of Justices of the Peace beyond the limits of British India in regard to European British subjects. This notification [issued subsequent to the decision of this Court in In re Lawrence (1)] confers on such officers certain specified powers, among which the power of trying offenders summarily under section 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not included: and we must take it that the powers of the District Magistrate as Justice of the Peace as regards European British subjects are confined to those conferred on him thereunder.

It follows from that the trial of the appellant was void.

We set aside the conviction and direct the refund of the fine, if paid. In view of the petitioner of the case, we do not order retrial under the ordinary procedure.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 181, 1. (2)—Criminal breach of trust—Place of trial—Jurisdiction.

Where the complainant charged the accused under section 408, Indian Penal Code, alleging that the complainant had engaged the accused to manage a branch agency at Rurki, that accounts were sent by accused to Rawalpindi for some time but subsequently discontinued and that on inspection of the accounts it was found that the accused had made false entries in respect of certain items:

Held, that inasmuch as the allegations in the complaint referred distinctly to three or four specific items in respect of which the accused was charged with having committed the offence of criminal breach of trust at Rurki, the Rawalpindi Court had no jurisdiction to try the case. [p. 376, col. 2.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi Division, with his No. 114 of 3rd February 1915.

FACTS.—The accused was refused his application to be tried at Rurki (where the offence under section 408, Indian Penal Code, was alleged to have been committed) instead of Rawalpindi by order of Major T. O. Browning, Cantonment Magistrate, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class, Rawalpindi, dated 14th December 1914.

GROUND.—The statement on oath of the complainant in this case amounts to an accusation that the accused, who was his servant in Rurki, had embezzled and misappropriated Rs. 100 in that place. The complaint is brought, therefore, under section 408, Indian Penal Code. The Cantonment Magistrate has taken cognisance of the offence and it is urged by the learned Advocate, who represents the accused, that the case is not cognisable in the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate, but should, under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, section 181, be heard and tried in Rurki where the offence was committed.

I consider that this contention is correct and as the Cantonment Magistrate has continued hearing the case since I sent him a copy of my order, dated 22nd December 1914, I am constrained to report the case on the revision side to the learned Judges of the Chief Court, with a view to the proceedings being set aside and the case being tried in Rurki where the offence is alleged to have taken place and where the accused would be in a better position to defend himself.

The accused will in the meantime remain on the bail already ordered. Submitted with the record for orders.

Sirdar Sewa Ram Singh, for the Crown.

Dr. Shuja-ul-Din, for the Accused.

ORDER.—The question referred to this Court by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, is whether the Court of the Magistrate, First Class, Rawalpindi, has jurisdiction to entertain the complaint preferred by Lala Bashambar Das, charging the accused, Raghbir Singh, with the commission of an offence under section 408, Indian Penal Code.

The allegations in the complaint are to the effect that the complainant, who is an Artillery Treasurer in the Rawalpindi Cantonment, about three years previously engaged the accused as his servant to carry on, and manage, a Branch Agency at Rurki; that accounts were sent by accused to Rawalpindi up to January 1904, when accused discontinued sending them; that complainant's suspicions were aroused and he sent for accused, who came to Rawalpindi and undertook in writing to render accounts and pay whatever might be due to the complainant; that accused thereafter never came to Rawalpindi; and that on inspection of his accounts it was found that he had made false entries in respect of three items of Rs. 400, Rs. 125 and Rs. 656, and probably also other false entries. Complainant charged the accused with having committed the offence of criminal breach of trust, punishable under section 408, Indian Penal Code, and prayed that he might be dealt with according to law.

Section 181, clause (2), of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that the offence of criminal misappropriation or of criminal breach of trust may be inquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property, which is the subject of the offence, was received or retained by the accused person or the offence was committed. Upon the allegations in the complaint, there can be no doubt that the Court at Rurki would have jurisdiction to deal with the offence with which the accused is charged.

The question, however, is whether the Court at Rawalpindi has also jurisdiction to deal with it. Gokal Chand v. Phul Chand (1), Chint Singh v. Emperor (2) (Criminal Miscellaneous No. 58 of 1900), and Ganesh Lal v. Nand Kishore (3) are authorities directly in point and in support of the contention that the Rawalpindi Court has not jurisdiction.

For the complainant, Mr. Sewa Ram Singh relies on Uttam Chand v. Emperor (4), Ishar Das v. Emperor (5), Rajani Binode Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company Limited, Lahore (6), Sucumathan Chettiar v. Annamalai Chettiar (7) and Ghulam Ali v. Queen-Empress (8). I have considered the authorities cited and in my opinion the contention must prevail that the Rawalpindi Court has no jurisdiction to try the offence charged. The authorities cited on behalf of the accused are directly relevant, whereas those referred to by Mr. Sewa Ram Singh are distinguishable in various respects. Ghulam Ali v. Queen-Empress (8) deals with a case of cheating, and it was held that under section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Court at Lahore had jurisdiction because the loss in freight would be caused to the North-Western Railway Administration at its head-quarters in Lahore. Similarly in Rajani Binode Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company Limited, Lahore (6) and Ishar Das v. Emperor (5), the offences charged were not merely criminal breach of trust or criminal misappropriation, but also cheating and forgery and stress was laid upon section 179, Criminal Procedure Code. In Uttam Chand v. Emperor (4), there were three accused persons of whom two carried on business at Ferozepore, and the third accused was merely a purchasing agent at Sangla. It was held that it was the Ferozepore Branch which carried on the business of the Karachi firm, and that it was to that Ferozepore Branch that accused Nos. 1 and 2 had to render accounts. The judgment proceeds:—

"Now the conviction is with reference to the general balance of Rs. 12,362, not with reference to any specific items, and this balance was payable at Ferozepore, and if it had been paid there, there would have been no offence. This brings the offence within the provisions of section 181 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, for the money was retained by the accused in the Ferozepore District. This distinguishes the case from Criminal Miscellaneous Case No. 58 of 1900; there, certain specific items had been misappropriated, and accused was not being tried for a deficient balance."

So in the present case, the allegations in the complaint referred distinctly to three or four specific items in respect of which the accused is charged with having committed the offence of criminal breach of trust.

Swaminathan Chettiar v. Annamalai Chettiar (7) in no way helps Mr. Sewa Ram Singh's argument, but is rather an authority in support of the other side. As at present advised, therefore, I prefer to follow the most recent ruling of this Court [Gokal Chand v. Phul Chand (1)] and hold that the Rawalpindi Court has no jurisdiction to try the present charge.

I accordingly direct that the record be returned to the Magistrate, First Class, Rawalpindi, with the direction that the accused be discharged, the complainant being informed Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the 2nd Class Magistrate of Vayitri, in his proceedings declining to give further directions to the respondent herein to complete the performance of his contract under section 25 of Act I of 1903.

FACTS.—One Mr. Whitton, a planter in Malabar, complained to a Magistrate that Mammad Maistry had committed breach of a contract entered into by him in December 1912 in respect of work in the complainant's Company, known as, the Meppad Wynaad Tea Company, and prayed that the accused might be directed to complete the performance of his contract under section 35 of the Act. In 1913, one direction was given to the accused, but he did not comply with it and was convicted and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment under section 24 of the Act. The complainant again applied to another Magistrate for another direction after the return of the accused from Jail, and he was again prosecuted, convicted and sentenced to two months' imprisonment. The complainant again applied to the same Magistrate for giving the accused a further direction. The Magistrate refused it on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make successive directions. The present revision petition is against that order.

Mr. Barton, for the Petitioner.—A Magistrate has jurisdiction to make successive directions under section 35 of the Act and the language of the section is wide enough to cover any number of directions, so long as the contract exists, and there is nothing to prevent a subsequent direction being given. The decision in Ponga Maistry v. Emperor (1) is wrong. The decision in Unwin v. Clarke (2) and Cutler v. Turner (3) are clearly in point.

The Public Prosecutor, in reply:—The decision in Ponga Maistry v. Emperor (1) is right and must be followed

ORDER.

AYLING, J.—We are asked to revise an order of the 2nd Class Magistrate of Vayitri, dated 17th March 1915, refusing to direct counter-petitioner under section 35 of the Madras Planters Labour Act (1 of 1903) to complete the performance of the contract entered into by him with petitioner. The Magistrate's ground of refusal is that he had already issued one such direction on 18th November 1913, in default of compliance with which counter-petitioner had been convicted and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment under section 24 (c) of the same Act. He had in addition been previously tried and convicted under the same section and clause on 28th March 1913 for failure in connection with the same contract. The Magistrate held, following Ponga Maistry v. Emperor (1), that he had no power to make more than one direction; and on this view dismissed petitioner's application.

Mr. Barton, who appears for petitioner, contends that the ruling above quoted is erroneous; and that apart from such special restrictions as may be involved in the particular contract, there is no limit to the number of successive directions which may be issued under section 35 or to the number of prosecutions and convictions which may follow in default.

He has been at pains to explain that his client is prosecuting this petition simply as a test case and is only anxious to have the law on the matter determined. The counter-petitioner is not represented; but the learned Public Prosecutor has been instructed to oppose the petition and support the Magistrate's order. He has done so not with reference to the abstract question of law on which the order is based; but by arguing that the two previous convictions of counter-petitioner and the previous direction have all been illegal and that for this reason the direction now applied for should not be granted. We do not think we should be justified in ignoring such points when asked to interfere in revision to counter-petitioner's detriment.

We have, therefore, to consider the facts of the present case as well as the bearing of the Act upon them.

The contract itself is Exhibit A. Disregarding superfluous detail it may be said to provide as follows:—

Counter-petitioner (called the contractor) in consideration of an advance of Rs. 50 undertakes to work, with 25 coolies, whom he is to procure on petitioner's estate for six months from 20th December 1912 to 19th June 1913 at fixed rates of wages; if he makes default in such work, in whole or in part, petitioner has the option of calling on him to complete the performance of the work in default at any time up to 20th December 1915,

His subsequent conduct is not in dispute. He failed to appear till 13th February 1913, when he brought not 25 coolies but 8; these worked till 28th February 1913, when they began to absent themselves and were all gone by 16th March 1913. After that, no more work was done. Counter-petitioner returned to the estate after his first imprisonment and the first direction; and promised to pay the balance due by him. He has not, however, done so.

On these facts, I can find nothing illegal in the first conviction which is dated 28th March 1913. We have heard some discussion of the meaning of clause (c) of section 24; but I take it that the words "fails to account for the money advanced to him" mean simply this: failure to either supply labour equivalent to the advance received or to refund any balance of the advance for which he is unable to supply labour or to prove that it has been legitimately expended.

On this reading, the conviction was justified and also the direction which was passed on 18th November 1913 under section 35 on counter-petitioner's apprehension after release from the first term of imprisonment.

Admittedly this direction was not complied with. Counter-petitioner promised to return the balance of money due, but failed to do so, or to do any more work.

Now, what was the effect of this? The Act nowhere makes non-performance of a contract punishable in itself. Section 24 renders punishable three specified failures in connection with a contract. It says:

"Any maistry who

(a) fails without sufficient cause to present himself at an estate upon the date specified in his contract; or

(b) having contracted to remain upon an estate for a specific time, fails without sufficient cause so to remain; or

(c) fails to account for the money advanced to him by a planter in consideration of his contracting to supply labourers to work on an estate;

shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to three months or with fine which may amount to five hundred rupees or with both; and the Magistrate may award to the planter out of the fine such compensation as he may deem fit."

N. C. WHITTON V. MAMMAD MAISTRY.

Section 35 runs thus:

"On the expiry of any sentence of imprisonment on a maistry or labourer for an offence under this Act, the maistry or labourer shall, if the planter or employer so requests, be produced before the Magistrate, who shall direct such maistry or labourer to complete the performance of his contract on pain of further prosecution and punishment in case of his refusal to do so, and no conviction under this Act or imprisonment under such conviction shall have the effect of releasing any maistry or labourer from the terms of his contract or labour contract, as the case may be.

"Provided that no such direction shall be given, in the case of a labourer, if more than 12 months have elapsed since the date on which his original labour contract would have determined."

We cannot take this as constituting disobedience of the contract, a distinct offence, if only for the simple reason that no punishment is specified for it. Mr. Barton admits that the words "on pain of further prosecution" can only be taken to refer to a fresh prosecution under section 24.

This is the view taken by the Magistrate, who in Calendar Case No. 580 of 1914 has convicted counter-petitioner of the same offence under section 24 (c), failure to account for the advance. The question is whether this was legal—or whether counter-petitioner was entitled to plead "autrefois acquit."

That the contract was still in force cannot, I think, be disputed. As already pointed out, petitioner had the option of extending the period for performance up to 20th December 1915; and section 35 itself provides that the previous conviction should not operate as release.

Mr. Barton, in supporting the legality of the second conviction, relies on two English cases, Unwin v. Clarke (2) and Cutler v. Turner (3).

Both these cases are of workmen absenting themselves from work contrary to the terms of the contract, and it is held that in such circumstances although the workman did not return to work after his first conviction and imprisonment, yet as the contract continued he was guilty of a fresh offence, and could be again convicted. The question is whether the principle of these rulings applies to a case of failure to account for an advance. After careful consideration, I am inclined to think it does. The contract and with it, the liability to account for the advance is still in force: and counter-petitioner is by the option of the employer given a fresh chance of accounting for it, in either of the ways in which he could have accounted for it originally. His failure to do so is just as much a fresh offence as the workman's failure to resume work in the English cases. I can find no valid ground of distinction.

No argument has been addressed to us to the contrary.

The conviction in Calendar Case No. 580 of 1914 was, therefore, correct; and there only remains the question of whether the Magistrate was justified in refusing the second direction. The wording of the section appears to leave him no option; and I can see nothing in the Act which is opposed to the issue of repeated directions. I have carefully considered the judgment in Ponga Maistry v. Emperor (1). I am not without some sympathy for the view which the learned Judge seems to have taken: but we have to construe the Statute as it stands, and with all respect, I am unable to agree that the Magistrate can issue only one direction. It seems to me unfortunate that the Magistrate is given no discretion regarding the issue of directions and in this, as in other respects, the Act seems to call for amendment. The Magistrate has, of course, discretion as to the imposition of punishment on conviction: and would presumably exercise it where the Act was being vindictively used. But this is only a partial safeguard against the possibility of oppressive use of the section. As the law stands, in the present case, the Magistrate should have issued the direction, and I would now direct under section 423, Code of Criminal Procedure, that a direction should issue.

PHILLIPS, J.—I need only add that I agree in the view taken by my learned brother of the meaning of section 35 of the Act. The section itself does not limit the number of directions to fulfil the contract that can be made, but it does say that action taken under the section does not put an end to the contract. If the contract is still in force, there can undoubtedly be a fresh breach of such contract and for each breach (coming within the provisions of section 24) the offender renders himself liable under section 35. This view is in accordance with the interpretation put upon similar Statutes in England Unwin v. Clarke (2) and Cutler v. Turner (3).

I, therefore, concur in the order proposed.

Petition allowed; Application granted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 361, 363—Kidnapping—Lawful guardianship—Lawful guardianship of Hindu minor widow—Deceased husband's mother, whether lawful guardian—Hindu Law.

The husband's relations, if any exist within the degree of a sapinda, are the guardians of a minor widow in preference to her father and his relations. [p. 381, col. 1.]

Khudiram Mookerjee v. Bonwari Lal Roy, 16 C. 584, referred to.

Where a minor Hindu widow takes up her residence with her deceased husband's mother with the consent, express or implied, of her husband's brother, the husband's mother is the lawful guardian of the girl for the purposes of section 361, Indian Penal Code. [p. 381, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi Division, dated the 18th December 1914.

Mr. Broadway, Additional Government Advocate, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Tek Chand, was convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class of having kidnapped Musammât Karam Devi, a minor girl under the age of 16, from the lawful guardianship of her mother-in-law, Musammât Bhari; and under section 363, Indian Penal Code, was sentenced to 1½ years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50, and in default, to 6 months' further rigorous imprisonment. He appealed to the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, and on his behalf it was urged (1) that the girl in question was over the age of 16; (2) that the girl, being the widow of a Hindu, had no lawful guardian; and (3) that "no taking from lawful guardianship had been proved."

According to the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, the Public Prosecutor was "constrained to admit that the lawful guardianship was doubtful" and that there was "no evidence of the girl having been taken, beyond her own statement." Upon these admissions, the Sessions Judge accepted the appeal and acquitted Tek Chand.

From this order of the Sessions Judge, the Local Government have preferred an appeal under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, to this Court and notice of the hearing of the appeal was duly given to respondent who has not, however, appeared either in person or by any authorized agent or Pleader. We have accordingly heard the appeal ex parte, and after consideration of Mr. Broadway's arguments and of the evidence on the record, we are of opinion that the acquittal of respondent was erroneous and that this appeal must be allowed. It is, we think, to be regretted that the Public Prosecutor, before making his admission before the Sessions Judge, did not more carefully master the facts of the case and the law upon the subject.

As regards the facts, there is in the first place the clear and detailed evidence of the girl herself and we see no reason why, in the absence of any rebutting evidence to the contrary, it should not be accepted as true. The Sessions Judge assigns no other reason for throwing it aside than that it stands by itself, and this to us appears a somewhat inadequate ground when there is no reason apparent on the record for the girl to make a false charge against respondent. As a matter of fact, however, the girl's story is amply corroborated by the evidence of the witness, Santokh Singh, who deposes that respondent brought her to his house on the 1st November 1914 and falsely represented her to be his wife. In the circumstances there was no justification for discrediting the girl's evidence and we accordingly find, in agreement with the Magistrate, that Tek Chand actually took the girl from the guardianship of Musammât Bhari.

The Sessions Judge gives no decision with regard to the age of the girl, but as to this we have the evidence of her mother, Musammât Manaki, and the entry in the birth register which shows that Musammât Manaki gave birth to twin daughters on the 17th September 1899. No attempt was made by Tek Chand to disprove this evidence and we, therefore, find that the girl was under 16 years of age when she was kidnapped in November 1914.

The only question that remains for consideration is, whether Musammât Karam Devi was in lawful guardianship of her mother-in-law, Musammât Bhari, when Tek Chand and his brother, Lachman Singh, took her away. The parties are Hindus and Musammât Karam Devi was married to one Bhagat Singh, who died some 9 or 10 years ago. After his death, she lived with her deceased husband's brother, Nand Lal, for some 8 or 9 years and then, according to Nand Lal, went to live with Musammât Bhari, the mother of Bhagat Singh and Nand Lal. Nand Lal does not in express terms state that he agreed to her doing this, but it is quite clear from his evidence that she went to reside with Musammât Bhari with his consent, implied if not express. According to Mayne's Hindu Law (paragraph 211), "the husband's relations, if any exist within the degree of a sapinda, are the guardians of a minor widow, in preference to her father and his relations," and the same rule is laid down in Khudiram Mookerjee v. Bonwari Lal Roy (1). Upon these authorities it is clear that Nand Lal, the brother of the girl's deceased husband, was her guardian, and as we have already observed, she was at the time of the offence residing with Musammât Bhari, with the consent, express or implied, of Nand Lal. In these circumstances, Emperor v. Miran Bakhsh (2) is authority for holding that Musammât Bhari was "the lawful guardian" of the girl for the purposes of section 361, Indian Penal Code, and it follows that in taking her away from the guardianship of Musammât Bhari, the respondent committed the offence punishable under section 363, Indian Penal Code.

We, therefore, accept this appeal, and setting aside the order of the Sessions Judge, we restore the conviction of the respondent, Tek Chand, of an offence punishable under section 363, Indian Penal Code. We consider, however, that a sentence of 6 months' rigorous imprisonment will meet the ends of justice and we direct accordingly.

Appeal accepted.

Section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not in terms applicable to convictions of cheating and thereby dishonestly inducing delivery of property under section 420 or of using as genuine a forged document under section 471 of the Indian Penal Code. [p. 381, col. 2; p. 382, col. 1.]

Criminal review from conviction and sentence passed by the City Magistrate of Sholapur.

JUDGMENT.—In this cases the two accused were convicted by the First Class City Magistrate of Sholapur, Mr. Poredi, under sections 420 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code. By way of punishment, the accused were merely directed to be released on their entering into bonds for Rs. 50 and one surety for Rs. 100 each to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for six months. That order was made under section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The conviction was had in October 1914, so that the bonds executed have now expired. In these circumstances, we think it unnecessary to pursue these proceedings further. But it should be pointed out to the learned Magistrate for his future guidance that section 562 is not in terms Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 326—Nose-cutting—Sentence.

Where the accused cut off his wife's nose and was convicted under section 326, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for four years, but on appeal, the Sessions Judge while maintaining the conviction reduced the sentence to imprisonment for two years:

Held, enhancing the sentence to the full period of four years, that nose-cutting was an offence for which leniency was, ordinarily speaking, quite out of place. [p. 383, col. 1.]

Petition for revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 24th October 1914.

Mr. Taj-ud-Din, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The District Magistrate convicted the petitioner, Sikandar, a Pachada, aged 27, under section 326, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to imprisonment for four years. The offence found to have been committed was the cutting off of his wife's nose. On appeal to the Sessions Court, the conviction was maintained, but the sentence was reduced to imprisonment for two years. The petitioner then moved the Chief Court on revision, and as the reason given for reduction of sentence appeared insufficient, it was directed that notice should issue to him to show cause why his reduced sentence should not be enhanced.

Having examined the record I have no doubt that Sikandar was rightly convicted. The evidence against him is quite clear and there is nothing to be said for his petition, which is rejected.

Counsel has been further heard on the notice to show cause and urged that consideration should be given to the feelings of a husband outraged by his wife's misconduct.

The wife, a young woman of 18 or 20, admitted having misconducted herself some time before, but this had been condoned by her husband who brought her back to his house, and they had been living together for some four months before the present affair. There is no trustworthy evidence of further misconduct, though the petitioner may have continued to suspect his wife or may have been simply nursing a jealous grudge against her. Whatever his motive may have been, he carried out his design in the most brutal manner.

Having made an excuse for a change of home, he induced his wife to accompany him on foot through the night to a railway station some miles away. At midnight, when they had gone about 7 miles, he made a further excuse for tying her hands, and then deliberately cut off with a razor her nose, part of the cheek and most of the upper lip, the portion of the face removed measuring $3\frac{1}{2}$ by $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches. He at the same time formally pronounced her divorce and left her to find her way to the station as best she could.

It is difficult to understand how any Sessions Court could consider the District Magistrate's sentence excessive for such an act of savagery to a young woman, causing her frightful disfigurement for life. I am inclined to say that the District Magistrate might well have given a heavier sentence, especially as he noted that cases of nose-cutting were becoming far too frequent among the Pachadas of his district. I can only suppose that the Sessions Court misunderstood and misapplied the orders passed by this Court on a case of the same nature, from the same district, reported for enhancement as Criminal Revision No. 1308 of 1914 and referred to prominently in the lower Appellate Court's judgment. The learned Judge who dealt with that case declined to enhance a very light sentence, mainly on the ground that the sentence had already expired before the case was reported, and in doing so he was following the usual practice of the Chief Court in such matters. It must also be observed that there was this material difference in the facts of the reported case that the person then mutilated in a similar manner was not the wife but a man who had abducted her immediately after her marriage, under circumstances which grossly aggravated the offence to the enraged husband.

Lest, there should be any further misunderstanding of the effect of the orders passed in the reported case, I desire, after consultation with my learned colleague who dealt with it, to make it perfectly clear that nose-cutting is an offence for which leniency is, ordinarily speaking, quite out of place.

The petitioner's existing sentence is enhanced on revision to the full period of rigorous imprisonment for four years, including three months in solitary confinement, which was originally awarded by the District Magistrate. His own petition for revision is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

of High Court to interfere.*

Orders under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code are discretionary, but the discretion is open to correction where it has been exercised in violation of accepted judicial principles.

Where, therefore, in a trial for a criminal breach of trust, it appeared that the accused had transferred one of the misappropriated currency notes to the petitioner, and on the conviction of the accused the trying Magistrate ordered the note to be returned to the Crown.

Held, that this was a case for the application of the general rule that property in a currency note passes by mere delivery and that there being no allegation of fraud or bad faith on the part of the petitioner, he was entitled to retain it.

In the matter of the petition of Collector of Salem, 7 M. H. C. R. 233; 2 Weir 664, Empress v. Joggessur Mochi, 3 C. 379, referred to.

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Fourth Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. A. A. Pais, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the learned Fourth Presidency Magistrate, who convicted one Peter George of criminal breach of trust in respect of a bundle of currency notes and ordered that one of the notes now in dispute should be returned to the Crown, the notes having been misappropriated from the Presidency Magistrate's Court. The note now in dispute had been transferred to the possession of the present petitioner in this way: Peter George made a purchase from a neighbouring jeweller and tendered in payment the Rs. 100 note. The neighbouring jeweller was unable to cash the note at the moment, and, therefore, took it over to the present petitioner who supplied the cash. There is no allegation of any bad faith or fraud on the part of the present petitioner. That being so, it seems to us a case for the application of the general rule that property in a currency note passes by mere delivery: see the cases of In the matter of the petition of Collector of Salem (1) and Empress v. Joggessur Mochi (2). The petitioner consequently obtained a good title to the note, notwithstanding that Peter George had no title. The order under discussion is, therefore, in our opinion, unsustainable. It is true that orders under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code are discretionary, but the discretion is open to correction where, as here, it has been exercised in violation of accepted judicial principles.

We, therefore, set aside the order and direct that the currency note be returned to the petitioner.

Order set aside.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 247 OF 1915.

SHEODAN—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—Security to keep the peace—Order, whether can be passed without evidence—Person proceeded against having no objection to give security, effect of.

An order for taking security under section 107 Criminal Procedure Code, without evidence to prove that the petitioner was likely to commit a breach of the peace or to do any other wrongful act that might occasion a breach of the peace, is illegal and should not be passed simply on the petitioner's own statement before the Magistrate that he had no objection to giving security.

Ram Chandra Halder v. Emperor, 8 C. L. J. 68; 35 C. 674; 8 Cr. L. J., 128 referred to.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Rohtak, with his No. 124 G. of 4th February 1915.

FACTS.—Musammatt Manbhari, complainant, filed a complaint under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, against Sheodan, accused, to the effect that she caused the accused to be imprisoned on a charge under section 354, Indian Penal Code, and he is not on very friendly terms with her and wants to outrage her modesty and threatens to kill her.

The accused on conviction by E. J. Stephens, Esquire, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the 1st class, in the Rohtak District, was sentenced, by order dated 19th December 1914, under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to enter into a bond in the sum of Rs. 300 (three hundred) with two sureties to keep the peace for twelve months, failing bail the man shall suffer simple imprisonment for one year.

The case came up to the Chief Court for revision on the following

GROUNDS.—I am referred to Ram Chandra Halder v. Emperor (1), and on the strength of that decision I am asked to exercise my powers under section 125, Criminal Procedure Code. That decision, with all respect, I believe to be unsound. The procedure in cases under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, is to be as near as may be to that prescribed in summons cases, 117

(2), Criminal Procedure Code. And, therefore, when the respondent admits on appearing before the Court that security is required, there is no need to take evidence—vide section 243, Criminal Procedure Code. An order may be passed on the answer given by him. Sher Singh v. Hari Singh (2), however, appears to favour the view that evidence is necessary. Out of respect for that decision I forward the case under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, for the orders of the Hon'ble Judges. I do not think that section 125, Criminal Procedure Code, authorises me to direct further enquiry into this case. That is really what petitioner wants.

ORDER.—(February 13th, 1915.)—Notice to the petitioner and to the District Magistrate. The matter can be decided here once for all and in my opinion the order requiring security is improper. The petitioner's statement before the Magistrate is not covered by analogy by section 243, Criminal Procedure Code, on which the District Magistrate relies. The petitioner did not admit that he was likely to commit a breach of the peace or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace. Ram Chandra Halder v. Emperor (1) is in point.

ORDER.—See my order dated the 13th February 1915. No one has appeared to show cause why the order of the Magistrate, dated the 19th December 1914, directing the petitioner, under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, to execute a bond to keep the peace, should not be set aside. Admittedly, no evidence was given in this case to prove that the petitioner was likely to commit a breach of the peace or to do any wrongful act that might occasion a breach of the peace; and the petitioner's own statement before the Magistrate that he had no objection to giving security did not justify an order being passed against him under section 107.

For these reasons, I set aside the order of the Magistrate and direct him to proceed according to law.

Revision accepted.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut, in Original Suit No. 15 of 1909.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 15th September 1914, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We have heard a very full argument in this case both on the facts and on the law. As regards the facts the evidence is altogether insufficient to show that the mother of the sisters, Athavi and Kuttiyacha, who is said to have borne the name of Veerayi, was the sister of Mukkilakath Kadirkutti, the last survivor of the tarwad. They did not, therefore, belong to his tarwad by birth. We think, however, that the evidence shows that they were affiliated to it. See Exhibit A executed by the son of Kadirkutti and the admissions in Exhibits B, C, D and E by Kammukutti, who was the son of Kuttiyacha and the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, that the two sisters and their children were members of a tarwad of which he claimed to be the karnavan. As early as 1858 the two sisters in Exhibit H claimed to hold some of the plaint properties as members of a tarwad. There is also oral evidence to the same effect. All these documents show that they considered themselves to belong to the same tarwad as Kadirkutti from whom they derived the properties, and we accept the oral evidence of this affiliation as most in accordance with the established facts of the case with reference to the evidence, showing that these properties have been in possession of the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and of the father of defendants Nos. 7 and 8; we think the admissions already referred to, taken with the oral evidence, show that Kammukutti held possession as karnavan and that his brother, the father of defendants Nos. 7 and 8, was permitted to manage under him. A question has, however, been raised whether the affiliation of the two sisters to the tarwad is valid, having regard to the fact that the parties are Muhammadans. As pointed out in Bai Machhbai v. Bai Hirbai, (1), this must depend on usage and, before disposing of the case, we have determined to call for a finding whether the usage of affiliation to the tarwad prevailing among Hindus who follow the Marumakkattayam Law on the west coast, has been accepted by the Muhammadans who follow the same law.

The finding should be submitted within two months and seven days will be allowed for filing objections. Fresh evidence may be taken.

In compliance with the above order of this Court the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut submitted his finding on the issue in the affirmative.

This appeal and the memorandum of objections filed by respondents Nos. 1 to 6 coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We are not satisfied with the evidence of custom, but in view of the recent Full Bench decision in Machikandi Parkum Maramittath Tharuvil Mootha Chettiam Veetil Chakkara Kannan v. Varayalankandi Kunhi Pokker (2), which has removed the doubt cast upon the decision in Kunhacha Umma v. Kuti Mammi Hajee (3), we think there is now no objection to our holding, and we do hold, that the suit properties were taken and enjoyed by the two sisters, being daughters of a common mother, and their children as tarwad property, and on these findings the defendants, who do not belong to the tarwad and have not acquired any title by adverse possession, have no claim and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The Court below, however, held that the donee was not the appointed heir, but that the widow was entitled to make the gift in favour of the donee for services rendered:

Held, that the general question of gift by a widow was not properly before the lower Court and, therefore, the Court had no power to decide the case on that point. [p. 387, col. 1.]

Where the question raised in a second appeal is not the validity or existence of a custom but whether the validity or existence of a custom was a question properly before the lower Appellate Court, a second appeal lies without the certificate of such Court under section 40 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act (XVIII of 1884) as amended by Punjab Courts (Amendment) Act (I of 1912), section 2. The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellants.

Messrs. Beechey and Muhammad Sharif, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for a declaration that a gift of 476 kanals of ancestral land should not affect the rights of the plaintiffs who are collaterals of Karam Bakhsh, the last male holder. The gift was effected by registered deed on 30th January 1911 by Musammat Gauhar Bibi, the widow of Karam Bakhsh.

The deed recites that the reason and justification for the gift was the adoption of the donee by Karam Bakhsh, some time before 1868, the approximate date of Karam Bakhsh's demise, that for some unknown reason mutation on his death was made in favour of his widow and not in favour of the appointed heir and the widow now made the gift in furtherance and completion of (taid afa'l) her husband's acts.

The defence was simply that the donee was the appointed heir and that in the circumstances, the widow was entitled to rectify the erroneous mutation made at her husband's death by making the gift.

Both Courts below have found that the donee was not appointed his heir by the late Karam Bakhsh and the first Court decreed for plaintiffs; the Divisional Judge, however, though agreeing as to the appointment with the first Court, dismissed the suit on the ground that the donee had rendered services to the widow, who was consequently justified by custom in making the gift by way of compensation for services rendered.

In second appeal before this Court it is contended that the Divisional Judge has decided the case on a point entirely outside the pleadings, that the only plea for the defence was that the gift was justified by the adoption and that there was no defence that the gift was warranted by a widow's general right to gift for services rendered.

For the respondents it is urged that no appeal lies without a certificate and that the fifth issue covered the general custom, on which moreover the plaintiffs adduced evidence.

As to the competency of the appeal, we hold following Santa Singh v. Waryam Singh (1) that the question raised in this appeal is not the validity or existence of a custom, but whether the validity or existence of a custom was a question properly before the lower Appellate Court and we find that the appeal does lie.

NAINA PILLAI MARACAYAR v. ARUMUGA MUDALY.

Having carefully scrutinized the pleadings, statements of parties and the statement of defendants' Pleader, we find that there was no plea that the widow had a general right of gift for services rendered. The sole plea was the alleged appointment, and though defendants' Pleader stated that the gift was warranted by custom, it is clear that he used the word 'riwajan' as signifying solely that the widow was by custom justified in rectifying the error of mutation by which she had been preferred to the appointed heir.

It is true that the plaintiffs put in three copies of judgments, but they were intended to show that a widow could not gift even in favour of a khana damad or even a daughter's son and may have been intended merely to show that a widow could not make a gift even in favour of an appointed heir, who had slept on his rights for nearly 50 years.

We find then that 'services rendered' and a general right of gift by a widow for services rendered were never mentioned in the pleas, that the sole question properly before the Courts was the alleged appointment. That question, we have no manner of doubt whatever, has been rightly answered in the negative and that concluded the case.

We find, therefore, that the general question of gift by a widow was not properly before the lower Appellate Court and we accept this appeal and decree for the plaintiffs with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit, a decree for possession and past mesne profits was passed on the 30th March 1904. There are a number of defendants in the suit and the 15th defendant was in possession of the land to which the appeal relates. On the 1st August 1904, he gave notice to the plaintiff that he was willing to surrender possession of the land. The plaintiff said that it was too late for purposes of its cultivation, and that she would not then take possession. Thereupon the 15th defendant made an application to the Court and plaintiff took possession in October, but the land remained uncultivated. The question we are asked to deal with is whether, as a matter of fact, when the 15th defendant was willing to surrender possession or rather gave notice to the plaintiff, it was not too late for cultivation. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that it was rather late in the year for that purpose. We have heard full arguments on the point, but are not prepared to differ from that conclusion. It was possible that the plaintiff by making some special effort could have got something out of the land even after that date, but apparently she would not have been able to obtain full crops, and the order that has been passed by the Subordinate Judge in this respect is equitable in the circumstances of the case. This was the only point urged before us in the appeal, and that failing, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

There is only one point in the memorandum of objections that has been urged before us and that relates to interest on mesne profits. The Subordinate Judge has allowed mesne profits for three years and in calculating mesne profits he has, as the law directs, taken into account the interest on the profits for those three years, but has refused to allow interest for the period beyond three years. It is now contended before us that he is wrong and that he was bound to give interest up till the date of payment. The main decision on the point is that of the Privy Council reported as Girish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy (1), but what we gather from the heading is (and there is nothing in the judgment inconsistent with it) that mesne profits include interest, but that it can be given only three years after the decree and not any further. But it appears that when the case was remitted to this country the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court gave mesne profits up to the date of delivery of possession [see Girish Chandra Lahiri v. Sasi Sekhareswar Roy (2)], but the question, however, does not appear to have been raised before them, nor is it discussed in the judgment. There is also a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported as Ijatulla Bhuyan v. Chandra Mohan Banerjee (3). That would rather support the view which has been taken by the learned Subordinate Judge in this case. What we find here that the decree provides for interest on past mesne profits, but does not provide for any interest on mesne profits after the date of the decree. It is quite clear from the very decisions cited before us that the Court has discretion in a matter like this whether to allow interest after three years or not.

We are unable to say that the discretion has been wrongly exercised in this case. The memorandum of objections also fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appal and memorandum of objections dismissed.

Where in a suit for a declaration that a certain apparent sale was in reality a mortgage and for redemption of the mortgage, it appeared that plaintiffs executed a sale-deed in favour of the defendants giving them certain property in lieu of a total debt of Rs. 2,00 and contemporaneously with it two other documents were executed, one, an agreement by the defendants to reconvey the property to the plaintiffs on payment within a specified time of the total amount due as well as of any moneys the defendants may spend on the lands, and the second, a rent note passed by the plaintiffs to the defendants providing for the payment to the defendants annually for ten years of a rental of Rs. 287, an amount which was made up of Rs. 62 on account of the Government assessment and Rs. 225, on account of interest on the principal sum of Rs. 2,500 at 9 per cent:

Held, that, inasmuch as the apparent price of Rs. 2,500 was treated and regarded as a continuing debt between the parties and the property was made security for the re-payment of that debt, the deed in question was a deed of mortgage and the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem. [p. 390, col. 2.]

A mere agreement to reconvey does not necessarily signify that the transaction is a mortgage. [p. 389, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Thana, in Appeal No. 167 of 1913, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Alibag, in Civil Suit No. 29 of 1912.

Messrs. Coyji and A. G. Desai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought for a declaration that a certain apparent sale, dated the 14th August 1902, was in reality a mortgage and for an order allowing the plaintiffs to redeem the property on payment to the defendants of any sum that might be found due to them on accounts taken under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The question, which has divided the learned Judges below, was whether the transaction of the 14th August 1902 was an out and out sale or a mortgage by conditional sale. The learned trial Judge was of opinion that it was a sale, while the learned District Judge held that it was a mortgage by conditional sale.

It may be observed that whether the transaction be regarded as a sale or a mortgage, the plaintiffs are still within time to recover their land. For, on the footing that the transaction was a sale with a right of re-purchase in the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs are still entitled to re-purchase. The object of the suit, therefore, seems to be on the plaintiffs' part to obtain a decree for redemption under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act which would enable them to open their accounts with their creditors from the beginning, and it is this re-opening of the accounts which the defendants resist.

The question of the true character of this transaction must be answered by reference to the three contemporaneous documents, Exhibits 55, 32 and 56, in which the transaction is embodied. Exhibit 55 is the sale-deed by the plaintiffs to the defendants. Exhibit 32 is the defendants' agreement to reconvey to the plaintiffs, and Exhibit 56 is the rent note passed by the plaintiffs to the defendants. All three documents were admittedly executed on the same day at the same sitting. The important recital in the sale deed, Exhibit 55, is couched in the following words:—"After making up accounts of the above bouds (mortgage bonds) and after giving credit for the receipt given to you by us, the amount due to-day is Rs. 2,125, and the amount received to-day for making payments to other people and for house expenses is Rs. 375. Thus the total amount due to you is Rs. 2,500. In lieu of this we give to you by a sale-deed" property, which the instrument thereafter specifies. In the agreement, Exhibit 32, it is provided as follows:—"This property (described) we have purchased from you for a sum of Rs. 2,500. The property purchased will be sold to you on the following terms only. The terms are: (1) If at any time between Shake 1824 and Shake 1833 in the month of Margashirsha you pay us the sum of Rs. 2,500, we shall receive it and pass a sale-deed of the property in your favour at your cost. (2) The above property you have taken from us on a lease of ten years and have agreed to pay us every year Rs. 257. A separate lease has been taken for that. This sum you must pay to us from year to year in the month of Margashirsha from Shake 1824 to Shake 1833. (3) The right which you have obtained from us in virtue of this writing of purchasing the above property is given by us to yourselves alone. You are not to transfer it to anybody. In case you do transfer it, the transfer will not be valid and we shall not acknowledge it. (4) With respect to the above property if we are obliged by any means to spend any sum upon it, or if you hereafter borrow moneys from us, we shall receive all these amounts with interest first, and then only shall we pass to you a sale-deed of the above property." The rent note, Exhibit 56, provides that annually for the ten years mentioned the plaintiffs shall pay to the defendants rent of Rs. 257.

It remains to determine, what is the true contract to be collected from these documents. Was it a contract of sale or a contract of mortgage by conditional sale? In the course of the argument numerous cases were cited to us, but they were, we think, all decided on their own particular facts. The only case where the facts were substantially similar to those now before us is Maruti v. Balaji (1), where the Court pronounced in favour of a mortgage. The principle which governs the cases seems to be clear enough. The Court has to decide between an out and out sale for an agreed price and a mere transfer of the property, the subject of the sale-deed, as security for a loan. Thus the principal point to be cleared up is, whether the apparent price, in this case Rs. 2,500, was the real price of a sale or was treated and regarded as a continuing debt between the parties, the property being made security for the re-payment of that debt. The three documents must, of course, be read as a whole and the intentions of the parties must be gathered from the provisions of the documents. We begin with this that the mere agreement to reconvey does not necessarily signify that the transaction is a mortgage. It seems to us, however, that two things must be remembered in this context. One of them is the notorious reluctance of Indian peasants to sell their land, a reluctance which is judicially noticed and historically explained by Sir Michael Westropp in Bapuji Apaji v. Senavaraji Marvadi (2). And the second thing to be remembered is that, in the case now before us, on the assumption that the parties intended an out and out sale, there is no assignable reason why the defendants should have promised the plaintiffs to reconvey the property to them if they repaid the purchase-money. That is a point which, we think, is not without importance, and it was, we observe, allowed to weigh with the Court in Patel Ranchod Morar v. Bhikhabhai Devidas (3).

As is said there by Mr. Justice Ranade, so we may say here, that on the case made by the defendants there was no occasion for the covenant to reconvey on the re-payment of the money within a given time. It may also be remarked that though the parties must of course be held to the contract which they have made, and the Court cannot make a new contract for them, yet in ascertaining the true nature of the contract the Court must follow the injunction so frequently laid down by the Privy Council that "deeds and contracts of the people of India ought to be liberally construed. The form of expression, the literal sense, is not to be so much regarded as the real meaning of the parties which the transaction discloses": Hunoomanpersaul Panday v. Musammatt Babooee Munraj Koonwera (4).

Now from the documents which we have read it is clear, in the first instance, that although the sale-deed recites that the property was sold in lieu of the payment of the debt due, the sum of Rs. 2,500, which formed the purchase price, was in its origin a debt; and that it continued as a debt seems to us to be indicated by clause 4 of Exhibit 32 which we have quoted. For that clause, as we understand it, shows that the re-payment of the Rs. 2,500 and the re-payment of any fresh advances which the plaintiffs might take from the defendants were to be on one and the same footing; in other words, the old relation of debtor and creditor was continued, and the Rs. 2,500 was regarded as an outstanding loan to be reckoned with any other new loans which might thereafter be made to the plaintiffs. It is also, we think, material to note that by the terms of the agreement it was provided that, within the stipulated period of ten years, whensoever the plaintiffs might elect to make to the defendants the payment due to them, the defendants would reconvey to the plaintiffs. That provision seems to us to suggest the inference that the defendants-creditors were looking only to the recovery of their money, not to the ownership of the land. It was sufficient to provide for the recovery of the principal sum, Rs. 2,500, without interest; because the interest due on that sum was already provided for under the guise of rent reserved by Exhibit 56. That rent was in the aggregate Rs. 287. It is found by the lower Court, and the finding has not been challenged, that this aggregate was made up of Rs. 62 on account of the Government assessment and Rs. 225 net rent. Now, the Rs. 225 reserved as rent work out to exactly nine per cent on the principal sum of Rs. 2,500, and it was not contested before us that that was the principal upon which the sum of Rs. 225 was fixed. That circumstance seems to us to furnish yet another indication that the transaction with which we are dealing was a transaction of mortgage in which the mortgagee was interested only in securing a sufficient interest on his investment. And strong corroboration of that conclusion is supplied by the fact that the assessment due to Government on the land continued to be paid by the plaintiffs as well after as before this transaction of apparent sale.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court thus had good reason for his finding that the Rs. 2,500 was and continued to be a debt. We have given our reasons for adopting the same conclusion, because it seems to us that the question, depending as it does on the construction of documents, is open in second appeal, though we notice that in Maruti v. Balaji (1) it was said that "a finding on such a point would ordinarily be a finding of fact which would be binding on this Court in second appeal."

Two other circumstances may be alluded to as strengthening the conclusion which we have reached. One of them is that, in spite of the terms of the deed of sale, the possession remained with the plaintiffs, the vendors, and was not made over to the defendants. And the second circumstance is that the lower Appellate Court finds, as a matter of fact, that the value of the mortgaged properties was Rs. 5,000, that is, exactly double the sum fixed as the consideration of the apparent sale.

In view of all these indicia of a mortgage we do not think that the learned Judge's conclusion is displaced by the argument that the documents, which we have before us, do not disclose any such mutuality of remedies as the Courts have held to be ordinarily characteristic of the relation between mortgagor and mortgagee. This requirement was considered by a Full Bench of this Court in Tukaram v. Ramchand (5), and it was there observed that "the dictum is often cited in our Courts without precise appreciation of its meaning, and in any case it has a very limited application to the ordinary mortgages with which we are familiar in the mofussil in India." These words are, we think, apt to the circumstances of the present appeal where the mortgage, if we are right in regarding it as a mortgage, falls under section 58 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, being a mortgage by conditional sale. In other words, the transaction was ex facie a sale, and a deed of sale would clearly be an inappropriate place in which to embody the reciprocal remedies of a mortgagee as mortgagee.

Lastly, it was contended that the transaction could not be regarded as a mortgage, because there was no provision for accountability. There is, however, provision for accountability by the mortgagor as we have already noticed, and the circumstances of the case leave no room for accountability by the mortgagee, inasmuch as the mortgagee never went into possession of the mortgaged property, but received an annual rent in lieu of the rents and profits.

These are all the considerations which have been advanced to us on the one side and the other, and on a review of all of them we are satisfied that the weight of evidence is in favour of the view which commended itself to the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. His decree must, therefore, be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for assessment of rent. The plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that the defendant, a tenant within his estate, had encroached upon the land in dispute and was consequently liable to pay rent in respect thereof. According to the plaintiff, he became aware of the encroachment by the defendant in the course of settlement proceedings in 1897. The defendant resisted the claim on the ground that he held the land under a rent-free grant, made to his ancestor in order that a tank might be excavated thereon. He denied that he had encroached on the disputed land and further pleaded that if his rent-free title was not established, the claim for assessment of rent was barred by limitation. The Court of first instance found that the defendant had a rent-free title and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the District Judge has reversed that decision and assessed rent on the disputed land.

It is plain that this decision cannot be possibly supported.

It has been argued on behalf of the plaintiff in this Court that we should adopt the course which was pursued in the case of Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Akram Ali (1), namely, dismiss the suit on the ground that the right to have rent assessed on the disputed land had not accrued at the date of suit. That decision is clearly distinguishable. In that case, the original grant was produced and the Court held, upon a construction of its terms, that the proprietor would have a right to assess rent on the property only after it had ceased to be a tank and that consequently the suit was premature. In the present case, the grant has not been produced, and there is nothing to show that liability to pay rent had been suspended and would be received in a particular contingency. Besides, the view suggested is absolutely inconsistent with the assumption on which the suit was instituted. The plaintiff now contends that the defendant has not encroached upon this land which was granted to him under an agreement to excavate a tank, and that his right to have rent assessed thereon would accrue only if the tank ever silted up and became unfit for use. The plaintiff cannot be permitted to turn round at this the final state of the litigation and put forward a case inconsistent with the allegations in the plaint, which have been found to be untrue.

Then, again, when we look to the merits of the case, it is perfectly plain that the plaintiff cannot succeed in his claim for assessment of rent. The defendant contends that the land was given rent free by an ancestor of the plaintiff to his grandfather in 1837 in order that a tank might be excavated thereon. The tank was excavated at the expense of the grantee, and although the grantee and his descendants have been in occupation for more than 60 years, no rent has ever been claimed or paid. The legitimate inference, in these circumstances, is that the defendant holds the land under a rent-free grant. But even if it be assumed that the defendant does not hold the land under a rent-free grant, it is plain that the claim for assessment of rent is barred by limitation. The defendant asserted to the knowledge of the plaintiff, in the course of settlement proceedings, on the 7th April 1897, that he was under no obligation to pay rent and that the claim then put forward by the plaintiff for assessment of rent was entirely unfounded. This suit was not instituted till the 8th September 1909. It is thus clear from every point of view that the plaintiff cannot succeed.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, and appeal preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 111 of 1912, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Badagara, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 895 of 1911, in Execution Petition No. 261 of 1911, in Original Suit No. 573 of 1908.

FACTS.—A obtained a decree against the Anandravan of a Malabar tarwad and in execution thereof attached certain immoveable property in possession of the judgment-debtor. He died, and on his death, the karnavan of the tarwad was brought on the record as his legal representative. He set up the claim of the tarwad to the property, and contended that the judgment-debtor had no partible interest in the property and it was not attachable. The District Munsif dismissed the petition and upheld the attachment. The karnavan appealed and the lower Appellate Court set aside the attachment. Against that order the decree-holder filed the present revision petition to the High Court.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Appellant:—

The lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal. The question might not have been raised in the lower Court, but being one of jurisdiction could be raised at any stage, even in the High Court. The petitioner, though he was the legal representative of the judgment-debtor was not making any claim "as such", but was basing it on a different title, viz., on behalf of the "tarwad" which was not a party to the suit. Therefore, his claim fell under the scope of Order XXI, rule 58, and not under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Ramanathan Chettiar v. Levrar Marakayar (1) and Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (2). Decrees falling under section 47 were, no doubt, appealable, but the Munsif's order herein being one under Order XXI, rules 58 and 63, not appealable and was "final" as far as the present proceedings were concerned.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondent:—Whatever be the nature of the claim it was a "question relating to execution between the decree-holder and the legal representative of the judgment-debtor", and as such, the order of the District Munsif fell "also" under section 47 of the Code and was appealable. Moreover the cases cited for the decree-holder were not applicable, because the claims therein were made on behalf of temples by trustees who were not the legal owners. There were other decisions more in point, and in his favour. Kuriyali v. Mayan (3), Prosunno Kumar v. Kali Das (4) and Bhagaratulu Sanyanarayana v. Yelasturapu Venkata Subarayudu (5).

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the question argued was whether an appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge from the order of the District Munsif. The point is covered by the principle of the rulings in a Full Bench decision, Ramanathan Chettiar v. Levrar Marakayar (1), and a very recent decision of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (2). In these cases the person who was brought on record as the representative of the judgment-debtor in the first case or was a party to the suit itself as in the Calcutta case claimed the property, in one case as a trustee and in the other case as shebait of a temple, and it was held that such matters were not covered by section 244 of the old Code corresponding to section 47 of the present Code. In his counter-petition, the respondent before us claims the property as karnavan of a tarwad. The judgment-debtor, Seeyali, and his brother formed a tavazhi. The judgment-creditor obtained a money decree in which he attached the property alleged to belong to Seeyali and on the latter's death, the present respondent was brought on the record as his legal representative. The claim he put forward in respect of the property was that it belonged not to the judgment-debtor, but to the tarwad. There seems to us no distinction in principle between this case and the cases in which the person who was a party to the suit or was brought on record as representative of the judgment-debtor claimed the property as trustee for certain other persons or as shebait of a temple. Our attention was drawn to the ruling of Kuriyali v. Mayan (3), but that ruling was considered by a Full Bench decision of this Court in Ramanathan Chettiar v. Levvai Marakayar (1), where it appears to have been dissented from. It seems to us that the rulings in 23 Madras and in 39 Calcutta lay down the correct law. In this case, therefore, no appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge. The petition must be allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the District Munsif restored. The respondent will pay the costs of the petitioner. The Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 95 of 1913 is dismissed with costs.

Contract—Bond, suit on—Contract in writing registered, not signed by both parties—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 116, applicability of—Interest—High rate—Court, power of, to grant relief—Contract, unenforceable—Party, if can set up other reasonable terms.

A contract in writing in India does not necessarily imply that the document must be signed by both the parties thereto. [p. 395, col. 2.]

Therefore, a bond executed by a party and delivered to the other party and accepted by him completes the agreement between the parties and in law this amounts to a contract in writing. [p. 395, col. 2.]

Article 116 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, 1908, applies to cases of bonds not signed by both the parties. [p. 395, col. 2.]

A Court is competent to grant relief whenever the rate of interest appears to the Court to be penal. The fact that the rate of interest is excessive is sufficient by itself to justify the inference that the rate is penal and unenforceable. [p. 396, col. 1.]

Once a contract between the parties is deemed unenforceable, the plaintiff is entirely in the hands of the Court, he is not entitled to substitute for the original contract another contract which may appear to him to be reasonable. [p. 396, col. 2.]

Where the plaintiff was by contract entitled to interest on his loan at the rate of 5858 per cent. a year and sued to recover interest at the rate of 40 per cent. a year:

Held, that no Court of Justice will enforce such a contract and in the opinion of the Court the plaintiff was entitled to 1 per cent. per annum simple interest by way of damages for the detention of the money. [p. 396, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 30th June 1913, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 6th May 1912.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of money. On the 16th January 1895, the defendant borrowed from the plaintiff Rs. 400 on interest at 4 per cent. per mensem, with six-monthly rests; the money was made re-payable at the end of a year. These terms were in-not entered by this Court in the schedule. It was entered, subsequently registered and delivered to the plaintiff. On the 25th December 1901, the defendant paid the plaintiff Rs. 20 by way of interest, and on the 22nd December 1901, he made a similar payment of Rs. 30. These payments were duly endorsed on the back of the bond and the v. Petition were signed by the defendant. On the 15th December 1901, the plaintiff instituted this suit for recovery of his dues on the bond. The schedule to the plaint set out the defendant's statement of accounts which were shown that on the date of the commencement of the suit, a sum of Rs. 3,500-5-0 was found due by the defendant to the plaintiff. In the third paragraph of the plaint, however, the plaintiff stated that he could not possibly realise this large sum from the properties of the defendant and he consequently confined his claim to the modest sum of Rs. 3,000. The defendant pleaded in answer to the suit, first, that the claim was barred by limitation; second, that the rate of interest was unreasonable and should not be enforced by a Court of Justice. The Courts below have overruled these contentions and have accordingly that Article 116 is applicable to cases of the description now before us, and this view has been followed by implication in a long series of decisions of this Court, such as Nobocomar Mookhopadhaya v. Siru Mullick (7) and Ethel Georgina Kerr v. Clara B. Rutton (8).

As regards the second ground the appellant has argued that the provision for interest contained in the bond is in the nature of a penalty and is not enforceable in a Court of Justice. In support of this view reliance has been placed upon the decisions in Abdul Majid v. Ksheroode Chandra Pal (9) and Khagaram Das v. Ram Sankar Das (10). In the case last mentioned, it was pointed out upon a review of the earlier authorities on the subject that the more modern decisions recognised the rule that the Court is competent to grant relief whenever the rate of interest appears to the Court to be penal. It was further explained that the fact that the rate of interest was excessive, might be sufficient by itself to justify the inference that the rate was penal and unenforceable. In support of this view, reliance may be placed on Webster v. Bosanquet (11) and Clydebank Engineering and Shipbuilding Co. v. Yzquierdo Castaneda (12). Reference may also be made to the observations of Lord Loreburn, Lord Macnaghten and Lord James in Samuel v. Newbold (13). Lord Loreburn said:—"We are asked to say that an excessive rate of interest could not be of itself evidence, that the transaction was harsh and unconscionable. I do not accept that view. Excess of interest or charges may of itself be such evidence and particularly if it be unexplained. If no justification be established, the presumption hardens into a certainty." Lord Macnaghten was still more emphatic: "The rate of interest may be so monstrous as to show of itself that the transaction is harsh and unconscionable. There may be, as Lord Thurlow said in the case of Gwynne v. Heaton (14), an inequality so strong, gross and manifest that it must be impossible to state it to a man of common sense without producing an exclamation at the inequality of it." Lord James added: "Excessive interest of itself is sufficient to render a contract harsh and unconscionable. Proof of excessive interest may of itself, therefore, be sufficient to entitle the debtor to relief. What amounts to excessive interest is to be determined by the Tribunal in each case, the question of risk being a material matter for consideration. When excessive interest is apparently established, any facts that tend to show that such excess does not render the contract harsh and unconscionable, should be proved in evidence by the lender. The burden is on him." In the case before us, the result of the contract is that the plaintiff has become entitled to interest on his loan at the rate of 5858 per cent. a year; no Court of Justice will enforce such a contract. The respondent argues, however, that the modest sum he now claims gives him interest at the rate of 40 per cent. a year. But this contention entirely overlooks the fundamental fact that once the contract between the parties is deemed unenforceable, the plaintiff is entirely in the hands of the Court: he is not entitled to substitute for the original contract another contract which may appear to him to be reasonable. The Court has now to consider what sum should be decreed to the plaintiff by way of damages for the detention of his money. We are of opinion that the plaintiff should not have more than 12 per cent. per annum simple interest on the sum advanced by him.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, and the decree of the District Judge varied. A decree will be made in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 400 with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the loan to the date of the institution of this suit, that is, from the 16th January 1895 to the 15th December 1910. Allowance will be made in the accounts for the two sums admitted to have been paid towards interest. The sum thus determined will carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the institution of the suit to the date of realisation. Each party will pay his own costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed; Decree varied.

RESPONDENT.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Court of original jurisdiction—Subordinate Judge empowered to try suits under s. 92—Transfer of case from District Court—Subsequent notification limiting jurisdiction of Subordinate Judge to specified area, effect of.

Where a suit instituted under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure in a District Court was transferred by the latter to the Court of a Subordinate Judge empowered by the Local Government to try suits under that section but where by a subsequent notification the Local Government confined the original jurisdiction of that Subordinate Judge to a specified local area:

Held, that the Subordinate Judge, having derived his power to try such a suit by an order of transfer, made by the District Judge and under the prior Notification of the Local Government, did not cease to be "a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction" within the meaning of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the latter notification, and his power to try the suit was not taken away by it. JUDGMENT.—This application is made to us with a view to have the question decided whether the Subordinate Judge's Court at Salem has jurisdiction to try the suit which is instituted under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, that is to say, with respect to the public charity. What happened was the suit was originally instituted in the District Court of Salem. At that time the District Court alone had jurisdiction to try such suits as the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the district. The Local Government, however, on the 17th October 1910, invested all Courts of Subordinate Judges in this Presidency with jurisdiction under the Civil Procedure Code in respect of suits relating to trusts created for public purposes of a charitable and religious nature and the Temporary Subordinate Judge's Court, by a notification throughout the District of Salem; but by a subsequent notification dated 13th July 1915, the order was modified to this extent, that the Court should have and exercise original jurisdiction over the village of Mastampath. The result of the later order is that for the purpose of institution of suits, the Temporary Subordinate Judge at Salem will have local jurisdiction only over the village of Mastampath, but it is empowered, like other Subordinate Judges' Courts in the district, to try any suit which the District Judge is empowered to make over to it. This suit being instituted originally in the District Court, the only question that has to be decided is whether it having transferred the suit to the Temporary Court, this Temporary Court has the power to try it. It apparently derived its power from the notification of the 17th October 1910, and it is difficult to see what difficulty there is in the way of the Subordinate Judge exercising powers which the Local Government was competent to confer under the provisions of section 92 of the Code and which it did as a matter of fact confer on all Subordinate Judges in this Presidency. A ruling reported in Muhammad Musa v. Abul Hassan Khan (1) has been cited before us, but that case is quite distinguishable from the present one. There the Additional Judge to whom the case was transferred by the District Judge was not empowered by the Local Government to try suits under section 92 of the Civil Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 134, 144—

Adverse possession—Co-parceners, possession of one, possession of others—Possession hostile at commencement—Accrual of peaceful title before completion of adverse possession, effect of—Possession—Title.

On the suit of one of two reversioners, a sale was declared to be a mortgage in 1885 and the plaintiff was given a decree to redeem the property after the death of the widow in case she died without redeeming it. In 1893, the purchaser, whom the decree had declared to be a mere mortgagee, sold the property to the other reversioner and put him in possession. On the widow's death in 1900, the said two reversioners were the only heirs of her husband. When in 1912 the former sued for redemption of the property, the latter pleaded adverse possession from the date of his purchase:

Held, (1) that although the possession of the defendant reversioner when it commenced in 893 was hostile, yet it ceased to be so in 1900 when on the widow's death succession opened to both the reversioners; [p. 400, col. 1.]

(2) that on the death of the widow, the defendant must be deemed to have held the property on behalf of the plaintiff as well; [p. 400, col. 2.]

The possession of one co-parcener or co-owner cannot be adverse to the other until the latter is notoriously excluded by the former. [p. 400, col. 2.]

The possession should be prima facie attributed to a lawful title. [p. 400, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore, in Appeal Suit No. 20 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Vriddhachalam, in Original Suit No. 910 of 1912.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on 21st December 1914, the Court made the following ORDER.—Without deciding at present whether notice, actual or constructive, which the purchaser had, will affect his right under Article 134 of the Limitation Act we think it necessary to call for a finding upon the following issue:—

"Had the 3rd defendant's adoptive father any actual or constructive notice of the decree obtained by the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 371 of 1885 against the widow or of the nature of the right of his vendor under the sale and the counter-agreement referred to in the pleadings in this case?"

Parties may adduce fresh evidence.

The finding should be submitted within two months from this date and the parties will be at liberty to file objections to the said finding within ten days after notice of the return of the same shall have been posted up in this Court.

In compliance with the above order, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore submitted the following FINDING.—Plaintiff says that V. Palamala Pillai was examined as a witness in Original Suit No. 371 of 1885 and his deposition is filed as Exhibit E. It is clear from this that no questions were put to him about this property. Plaintiff says that after the death of Meenatchi Ammal, he asked V. Palamala Pillai to receive Rs. 75 and give back this property to him and he promised to do so. If this statement is true, surely plaintiff would have stated it in his deposition when he was examined as a witness in this suit. When he was asked about it, he says that he mentioned this in Court, but he does not know whether the Court took it down in his deposition or not. I think this is a gross falsehood. I do not believe his present statement. It is clear he never mentioned it in his deposition when he was examined in the lower Court in this suit.

2. Plaintiff's second witness is his son's sagalan. He says that he was present at the time of the sale by S. Palamala Pillai to V. Palamala Pillai and he says that it was sold for Rs. 75 as there were litigations about this property. But he has not attested the sale-deed. I do not believe his present statement that he was present at the time of the sale. Nor do I believe his statement that the purchasers said that they should not buy it owing to Subbaraya Pillai's litigations. Plaintiff's third witness is a co-trustee of a temple with plaintiff. He says that he used to go to the Court when that suit was pending and he used to see V. Palamala Pillai attending the Court for that suit. It is clear that V. Palamala Pillai was examined as a witness in that suit on some other matter and so must have attended the Court. From this we cannot draw the inference that he was going there regularly or knew the judgment and decree in that case.

3. Plaintiff's witnesses say that the property was worth Rs. 300 and was sold by S. Palamala Pillai to V. Palamala Pillai for Rs. 75. It is admitted that Chella Pillai, the original owner of this property, sold it to S. Palamala Pillai for Rs. 75 only and so he sold it to V. Palamala Pillai for Rs. 75. There is nothing strange in this. As plaintiff's Pleader says it is possible that V. Palamala Pillai might have had notice of this decree or the nature of the right of his vendor. But with the evidence of plaintiff and that of his two interested witnesses who were examined just now, I cannot come to the conclusion that V. Palamala Pillai had any actual or constructive notice of the decree in Original Suit No. 371 of 1885 or of the nature of the right of his vendor under the sale and the counter of the agreement referred to in the pleadings.

4. I, therefore, find that V. Palamala Pillai had no such notice.

This second appeal came on for final hearing on the 17th of September 1915 after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial.

Mr. C. Padmanabha Iyengar, for the Appellant:—The 3rd defendant's father having purchased the properties from Palamalai without notice of the decree in Original Suit No. 371 of 1885 and the 3rd defendant, having enjoyed it for over 12 years from the date of his purchase adversely to the plaintiff, has perfected his title under Article 134, Limitation Act.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer, for the 1st Respondent:—It is quite true that possession under the sale could have been perfected if it had only continued for 12 years. This was not so in the present case, as, before the 12 years expired, the succession opened and the 3rd defendant became a co-owner with the plaintiff. There is no evidence that after this event, the 3rd defendant openly set up his adverse title as against the plaintiff. Possession must prima facie be attributed to lawful title; in this case it was not exclusive, but on behalf of plaintiff as well. Article 134 does not, therefore, apply. See Tarubai v. Venkatrao (1), Asansab Ravuthan v. Vamana Rau (2), Moidin v. Oothumanganni (3) and Ponnusaiamy Iyer v. Permaye (4).

JUDGMENT—The properties in suit belonged to one Chella Pillai. He sold the properties to one Palamalai and obtained an agreement to reconvey the properties. After the death of Chella Pillai, the plaintiff, as one of the reversioners, sued his widow and the purchaser, Palamalai, in 1885 for a declaration that the property was only subject to a mortgage and that the alleged sale did not pass an absolute interest to the purchaser. The decree in that suit was that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the properties after the death of the widow in case she did not redeem the properties herself. After this decree, Palamalai sold the properties in 1893 to the father of the 3rd defendant and put him in possession. The widow died in 1900. On her death, the heirs of her husband were the plaintiff and the 3rd defendant. Plaintiff instituted this suit for redemption. The 3rd defendant pleaded among other things that as he and his father were in possession since 1893 under a sale from a mortgagee, they had perfected their title by prescription against the plaintiff at the date of the suit. Article 134 of the Limitation Act was relied on. The District Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the legal representative of the original mortgagee was not impleaded. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge differed from the lower Court on this question and decreed the claim, holding that the suit was not barred by limitation. In second appeal, we called for a finding whether the father of the 3rd defendant had knowledge of the decree obtained by the plaintiff in 1885. The finding is in the negative.

We agree with the lower Appellate Court that the suit is not barred by limitation. It is true that the possession taken by the father of the 3rd defendant could have been perfected under Article 134, as the property was sold to him by a mortgagee. But before 12 years were over, a new right accrued to the 3rd defendant. He became the heir to the property with the plaintiff in 1900. From the point of view of the plaintiff, he is entitled to say that when succession opened to him, a co-parcener of his was in possession and that that possession was not adverse to him unless and until he was excluded notoriously. If the 3rd defendant wanted to rely upon his right as a purchaser from the mortgagee, he should have put that forward to the knowledge of the plaintiff. There are not many authorities bearing on the question.

In Tarubai v. Venkatrao (1), Batty, J., says:—"In the second when there has been no such ouster as to give notice of the adverse nature of the possession, it is incumbent on the person alleging that the title set up against him is barred by twelve years' adverse possession, to show, not only that his possession has lasted for twelve years, but that it has all the time been in open conflict with the title on which the plaintiff relies. The result is, as above indicated, if there has been no ouster or open and notorious act of taking possession, then the person relying on his possession to defeat title must show that it was of such a nature, and involved the exercise of rights so irreconcilable with those claimable by the plaintiff, as to give the plaintiff occasion to dispute that possession (or, in other words, that it was such as to give a cause of action or right to sue for possession) throughout the twelve years next preceding the suit."

The language of Article 144 which speaks of possession 'becoming adverse' supports this view. Reference may also be made to Asansab Ravathan v. Vamana Rau (2) and Moidin v. Oothumangauni (3). The decision in Ponnusawmy Iyer v. Permaye (4) is in favour of this position. There is no doubt that possession held by one of the co-owners will not be adverse to the others until they have notice of the hostile claim. The difficulty in this case arises from the fact that possession was hostile when it commenced. We have not been referred to any authority which shows that such a possession continues to be hostile notwithstanding the accrual of a peaceful title before the completion of the adverse possession. Possession should be prima facie attributed to a lawful title; we think the third defendant on the death of the widow must be deemed to have held the property on behalf of the plaintiff as well.

The decision of the Subordinate Judge is right and we dismiss the second appeal with costs. Time for redemption is extended to three months from this date.

Appeal dismissed.

Government Tenants (Punjab) Act (III of 1893), s. 8—Agreement to allow others to occupy land granted by Government, whether binding.

Where a Government tenant executed a deed of agreement in favour of his three brothers whereby he let them occupy one-half of the land included in the Government grant and on his subsequently seeking to eject them, the brothers sued to have the notice of ejectment cancelled:

Held, that the agreement admitting the plaintiffs to a share in the tenancy without the previous consent in writing of the Financial Commissioner was void, as being in contravention of section 8 of the Government Tenants (Punjab) Act, 1893, and could not be relied on. [p. 403, col. 1.]

VIR SINGH v. KALA SINGH.

Revision from the order of the Commissioner, Lahore Division, dated the 6th January 1913.

Sardar Kharak Singh, for the Petitioners.

ORDER.—The defendant, Kala Singh, is tenant under Government of a colony grant of $1\frac{1}{2}$ squares in the Chunian Colony. The plaintiffs in this case, Vir Singh and Samand Singh, are his brothers. The plaintiff in Revision Case No. 86 is a third brother, Chanda Singh. The facts in the two cases are the same and will be dealt with in one order.

The defendant, Kala Singh, associated his three brothers with him in the breaking up and cultivation of the land included in the Government grant. He now seeks to eject his brothers and the present suit is brought by the latter to have the notice of ejectment cancelled. The first Court decreed cancellation. The Assistant Commissioner of Kasur, exercising the powers of a Collector, accepted defendant's appeal and set aside the decree of the first Court. He also remanded the case to the first Court for a decision as to the amount of compensation on ejectment to be awarded to plaintiffs. The plaintiffs appealed to the Commissioner, who declined to interfere with the Collector's order. They now apply to this Court on the revision side.

The plaintiffs, apart from a point as to the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, which will be dealt with below, rely chiefly on a deed of agreement executed in their favour by defendant shortly after the land had been allotted to the latter by the Colonization Officer. The following is a translation of this deed of agreement which was executed on 8th July 1905:—

"I, Kala Singh, son of Amir Singh, caste Kambo Mutti, resident of Mauza Killa Ganja, Tahsil Chunian, do hereby declare that in Chak No. 41 of Rakh Shaikhoo I have been granted one square of land and half a square divided diagonally measuring about 58 ghumaons. I had promised to my full brothers, Chanda Singh, Samand Singh and Vir Singh, of Mauza Killa Ganja of the Chunian

Tahsil that when I should be granted land by Government, I would occupy one-half of the grant and the other half would be occupied by all the three persons, Chanda Singh, etc. I have now executed this deed of agreement to the effect that the said Chanda Singh, Samand Singh and Vir Singh will be considered as entitled to one-half of the grant by Government in the same way as I would be. In short, they shall pay all the cesses in respect of their half share and shall receive the produce thereof. I will not object to it in any way. If I should try to eject them for any reason, the said persons will be at liberty to take from me their damages in respect of half the land at the rate of...per ghumaon. I will have no objection to it. I have, therefore, executed this agreement so that it may serve as authority. Dated 8th July 1905 corresponding to 25th Har Sambat 1962.

Witnesses—

(Sd.) Chuha, son of Thumb impression of Kisheu of Khudian. Kala Singh, aged 45."

(Sd.) Sham Singh, son of Lal Singh of Khudian."

The Collector has held this agreement to be invalid with reference to the terms of the Government Tenants Act, 1893, section 8 of which provides as follows:—

"The rights or interest vested in a tenant by or under this Act shall not be capable of being attached or sold in execution of a decree or order of any Court or in any insolvency proceedings, nor shall they or any of them, without the previous consent in writing of the Financial Commissioner, be transferred or charged by any sale, gift, mortgage or other private contract"

As no written consent of the Financial Commissioner was given to the alienation which the agreement of 8th July 1905 was intended to effect, Mr. Harcourt holds that it is invalid and cannot be recognised.

Now, if the case is to be governed by the ruling of the Chief Court in Hussain Khan v. Jalau Khan (1) it must be admitted that the agreement under consideration, in a suit between the parties to the agreement (Government not being a party), cannot thus be treated as invalid. In that case also, section 8 of the Government Tenants Act, 1893, was pleaded as a bar, but Mr. Justice Robertson held that the agreement was valid and that as between the parties section 8 of the Act mentioned was no bar. It was added, however, that the decision was not binding upon the Financial Commissioner.

This ruling, if it is to be generally followed, will have a far-reaching effect. Not only in the Chunan Colony, but in the Chenab and Jhelum Colonies, and in the new Colonies of the Triple Canal Project, Government has created and is creating tenancies which are subject to the prohibitions against transfer contained in section 8 of the Government Tenants Act, 1893, and the corresponding section (section 19) of the Colonization of Government Lands Act, 1912. The object and intention of such a prohibition are obvious. On the one hand, Colonists are selected individuals possessing certain qualifications. If a selected Colonist were, without permission, to transfer his land to a person not possessing the requisite qualifications, the policy governing colonization operations might be defeated. Again, it is part of the policy governing colonization to allot holdings of a certain minimum size. The evils of small holdings in the more congested districts of the Province were very present to Government at the time it was decided to allot only holdings of a fairly large size. In time, sub-division of holdings will come in consequence of successions by inheritance, but this evil will be retarded for a generation or more if, to start with, the unit of allotment is a large one. A few exceptions occurring in the practical operation of the foregoing prohibitions against transfer might not have any material effect upon the general policy, but it is obvious that a ruling such as that in Hussain Khan v. Jahan Khan (1) must stimulate transfers in contravention of the statutory provisions of the Acts of 1893 and 1912, and that upon the Executive Officers of Government will be thrown the invidious and burdensome task of stepping in and ejecting the alienees, who ought not to be in possession if the prohibitions against transfer contained in the two Acts, are observed.

It becomes very necessary, therefore, to examine the grounds upon which Mr. Justice Robertson's ruling is based. The learned Judge refers to section 23 of the Indian Contract Act, but he does so only in connection with a contention advanced in the suit before him that an agreement of the nature therein propounded was fraudulent. He did not notice the grounds mentioned in the same section, which really operate to invalidate any agreement of the kind. Section 23 provides that every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void. And it further provides that the object or consideration is unlawful if, inter alia:—

It is forbidden by law; or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law; or the Court regards it as opposed to public policy.

The following illustration is appended to the section as a sample of an agreement which would "defeat the object of the law":

"A's estate is sold for arrears of revenue under the provisions of an Act of the Legislature, by which the defaulter is prohibited from purchasing the estate. B, upon an understanding with A, becomes the purchaser, and agrees to convey the estate to A, upon receiving from him the price which B has paid. The agreement is void, as it renders the transaction, in effect, a purchase by the defaulter, and would so defeat the object of the law."

Now we are not without guidance in the rulings of the High Courts as to the scope and meaning of these clauses of section 23 of the Contract Act, which operate to safeguard the objects of statutory enactments. Agreements which have been held to be void under this section include a sub-lease of an excise contract [Debi Prasad v. Rup Ram (2)], a transfer of a share in an excise contract [Hormasji Motabhai v. Pestonji Dhanjibhai (3)], a transfer of occupancy rights declared by Statute to be non-transferable [Durga v. Jhinguri (4), Jhinguri Tewari v. Durga (5) and Kashi Prasad v. Kedar Nath Sahu (6)] and a transfer by a disqualified proprietor in contravention of section 8 of the Jhansi Encumbered Estates Act, 1882 [Radha Bai v. Kamod Singh (7)]. In all these cases, the agreements were, in suits between transferees and transferors, held to be void as defeating the object of the law. It is impossible not to regard a transfer in contravention of section 8 of the Punjab Tenants Act, 1893, or section 19 of the Colonization Act, 1912, as void on similar grounds. On a similar ground I held in Mohammad Nasir Khan v. Farid (8) that an agreement providing for the sale of canal water in contravention of the provisions of Act VIII of 1873 was void under section 23 of the Contract Act.

(2) 10 A. 577; A. W. N. (1888) 215.

VIR SINGH v. KALA SINGH.

In Hussain Khan v. Jahan Khan (1), Mr. Justice Robertson founds an argument on the analogy of transfers by occupancy tenants. But there is in reality no analogy. The Punjab Tenancy Act does not enact that transfers by occupancy tenants without the consent of the landlord shall be void. It only provides (section 60) that such transfers shall be voidable. They are voidable only at the instance of the landlord. As between the parties, therefore, they hold good and are valid, unless and until they are invalidated by the landlord. An agreement, on the other hand, of which the object is unlawful as explained in section 23 of the Contract Act is void ab initio.

It is hardly necessary to notice the ruling in Ali Mardan v. Bakur Khan (9), which is referred to by Mr. Justice Robertson in Hussain Khan v. Jahan Khan (1). That ruling amounts to nothing more than that there is no special procedure open to the Revenue Authorities, corresponding to section 21A of the Land Alienation Act, whereby the Civil Appellate Courts can be moved by the Deputy Commissioner for the revision of a decree which gives effect to an agreement in contravention of section 8 of the Government Tenants Act, 1893.

Holding, therefore, as I do, that the agreement of 8th July is void and was void from the start, it is necessary to determine the question as to the status of the parties.

Plaintiffs would in a suit for the cancellation of a notice of ejectment be entitled to succeed if they could show that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties, and that the issue of a notice of ejectment by a Revenue Officer was, therefore, without jurisdiction. Plaintiffs cannot be regarded as trespassers because they first occupied the land with the permission of defendant. They cannot be regarded as co-sharers, because to give them such a status would be to give effect to a void agreement. The mere fact that they paid no rent to defendant—they paid their share of Government dues—does not exclude them from the definition of "tenant" [section 4 (5), Tenancy Act]. Indeed the agreement itself contemplates a contingent ejectment. On all grounds, therefore, I must hold that the relationship of landlord and tenant does exist between the parties. Although under section 8 of the Government Tenants Act of 1893, it is doubtful whether Government tenants could sub-let without permission, there is no doubt as to the existing law on the subject under the Act of 1912, which allows sub-letting. There is, therefore, now no statutory bar to plaintiffs being regarded as tenants of the defendant.

The order of the Collector, which it is sought to revise, directed that the case be remanded to the first Court for determination of the question of compensation. This order will now be carried out. Revision rejected.

JUDGMENT.—This appellant was enjoying an annuity in Mysore Province, instalments of which were remitted by her agent to her while she was resident in British India.

We agree with the Subordinate Judge that these remittances were "income" under Part IV of Schedule II of the Income Tax Act.

It is argued that after collection by the agent, the money ceased to be income, that the act of the agent in receiving the money in Mysore was tantamount to an act of the principal; and that having once been received in Mysore, it could not again be received in British India when the agent sent it on to his principal "Income" means "what comes in", a definition which will clearly embrace sums derived from a source like this; and it is incontestable that in this case these sums were "received in British India" within the definition in section 3, clause (5), of the Income Tax Act and were, therefore, taxable.

This second appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The following case has been stated by the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority of these Provinces to this Court under section 57 of the Indian Stamp Act of 1899. The case stated runs as follows: On the 23rd of August 1914, one Mathura Das died childless, leaving property of the estimated value of Rs. 2,25,000. The sister of the deceased applied for Letters of Administration. Gobind Das, a collateral of of Mathura Das, disputed her claim. Eventually the two claimants effected a compromise, and to give effect to this compromise both the parties executed separate instruments of even date on the 14th of September 1914.
Each instrument was treated as a deed of release and was stamped with a stamp
Rs. 5. The instrument executed by Gobind Das was presented for registration and was impounded by the Sub-Registrar, who considered it to be an instrument of partition chargeable with a duty of Rs. 375. The instrument was sent to the Collector, who considered it to be a release and referred the case to the Board of Revenue under section 56 (2) of the Act. The Chief Controlling Revenue Authority give it as their opinion that the two deeds read together constitute an instrument of partition liable to a duty of Rs. 375 under Article 45, Schedule I, of the Stamp Act. But as they consider the question as one of some difficulty, the case has been referred to this Court. No one appears on behalf of the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority. The lady is represented in this Court by the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, and Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose appears for Gobind Das. We have heard the former Advocate. The deeds have been read over to us. We have carefully considered their contents and we are satisfied that as the deeds stand, they are instruments of release within the meaning of Article 55, Schedule I, of the Stamp Act. The case as put by the lady in her deed is that under the Mayukha Law, she is the owner of the property left by the deceased Mathura Das. The case as put by Gobind Das in the document executed by him is that under the Mitakshara Law, he is the sole owner of the property in question. Neither of them states himself or herself as co-owner with the other, nor can they do so rightly. We, therefore, have not a case of persons purporting to be co-owners of the property and agreeing to divide the same. Each party before us claims to be the sole and full owner and in order to avoid litigation agrees to release in favour of the other a certain portion of the property which he or she claims to be his or her property in full. The Board of Revenue has cited Reference under Stamp Act, section 46 (1) as applicable to this case. But that was a case in which the parties purported to be the co-owners of the property. The view which we take is supported by Eknath S. Gownde v. Jagannath S. Gownde (2) and Reference under Stamp Act, section 46(3). We direct that this be returned to the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority as our decision in this case. The deeds will be returned with the decision.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—"Malik"—"Nir-buyadha malik"—Will by husband in favour of his wife—Absolute interest given—Gift over, provision for, validity of—Construction of Will—Plain meaning—Language clear and unequivocal—Rules of law, harsh consequences of.

The use of the term "malik" may not by itself necessarily create an absolute interest, but the term when qualified by the word "nirbuyadha" indicates absolute ownership. [p. 407, col. 1.]

A Hindu testator appointed his wife as his executrix. A clause in the Will vested in her whatever might remain, after the payment of debts and expenses, absolutely and with complete power of alienation. Other clauses provided for the adoption of sons and in case of there being no adopted son or no son or wife of the adopted son at the time of the death of the widow, the heir, according to the Hindu Shastras who should be alive at the time, should get the properties which should remain after disposal by the widow by way of gift or sale.

Held, that the testator gave an absolute interest in his estate to his widow with full powers of alienation; [p. 412, col. 1.]

that the gift over of what might remain undisposed of by her was void and inoperative in law. [p. 412, col. 1.]

Semble.—If an estate is given in terms which confer an absolute estate to a named donee, and, then, further interests are given merely after or on the termination of that donee's interest, and not in defeasance of it, his absolute interest is not cut down and the further interests fail. [p. 408, col. 2.]

A gift over, if a devisee or legatee to whom an absolute interest is given does not dispose of his interest or dies intestate or dies before selling his interest, is void both as regards realty and personalty. [p. 409, col. 1.]

When an absolute interest has been given to the first taker, followed by a gift over of what may not be required by him, the gift over, though couched in the most direct and precise words, is void for uncertainty. [p. 410, col. 2.]

An instrument must receive a construction according to the plain meaning of the words and sentences therein contained; that is, the words are to be first read in their grammatical and ordinary sense, unless the context shows otherwise. [p. 411, col. 2.]

Where the language is clear and unequivocal, the construction cannot be altered or wrested to something different from the plain meaning for the purpose of escaping from what may seem to be the harsh consequences of rules of law. [p. 412, col. 1.]

SURES CHANDRA PALIT v. LALIT MOHAN DUTTA.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet, dated the 17th February 1913.

Babu Rishindra Nath Sarkar, for the Appellants.

Babus Tarakishore Chaudhuri and Gobinda Chunder Dey Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation, which has culminated in this appeal, originally formed the estate of one Sarat Chandra Datta Chaudhuri, who made a testamentary disposition on the 2nd April 1899, and died on the 7th November 1901. He left a childless widow, Girija Sundari Chaudhuri, who died on the 21st November 1903. After the death of the widow, a dispute arose as to the devolution of the estate of her husband which had vested in her. The sons of the sister of the widow contended that the estate had vested in her absolutely and on her death, had devolved upon them as her heirs. The son of the sister of the testator contended, on the other hand, that the widow took nothing beyond a life-interest and that upon her death, the estate had devolved upon him as the reversionary heir to the estate of her husband. The result was that on the 11th September 1911, the sons of the sister of the widow instituted this suit against the son of the sister of the testator for construction of his Will and for recovery of possession of his estate on declaration of title thereto. Three other persons, with whom we are not now concerned, were also joined as defendants. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, on the ground that the widow took only a life-interest and that upon her death, the estate vested in the first defendant as reversionary heir. The plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court and have contended, first, that the widow took an absolute estate under the Will of her husband, and, secondly, that the gift over of what might remain undisposed of by her, was repugnant and void.

The rights of the litigants depend upon a true construction of the Will of the testator and the determination of the legal effect of the disposition made by him. The material clauses of the Will, after the usual prefatory words, are as follows:—

"2. If, at the time of my death, no son is born of my loins or no son exists, and I die childless, then in respect of my aforesaid moveable and immoveable properties which shall be rightfully owned by me, at the time of my death, by virtue of purchase, gift, inheritance or by any other right, I appoint my wife, Srimati Girija Sundari Chowdhury, to be the achhi or executrix after my death.

3. Immediately after my death, my executrix, i.e. achhi, shall defray the expenses, etc., of my cremation ceremony with the income of my property and shall pay my just debts, etc., if there be any, and shall meet other necessary expenses. If the expenses cannot be met with the income of the aforesaid properties, the said achhi, i. e., executrix, if necessary, shall be competent to sell some portion of my aforesaid properties.

4. After the performance of what should be done, according to the purport of the foregoing paragraph, my widow, Srimati Girija Sundari Chowdhury, shall obtain whatever moveable and immoveable properties shall be left by me and she shall be the absolute owner, with the rights of gift, sale and all other kinds of transfer.

5. If no son is born of my loins, or there be no son, my widow, Srimati Girija Sundari Chowdhury, if she wishes, shall be competent to adopt a son; if she wishes, she shall be competent to adopt three sons in succession, but she shall not be competent to adopt another son during the life-time of one, or if such son does not forsake his adoptive mother, or if any of them dies leaving a male child, then during the life-time of such male child.

6. If I adopt a son, during my life-time or after my death, my widow adopts a son, in that case, after her, i. e., my widow's death, the said adopted son shall get such properties as shall remain after sale or gift by my widow; and he shall be the absolute owner, with the rights of gift, sale and all other kinds of transfer; but the said adopted son shall not be competent to go away to the house of his natural father and mother, that is, he shall dwell in my own house or in a separate house erected by him in our own village. If he does not do so, he shall be fully deprived of the said properties. During the life-time of my widow, the said adopted son shall not have any right over the aforesaid properties.

7. If the said adopted son shall have no son or if he dies before a son is born to him, his widow shall be in enjoyment and possession of the said properties, provided my widow or her husband has not conferred on her any special right in respect of the said properties. But if she does not live in my own house, or in the house erected by her husband or that erected by her in my own village, she shall be deprived of the right of enjoyment and possession of the said properties.

8. If, at the time of death of my widow, there be no adopted son or if no son or wife of the adopted son be alive, then, my heir, according to the Hindu Shastras, who shall be alive at the time, shall get the properties which shall remain after disposal by my wife by way of gift or sale of the same."

The second clause appoints the widow as executrix. The third clause authorises her to meet the expenses and pay the debts by sale, if necessary, of a portion of the estate. The fourth clause vests in her, whatever might remain after the payment of debts and expenses, absolutely and with complete power of alienation. It cannot be disputed that the effect of this clause, taken by itself, is to constitute the widow the absolute proprietor of the estate. Her status is described, not merely as that of malik, but as that of nirbuyadha malik. The use of the term malik may not by itself necessarily create an absolute interest, as explained in the cases of Surajmani v. Rabi Nath (1); Punchoo Money v. Troylucko Mohiney (2); Shib Lakshau Bhakat v. Srimati Tarangini (3); Padam Lal v. Tek Singh (4). But, in the case before us, the term malik is qualified by the word nirbuyadha which, as is clear from the Sanskrit lexicons of Wilson, Bohtlingk and Roth and Monier Williams signifies 'completed' or 'finished'. In fact, the well-known expression nirbuyadha malik is the strongest and most unequivocal phrase employed in the vernacular to indicate absolute ownership. In addition to this, we have two important facts; first, that as pointed out in Kollany Kooer v. Luchmee Pershad (5); Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (6) and Rajnarain Bhaduri v. Katyayani Dabee (7), affirming Rajnarain Bhaduri v. Ashutosh Chuckerbutty (8), the effect of the word malik is to confer on the donee a heritable and alienable estate; and secondly, that the fourth clause itself expressly confers on the widow full power of alienation of all kinds. As explained in Toolsi Dass Kurmookar v. Madan Gopal Dey (9); Amarendra Nath Bose v. Shuradhany Dasi (10); Seth Mulchand Badharsha v. Bai Mancha (11) and Jogeswar Narain v. Ram Chandra Dutt (12), when a power of absolute disposition is conferred on the donee, the provision indicates that the testator intended to create an absolute interest in favour of the donee. No doubt, there may be cases where, as in Hara Kumari Dasi v. Mohim Chandra Sarkar (13) and possibly in Saroda Sundari v. Kristo Jiban Pal (14), all the provisions of a Will taken together may indicate that the widow took only a life-interest coupled with a power of appointment to alienate by gift or sale the property passing by the Will; but this doctrine cannot be applied if there is in so many words a clear and absolute gift to the widow, as in the case before us. We thus start with the fundamental position that by the fourth clause the widow took an absolute interest in the estate devised. Is there, then, any provision in the Will which restricts the clear and unambiguous effect of this clause. The Subordinate Judge, in support of his view, relied upon the clauses which authorise the widow to adopt and prescribe the devolution of the estate in the event of such adoption. In our opinion, these provisions do not qualify the effect of the fourth clause. In fact, even the later clauses explicitly provide that the widow would have absolute interest notwithstanding the adoption, that the adopted son would not have any right over the estate during her life-time and that after her death, he should get only such properties as might remain after sale or gift by the widow, so that it is conceivable that the widow might alienate the entire estate and leave nothing for the adopted son to take. The case is thus very different from that before the House of Lords in Comiskey v. Bowring-Hanbury (15), where, although an absolute gift was made to the widow, there was clear indication that the estate was to be kept intact by her for transmission to the nieces of the testator, in whose favour, there was an executory gift to take effect on her death. The Subordinate Judge also relied upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Shamsul Huda v. Sheikram (16) in support of the view that in construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property, namely, that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, specially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family, and also that a Hindu knows that as a general rule, at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate. This is indisputable and has been re-affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Radha Prasad Mullick v. Runimani Dassee (17); but where, as here, the terms are perfectly clear, we cannot assume, contrary to the plain meaning thereof, that the testator intended to create estates of a particular description and then bend and twist the language in favour of the assumption so made. In our opinion, there is nothing in any of the later clauses of the Will which cuts down the absolute estate created in favour of the widow in the fourth clause in the most unequivocal terms conceivable. It is possible that the testator has, in the later clauses of the Will, made provisions repugnant to what is contained in the fourth clause, but that cannot affect the meaning of what is contained therein. As was observed by the Judicial Committee in Tripurari Pal v. Jagat Tarini Das (18), where an absolute interest is given, the Court will not cut it down by subsequent words, unless they clearly have an effect to restrict it. To the same effect is the principle repeatedly recognised by the House of Lords as a settled rule of construction, namely, that if there is a clear gift, it is not to be cut down by anything subsequent in the Will, which does not, with reasonable certainty, indicate the intention of the testator to cut it down: Thornhill v. Hall (19); Featherston v. Featherston (20); Abbott v. Middleton (21); Randfield v. Randfield (22); In re Freeman, Hope v. Freeman (23). Thus, if an estate is given in terms which confer an absolute estate to a named donee, and, then, further interests are given merely after or on the termination of that donee's interest, and not in defeasance of it, his absolute interest is not cut down, and the further interests fail: Hoare v. Byng (24); Hyndman v. Hyndman (25).

The question next arises, is the gift over contained in the eighth clause valid and operative in law? The appellants have contended that as an absolute interest was conferred on the widow, the gift over was void for repugnancy. This argument is supported by the well-settled rule of English Law that a gift over, if a devisee or legatee to whom an absolute interest is given does not dispose of his interest or dies intestate or dies before selling his interest, is void both as regards realty and personalty. This is clear from a long line of authorities: Lightburne v. Gill (26); Ross v. Ross (27); Green v. Harvey (28); Yalden, In re (29); In re Mortlock's Trust (30); Bowes v. Goslett (31); Henderson v. Cross (32); Gulliver v. Vaux (33); Holmes v. Godson (34); Barton v. Barton (35); Perry v. Merritt (36); Wilcock's Settlement, In re (37); Percy, In re (38); In re Dixon, Dixon v. Charlesworth (39); Jones, In re, Richards v. Jones (40); Comiskey v. Bowring Hanbury (15); *Bull v. (48); Stretton v. Fitz Gerald (49); Parnell v. Boyd (50); In re Walker, Lloyd v. Tweedy (51).

The decisions in Upwell v. Halsey (52) and Doe, d. Stevenson v. Glover (53) to the contrary effect cannot be treated as good law; the first of these cases was treated as overruled by Loughborough, L. C., in Malim v. Keighley (54) and by Sugden, L. C., in Phillips v. Eastwood (44); the second case was decided in ignorance of the decision in Gulliver v. Vaux (33), which, though decided in the Common Pleas in 1746, was brought to light in 1856, after a century's repose; it was with reference to this case that Holmes, J., observed in Parnell v. Boyd (50): "It will be recorded for a precedent. And many an error, by the same example, will rush into the State." The rule thus steadily applied in England and Ireland is, however, different from that recognised by the Law of Scotland, for, as pointed out by the House of Lords in Baratow v. Black (55), the position of an absolute unlimited owner subject to a conditional gift over, though unknown to the law of England, is well known to the Scotch Law.

The rule of English Law has been adopted almost universally in the Courts of the United States, and is thus formulated by Chancellor Kent in his Commentaries (Vol. IV, 270): "if there be an absolute power of disposition given by the Will to the first taker, as if an estate be devised to A in fee, and if he dies possessed of the property without lawful issue, the remainder over, or remainder over the property which he, dying without heirs, should leave, or without selling or devising the same, in all such cases, the remainder over is void as a remainder, because of the preceding fee; and it is void by way of executory devise, because the limitation is inconsistent with the absolute estate or power of disposition expressly given or necessarily implied by the Will." Jackson v. Bull (56); Jackson v. Robins (57), Id. v. Id. (58); Attorney General v. Hall (59). The rule formulated by Kent has been twice approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, Smith v. Bell (60); Howard v. Carusi (61).

The rule enunciated above has been recently adopted by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council without discussion in Tripurari Pal v. Jagat Tarini Dasi (18). There the testator directed, with regard to a debttar estate, which he had dedicated and religious ceremonies which he had established during his life-time, that his son, Mukunda Murari, would be the shebait. He appointed the mother of the boy to be shebait as guardian during his minority. He next proceeded to provide that, if during his life-time or after his death the said Mukunda Murari died, his widow would be shebait, and after her death her two daughters would be shebait. After the death of the testator, the widow, during the minority of the boy acted as shebait and conducted the worship. Mukunda, on attainment of his majority, took possession and acted as shebait; he died in 1900, leaving a minor son and widow. His mother then resumed possession under the gift over in her favour. The infant son of Mukunda, through his mother, sued the widow and daughters of the testator for a declaration that he had the sole right to the debttar estate of his grandfather as the heir of his father, in whom it had previously vested absolutely on his attaining majority. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit. This Court on appeal reversed that decision and held that the shebaitship devolved, upon the death of Mukunda, upon his mother, and that upon the death of the latter, it devolved on her daughters. The plaintiff appealed to the Privy Council and contended before the Judicial Committee that his father, Murari, took an absolute estate in the shebaitship, which on his death devolved on the plaintiff by right of inheritance; the contention was that the gift over was contrary to law, and reference was made to section 111 of the Indian Succession Act and the decision of the Judicial Committee in Narendra Nath Sirkar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (62). The Judicial Committee accepted the contention and held that, as there was an absolute gift to Mukunda on his attaining his majority, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. This fits in exactly with the rule enunciated by Sir Arthur Hobhouse in Mussoorie Bank v. Rayner (63), Mussoorie Bank, Limited v. Rayner (64) namely, that when an absolute interest has been given to the first taker, followed by a gift over of what may not be required by him, the gift over, though couched in the most direct and precise words, is void for uncertainty, according to a very well-known and well-established class of cases. Much stress has been laid in this Court on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (65). That case is, in our opinion, clearly distinguishable and its precise effect was stated by Lord Hobhouse in Kristoromoni Dasi v. Narendra Krishna Bahadur (66); "there was no gift over in that case: Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (65). The donor made a gift to his sister, Kasiswari, in vernacular terms, which, though peculiar and referring only to lineal heirs, this Committee held to be identical in effect with other terms well known and often used by Hindu donors who intend to pass the whole inheritance, though they mention only children or issue. Then he said, 'no other heir shall be entitled.' This was held to mean that if Kasiswari died leaving no issue then living, her interest was to cease. In effect, the construction was that if Kasiswari left issue, the absolute interest given to her in the first instance was to remain unaffected, but if she left none, it was cut down to a life-interest. In the latter case, nothing had passed from the donor but the life-interest, and when that was spent, he or his heir would lawfully re-enter." This principle clearly does not avail the respondents, nor can they derive any assistance from the rule laid down in Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (67), Sreemutty Soorjmoney Dossee v. Denobundo Mullick (68) as to the defeasance of a prior absolute interest by a subsequent event. That rule has no application where, as here, there is an absolute gift of property to a person, followed by a gift over in the event of his dying intestate or not disposing of it. There is, in our opinion, no substantial answer to the contention that where a devisee takes an absolute interest, a gift over, on his failure to dispose of the property or of whatever part of the property he does not dispose of, is void.

An ingenious attempt has been made to criticise the rule enunciated and recognised in the law of England, and we are not unmindful that the rule has been the subject of unfavourable comment by text writers [see, for instance, Gray on Restraints on the Alienation of Property, sections 57—74]. For all practical purposes, however, it is fruitless to seek the logical justification of a principle which has been recognised or approved twice by the House of Lords [Lighthburne v. Gill (26), Comiskey v. Bowring-Hanbury (15)], twice by the Judicial Committee [Tripurari Pal v. Jagat Tarini Dasi (18); Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor (63)] and twice by the Supreme Court of the United States [Smith v. Bell (60); Howard v. Carusi (61)]. Reference may be made, however, to the judgments of Grant, M. R., in Bull v. Kingston (41), of Truro, L. C., in Watkins v. Williams (45), of Burnett, J., in Gulliver v. Vaux (33), of Turner, L. J., in Holmes v. Godson (34), of Fry, J., in Shaw v. Ford (47) and of Kent, C., in Jackson v. Robins (57), where the rule is defended on the grounds of uncertainty, repugnancy to the prior gift, and of public policy. As Turner, L. J., said in Holmes v. Godson (34), the law has said that if a man dies intestate, the real estate shall go to the heir and the personal estate to the next of kin, and any disposition which tends to contravene that disposition which the law would make, is against the policy of law and, therefore, void. Lord Macnaghten emphasised this when he said in Attorney General v. Ailesbury (69): "Real estate must descend according to the ordinary rules of real property. You cannot give real estate in fee and say that on the death of the owner intestate it shall go to his next of kin".

We may add that in cases of this description, the rule of construction formulated by Tindal, C. J., in Scarborough v. Savile (70) applies: "not only ought we to look to the words of the Will alone, to determine the operation and effect of the devise, but that we ought to disregard altogether the legal consequences which may follow from the nature and qualities of the estate, when such estate is once collected from the words of the Will itself." The instrument must receive a construction according to the plain meaning of the words and sentences therein contained: that is, the words are to be first read in their grammatical and ordinary sense, unless the context shows otherwise: Hamilton v. Ritchie (71); Gordon v. Gordon (72); Seale-Hayne v. Jodrell (73). As Knight Bruce, L. J., points out in Low v. Thomas (74), this rule comes from the Digest (lib. 32, tit. 1, section 69) where Marcellus says: "Non aliter a significatione verborum recedi oportet quam cum manifestum est aliud sensisse testatorem," (a departure from the literal meaning of the words used is not justifiable, unless it be clear that the testator himself intended something different therefrom). But as Halsbury, L. C., said in Leader v. Duffey (75), we shall be arguing in a vicious circle if, apart from the language of the instrument, we start with the assumption that the testator intended to create such estates only as the law allows, and then read into his words a meaning they will not legitimately bear. To the same effect are the observations of Cairns, L. C., in Coltsmann v. Coltsmann (76). As Buller, J., said in Hodgson v.

VIYAPURI v. SONAMMA BOI AMMANI.

Ambrose (77), the question whether the intention is consistent with the rules of law or not, can never arise till it is settled what the intention was. Where there is no obscurity or ambiguity, there is no room for application of the doctrine that it is better to effectuate than to destroy the intention, for as Lord Coke quaintly puts it, "whosoever the words of a deed or of the parties without deed may have a double intendment, and the one standeth with law and right, and the other is wrongful and against law, the intendment that standeth with law shall be taken": 1 Co. Lit., 42 a, b, Christie v. Gosling (78). Where, however, the language is clear and unequivocal, the construction cannot be altered or wrested to something different from the plain meaning for the purpose of escaping from what may seem to be the harsh consequences of rules of law: Dungannon v. Smith (79), Pearks v. Mosley (80), DeBeauvoir v. DeBeauvoir (81), Abbott v. Middleton (21), Bathurst v. Errington (82), Martin v. Holgate (83). We are of opinion that upon a true construction of the Will before us, the following positions are incontestable, namely, first, that the testator gave an absolute interest in his estate to his widow with full powers of alienation; and, secondly, that the gift over of what might remain undisposed of by her, was void and inoperative in law. There is thus no escape from the position that after the death of the widow, the estate has devolved upon the plaintiffs as her heirs, and not upon the first defendant as the reversionary heir to the testator.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside. The plaintiffs will have a decree for possession of the properties in suit, exclusive of the properties mentioned in the two schedules attached to the written statement of the third defendant dated the 20th February 1912, but inclusive of one half of property 14 of the second schedule of that written statement. The plaintiff will also be entitled to costs in both the Courts and to mesne profits from the first defendant.

Appeal allowed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 223 of 1911, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Tiruvadi, in Original Suit No. 131 of 1910.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Padmanabha Aiyangar, for Mr. A. K. Madhava Rao, for the Respondent.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 27th August 1914, the Court (Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.), made the following ORDER.—The learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with the case in the alternative with reference to either of the possible views of the facts. We think it necessary to have his conclusion as to them definitely expressed and, therefore, call on him for a finding on the following issue:—

"Was 1st defendant admitted by Solomon Thenkondan as a porakudi, and if so, when?"

The finding should be submitted within six weeks from this date; and the parties will be at liberty to file objections to the finding within seven days after notice of the return of the same shall have been posted up in this Court.

In compliance with the above order, the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore submitted the following

FINDING.—Their Lordships Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar, directed this Court to record a specific finding on the following issue, viz.:—

when this matter came up before their Lordships in Second Appeal No. 19 of 1913.

2. The learned District Munsif, who has discussed this question in paragraphs 8 to 11 of his judgment, came to the conclusion that "although the Thenkondans might have been the original owners of the land, still the porakudi tenancy set up is not true. There is evidence on the defendants' side to show that 1st defendant's ancestors have been in exclusive possession from a very long time and that the 1st defendant's family never did pannai work." When the matter came up before this Court, my predecessor, Mr. D. Venkoba Row, made the following remarks:—

"The plaintiff has adduced evidence to show that Solomon Thenkondan (plaintiff's 1st witness) let 1st defendant into possession about 20 or 25 years ago on condition of his doing service and that he was doing service till 5 or 6 years ago. The District Munsif has disbelieved it, and I am not sure if he is right in doing so. No doubt there are discrepancies in the evidence, but they, by themselves, would not be sufficient, I think, in a case like this to afford proper ground for rejecting the evidence.... The oral evidence adduced on defendants' side to show that 1st defendant and his ancestors have been in possession of this manai for three generations, is not, in my opinion, worth much."

3. I have perused the evidence and I cannot agree with the opinion expressed by my predecessor. Plaintiff examined 8 witnesses in all, including (plaintiff's 1st witness) Solomon Thenkondan. The plaint land forms a portion of paimash No. 72/4 and it belonged originally to four sharers. Plaintiff's 1st witness deposed that the easternmost $\frac{1}{4}$ th fell to the share of VITAPPEL P. SONAMMA POI AMMANI.

Muthaiyan Thenkondan, which is now in 1st defendant's enjoyment as pannayal, that it was never enjoyed by Thirupathi and that it is not in Thirupathi's enjoyment at present. Thirupathi is the 3rd defendant in the suit. Immediately west of Muthaiya Thenkondan's share is plaintiff's 1st witness's share, i. e., plaint site. This particular plot is said to be a vacant site in the possession of 1st defendant and others. The next 1/4th share is Doraisami Thenkondan's share, and plaintiff's 1st witness cannot say who is in possession of that particular share, and he opined that somebody under 1st defendant must be in possession of that plot. The westernmost 1/4th belongs to Tapasiya Thenkondan which is also in the possession of 1st defendant. Thus from the plaintiff's 1st witness's evidence, it cannot be said that all the four shares are in the possession of the same individual since long and plaintiff's 1st witness himself admits that he has no knowledge in respect of some of the plots at least. It is also admitted by Solomon Thenkondan that the plaint site is a vacant site at present and has been so all through and that the house of 1st and 2nd defendants is north of the pathway north of the plaint land. Plaintiff's 1st witness further admits that before he put 1st defendant in possession of the property, he enjoyed the land by raising vegetables, &c., and that no porakudi was in enjoyment till then. Defendants are not admittedly plaintiff's 1st witness's pannayals at present and when they ceased to be pannayals, is not clear. Plaintiff's 2nd witness, Aiyasami Thenkondan, and plaintiff's 4th witness, Tapasiya Thenkondan, are co-parceners with Solomon Thenkondan and are entitled to 1/4th each in Painash No. 72/4. As pointed out by the learned District Munsif in paragraph 10 of his judgment, there are several contradictions as between the evidence of these three sharers. According to the 2nd witness, 1st defendant's tenancy was on condition of his paying varam for the dry crops cultivated on the plaint land and the pannai work is only a secondary consideration. The building now in existence, according to plaintiff's 2nd witness, came into existence 4 or 5 years ago and till then 1st defendant is said to have been living elsewhere. Whatever it be, the evidence of these three witnesses, Nos. 1, 2 and 4, is interested and ought to be received with great caution. Plaintiff's 3rd witness is the Village Munsif. According to him 1st defendant came into possession of the four sites 20 years ago and he immediately built a house there, which is in direct contravention of the statement made by plaintiff's 2nd witness. This witness is a dismissed Village Munsif and he admits that he was not present when 1st defendant was put into possession. He is also closely related to plaintiff's 1st witness, Solomon Thenkondan, and to Tapasiya Thenkondan. The 5th witness, Seenu Naick, is a mirasdar owning properties worth about Rs. 10,000, but a resident of Koonamangalam, a separate village. This witness says that he was present when the land was given to 1st defendant 25 years ago, along with some manja land given as inam by the Thenkondans. This latter statement is retracted by the witness in re-examination. Witness admitted that 1st defendant owns three manais in the plaint village. Plaintiff's 6th witness is the Village Munsif of the village for the last six years and was assistant Monigar from 1902. He was not present when 1st defendant was put in possession of the property, but adds that a house was built on the manai 20 years ago by 1st defendant. According to the 7th witness, Kuppasami Naick, 1st defendant has been in possession since 25 or 30 years. The witness says that he was present when the manai was given to defendants in consideration of their working for Solomon Thenkondan. The whole manai was allowed to remain vacant till 1st defendant erected a house 12 years ago. This is opposed to the statement made by the other witnesses and of the 2nd witness in particular. The witness is specific that 1st defendant never did pannai labour to anybody. It appears from the evidence of this witness and also from other circumstances in the case that 1st defendant is a man of means, a mirasdar, himself owning about 1 1/2 velis of land and that 2nd and 3rd defendants have also got independent properties of their own. From this standpoint and also from the admission of plaintiff's 5th witness that 1st defendant owns three manais in the plaint village, the inference cannot be easily drawn that 1st and 2nd defendants were the porakudi tenants of plaintiff's 1st witness. Plaintiff's 8th witness, Kallian Pallan, supports plaintiff's version. But from his evidence it clearly appears that he has got strong animus against defendants. He admits having given evidence against 1st defendant's son and nephew in a criminal case.

Further, the witness's brother-in-law was charged with the murder of 1st defendant's brother. Thus, although there are 8 witnesses, Nos. 1, 2 and 4 are interested, 3rd is a dismissed village servant giving vague and interested evidence, 5th is a resident of a separate village having no independent knowledge of the situation, the 6th witness has given evidence against 1st defendant's son, 7th partly useful to defendants and 8th witness is inimically disposed towards defendants. Further, except in the case of one or two witnesses, there is no direct evidence to show under what circumstances defendants got the site from plaintiff's 1st witness and the special porakudi tenancy set up by plaintiff's 1st witness is not satisfactorily established.

4. Defendants examined four witnesses including 1st defendant, Viyapuri, and 2nd defendant, Raman. Defendants' 3rd and 4th witnesses, Payan and Rangan, are residents of the same Palla Street. These four witnesses say that they (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) and their ancestors have been living in this manai since long. It may be that the manai originally belonged to plaintiff's family as found by the District Munsif, but having in view the circumstance that defendants and their forefathers have been living in this manai since long, it is not possible to accept plaintiff's witnesses' evidence about the porakudi tenancy set up by them.

5. Therefore, I find the issue for defendants and against plaintiff.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 28th of April 1915, after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court (Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

We accept the finding, which is one of fact. The question for decision is, then, whether the 1st and 2nd defendants have acquired an absolute title by prescription against plaintiff, purchaser at Court auction of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor of the property. The plaintiff is now suing to recover possession. The 1st and 2nd defendants contend that their prescription conferred on them full title, including both the mortgagor's and the mortgagee's interests. The facts as alleged or found are that the mortgage was in 1878; the suit on it was in 1900; plaintiff's title originated in her purchase on 31st October 1906; the present suit was brought in 1910; and the defendants' adverse possession began 20 years before suit, that is, in 1890. The effect of prescription against a mortgagee under a simple mortgage has been dealt with by two Benches of this Court in Parthasarathi Naikan v. Lakshman Naicken (1) and Ramasami Chetti v. Ponnu Padayachi (2), diametrically opposite conclusions being reached. The matter was the subject of reference to a Full Bench in Peria Aiyar Ambalam v. Shoumugasundaram (3); but it was found unnecessary to deal with it. In this conflict of authority we refer to a Full Bench the question "Whether the possession of a trespasser who has dispossessed a mortgagor, the mortgage being simple, is adverse to the simple mortgagee."

This second appeal coming on for hearing as per above order on the 4th August 1915, upon perusing the said Order of Reference and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, Vakil for the Appellants, and of Mr. C. Padmanabha Aiyangar for Mr. A. K. Madhava Rao, Vakil for the Respondent, and the question having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court expressed the following in Nandan Singh v. Jumman (4) and approved by the Full Bench of that Court in Raj Nath v. Narain Das (5), and was itself in accordance with the Calcutta decision in Aimadar Mandal v. Makhan Lal Dey (6), if it were not this last decision has been questioned in Nandkumar Dobey v. Ajodhya Sahu (7) and not followed in Bireshwar Samanta v. Periya Sakhi Debi (8) where the opposite view taken by Abdur Rahim and Ayling, JJ., in an earlier case in this Court, Ramaswami Chetti v. Ponna Padayachi (2), was accepted as being in accordance with the decisions of the Privy Council in Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rooken Begun (9), Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (10). Before dealing with these decisions, I may say we have not been referred to any English authority for the position that a mortgagee whose right to possession has not accrued may be debarred from suing by possession adverse to his mortgagor commencing after the date of the mortgage. Under the Statute of 21 Jac. I, C. 16, what was barred was the right of entry or right of taking possession, and time did not begin to run until that right accrued, and then only when the possession of the occupier was adverse. So too under sections 2 and 3 of the English Real Property Limitations Act, 1833, in suits by persons entitled to possession under an instrument, time only begins to run from the date when the right to possession accrues. It is well settled that these are the sections applicable to a mortgagee, Doe d. Roynance v. Lightfoot (11), though there are other provisions giving a fresh starting point from the date of part payment. Under an ordinary English mortgage the mortgagee was entitled to possession at any time and could bring ejectment against the mortgagor who only held at his pleasure, Keech v. Hall (12), but the possession so taken by him would be the onerous possession of a mortgagee accountable for the profits to the mortgagor, and it was held that on foreclosure a fresh right of action arises for possession as owner, Pugh v. Heath (13). Under the English Statutes, it seems to me to be immaterial whether possession commencing after the date of the mortgage was or was not adverse to the mortgagor and the recent decision in Nisbet Potts' Contract In re (14) is in accordance with this view.

In Bengal and Madras, outside the Presidency Towns where the Act of James I was received, time under the Regulations ran from the accrual of the plaintiff's cause of action, and this in the case of immovable property was held to accrue when the possession of the occupier became adverse.

In Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rooken Begun (9), which was governed by the Bengal Regulations, the main contention raised by Mr. Rundell Palmer for the appellant was that a suit for foreclosure instituted by his clients more than twelve years after the mortgage debt had become payable was not barred under the Bengal Limitation Regulations, because the disputes and litigation going on between the heirs of the mortgagor and third parties claiming as purchasers were a good cause for not suing earlier. In addition, however, to this contention, which was upheld by their Lordships who disposed of the suit, he argued further that there was no rule of law which creates an absolute possessory title in a 2 years' undisturbed possession, even if that had been such. On the other side, it was not contended that the respondents, who claimed under an alleged purchase from the mortgagor, had been holding adversely to the mortgagee. The contention was that they had purchased subject to the mortgage and were entitled to redeem. Their Lordships' judgment must be read with reference to these contentions. The case was one of a mortgage by conditional sale, and their Lordships observed that if the mortgage-deed had been allowed to take effect according to its tenor, possession might be considered to have become adverse to the mortgagee-purchaser from the completion of the title or, as I understand it, from the time when the mortgagee was to become owner under the terms of the deed and entitled to possession as such. As, however, under the Bengal Regulations, the conditional sale was to be treated as a mortgage, they held that the possession of persons in the position of the respondents whose case was that they had acquired and held the property subject to the mortgage was not, any more than in England, inconsistent with the mortgagee's title, or their possession adverse to the mortgagee. As regards the defences with which a mortgagee suing for possession after foreclosure might be met by occupants other than the mortgagor, their Lordships say that he might be met "by proof of a prior or a superior title, or by proof of want of title in himself, or that he has not perfected his title to possession". By these last words, I understand that the mortgagee must show that his own title to possession has accrued. Their Lordships certainly did not say that a mortgagee suing in the circumstances stated, might be met by proof of possession adverse to his mortgagor, commencing subsequently to the mortgage at a time when he himself had no right to possession against the mortgagor or any one else.

Under the Indian Limitation Act of 1859, as under the English Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, there was no special provision for suits by mortgagees, but as regards suits to recover the mortgaged property, they clearly come within the terms of section I, Article 12, which allowed 12 years from the date of the cause of action for suits to recover immoveable property or any interest therein not otherwise provided for. Even suits by a mortgagee to enforce his rights by sale were held by this Court to come within this section in Chetti Goundan v. Sundaram Pillai (15), and the decisions of the Full Bench in Calcutta in Surican Hossein v. Shahazilah Golam Mahomed (16) and of the Privy Council in Jumeswar Dass v. Mahabeer Singh (17) were to the same effect. Dealing with a suit by a mortgagee governed by this section in Brojonath Koonloo Chowdry v. Khelut Chunder Ghose (18), their Lordships observed that "when both things occur, possession by such a holder" (a holder claiming adversely)..... "and the right of entry under the mortgage-deed more than 12 years old, it is impossible to say that such a possession is not protected by the law of limitations". In the case just mentioned, the mortgagee himself had the right to take possession and had failed to exercise it for 12 years.

Under the Act of 1859, it was no doubt held in Calcutta by Bayley and Jackson, JJ., in Ram Coomar Sein v. Prosonno Coomar Sein (19), that in a suit by a mortgagee for possession after foreclosure he might be met by proof of possession for 12 years adverse to the mortgagor, and the decision of their Lordships in Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begum (9) was cited in support of this view, but, as I have endeavored to show, their Lordships laid down no such proposition in that case, and indeed their observations point the other way. Further I do not see how Ram Coomar Sein v. Prosonno Coomar Sein (19), is to be reconciled with the subsequent decision of the House of Lords in Pugh v. Heath (13) already referred to. As regards Sheoumber Sahoo v. Bhowaneedeen Kulwar (20), a decision of the year 1870 which was also cited, it is stated in the very brief judgment that the possession of the third party was adverse to the mortgagee, but the facts are not set out. If this case proceeded on the authority of Ram Coomar Sein v. Prosonno Coomar Sein (19), it is open to the same observations. Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (10), the case on which most reliance is placed in Ramatawmi Chetti v. Ponna Padayachi (2) and Bireswar Samanta v. Priya Sakhi Debi (8), was decided under the Limitation Act of 1871, which by Article 132 in suits for money charged on immoveable property allowed 12 years from the date of the money being due, and by Article 135 in suits instituted in a Court not established by Royal Charter by a mortgagee for possession of immoveable property mortgaged allowed 12 years from the time when the mortgagee was first entitled to possession, and by Article 145 in suits for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein not otherwise specially provided for "allowed 12 years from the time when the possession of the defendant or of some person through whom he claims, became adverse to the mortgagee." The judgments of the Allahabad High Court, before whom the case of Karan Singh v. Bakur Ali Khan (10) came on appeal and Letters Patent Appeal, have not been reported, but the learned Judges who made the reference to the Full Bench in Raj Nath v. Narain Das (5), state that they examined the records of this case and that the five Judges of the Allahabad Court before whom the case came, seem to have been of opinion that 12 years' adverse possession would bar a suit in a simple mortgage, and seem to have attached no importance to the fact that the mortgagee had not been entitled to possession of the property; and that they also seem to have thought that Article 145 and not Article 132 was the Article applicable. The language of Article 145 as to the class of suits it covers, is much the same as that of section I, Article 12, of the Act of 1859, and according to the decisions already referred was wide enough to cover a suit for sale; but this was only the residuary Article, and, if the claims of Article 132 had been urged at the bar, they must have been dealt with in the judgment. The contest in the High Court was as to whether the possession by the Collector had been adverse to the plaintiffs. The majority held that it had not and their Lordships agreeing with them on this point dismissed the suit without calling on the other side. The only other point taken by the appellant was that it was for the plaintiff to show that he had been in possession within 12 years. As to this, their Lordships observed in effect that this was so under section I, Article 12, of the Act of 1859, under which time ran from the date of the cause of action, but not so under Article 145 of the Act of 1874 under which time ran from the date when the possession became adverse to the plaintiff. Article 145 was apparently the Article relied on for the appellant, and I do not think this observation can be taken as amounting to a decision as to the inapplicability of Article 132, as the point was not taken and the respondent who was not called on, had no occasion to take it even if he had so desired. Still less do I regard it as a decision as to the inapplicability of Article 132 of the Act of 1877 as interpreted by their Lordships in Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai (21), or of Article 132 of the present Act to a suit for sale by a mortgagee on a simple mortgage governed by the Transfer of Property Act.

Further, taking Article 145 to have been the Article applicable, I think that on the finding that 12 years' adverse possession had not been proved, the question whether such possession, if proved, would have been adverse to the mortgagee, though not entitled to possession, cannot be considered to have been decided, as it does not appear to have been raised and there was no occasion or opportunity for the respondent to raise it. Moreover, as was acutely pointed out by Munro, J., it is not clear that it arose on the facts, because the Collector took possession before the date of the mortgage sued on, and if his possession was held adverse to the mortgagee, the latter would have been clearly barred by 12 years' adverse possession commencing before the date of the mortgage.

I would answer the reference in the negative.

SADASIYA AIYAR, J.—One of the reasons given for the decision in the Full Bench case in Peria Aiyar Ambalam v. Shmuganundaram (3) is that "where more than one inference may be drawn, that inference should not be drawn which imputes a wrongful act to a person." In that case, the mortgagee in possession was ousted by a trespasser and it was held that the trespasser should not be imputed with an intention to injure the mortgagor also, if it could be helped. His trespass against the mortgagee was, no doubt, wrongful, but (if I interpret the above passage correctly) a further wrongful intention against the mortgagor also need not and should not ordinarily be imputed to the trespasser.

That reason appears to me to be equally or rather a fortiori applicable to a case where a trespasser, who dispossessed the mortgagor, is pleading that his possession is adverse to the rights of a simple mortgagee, who is not entitled to possession of the mortgaged land.

The question whether when the simple mortgagee is not entitled to possession, even a distinct notice by the trespasser to that mortgagee that he (the trespasser) denies the mortgagee's right, could be treated as adverse possession of the incorporeal rights of the mortgagee, has a sort of indirect bearing on the question before us and was, therefore, argued by the appellants' learned Vakil (Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar). On this point, I have heard nothing which compels me to recede from the view expressed by me in Lakshminarayana Aiyer v. Ulagammal (22), that it is very difficult to establish the claim of acquisition of title by adverse possession of an incorporeal right. With the greatest respect to certain obiter observations contra in the judgment in Peria Aiyar Ambalam v. Shanmugasundaram (3), I am unable to concur with them. Assuming that the Roman Law is different [see Nallamuthu Pillai v. Betha Naicken (23), which was, however, a case where the adverse possession began before the date of the mortgage], that rule of Roman Law was probably based (as pointed out by my learned brother Sreenivasa Aiyangar, J., in the judgment now to be pronounced by him) on the rights of a simple mortgagee under the Roman Law to get possession of the hypotheca after the money became due by expiry of the time fixed for payment. If, however, it is otherwise, it does not then seem to me to be such an equitable rule as ought to be followed by Indian Courts, having regard to the fact that the English Statute Law has deliberately laid down the opposite rule, even though a mortgagee under the English form of mortgage obtains the legal ownership of the mortgaged property unlike an Indian mortgagee.

If some tangible benefit (periodical or otherwise, such as the right to receive rents and profits though not to get physical possession) is derivable by the owner of an incorporeal right and if he is prevented by the trespasser from getting that benefit and if the trespasser obtains that benefit himself, a dispossession of such incorporeal right is conceivable [see Venkataramanachari v. Thirunaranachari (24)], but not in other cases. I, therefore, adhere to the views expressed by Napier, J., and myself in Leukata Krishna Moorthi v. Bheemakka (25), and I willingly follow the very carefully considered judgment (if I may respectfully say so) in Parthasarathy Naikan v. Lakshmana Naicken (1), whose authority is endorsed by the judgment just now pronounced by my Lord answering the reference in the negative.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—I think on principle the question under reference admits only of one answer, i. e., in the negative. The rights of a simple mortgagee of immoveable property are now settled by Statute. He is not an owner and is not entitled to possession of the mortgaged property. He has no claim to the produce or the rents and profits of the property either before or after the mortgage-money becomes due. A simple mortgage does not vest any estate in the mortgagee. [Ghose on Mortgages, page 76, IV Edition; Papamma Rao v. Viraprataha H. V. Ramachandra (26).] His only right is to cause the property to be sold through Court. The mortgagor, as owner is entitled to remain in possession and receive the rents and profits of the land; he is not accountable for them or for the use he makes of his property to the mortgagee, provided he does not commit waste so as to render the security insufficient. The right of a simple mortgagee is, however, a real right, and he is entitled to enforce his charge even against a purchaser for value without notice. Except for a possible difference as regards their enforceability against purchasers for value without notice, there is no difference in their legal incidents between a simple mortgage and a charge. See observations of Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in Balasubramanian v. Siruguru Asari (27). A suit by a simple mortgagee to enforce payment of the mortgage-money by a sale of the property is governed by Article 132 of the Limitation Act, and he is entitled to bring such a suit within 12 years after the mortgage-money had become due. [See Vasulera Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai (21).] His right cannot be extinguished under section 28 of the Limitation Act, though the bar of the remedy in the case of a real right may have the same effect as the extinction of the right itself. As he is not entitled to possession of any sort or kind of the mortgaged property, there can be no adverse possession against him. Can then his rights be affected by a trespasser taking possession of the mortgaged property ousting the mortgagor in possession? If they are, he must have a cause of action against the trespasser. Abdur Rahim, J., thinks he has. He says "that these two cases" [referring to Ram Coommar Sein v. Prasanna Coommar Sein (19) and Sheoamber Sahoo v. Bhowaneedeen Kulwar (20)] "make it clear that the mortgagee is not without remedy against a trespasser taking possession of the mortgaged land, although it may be that he is not entitled to possession under his mortgage, and I myself do not see any valid reason why the mortgagee should not be able under such circumstances to protect his interests by proper proceedings" [Ramaswami Chetti v. Ponna Podayachi (2)]. I am unable to see what suit a simple mortgagee is entitled to bring to protect his interests as against a trespasser, and there is no indication in the learned Judge's judgment as to the nature of the proceedings by which he is to protect his interests. He obviously cannot bring ejectment against the trespasser and he certainly cannot bring a suit praying that possession be delivered to the mortgagor, as the mortgagor's possession is not in any sense for the benefit of the simple mortgagee. A simple suit for declaration of the mortgagee's right, when such a right is denied by the trespasser, may probably be brought, but that is a proceeding which the mortgagee is not bound to take, and a decree in such a suit cannot save the rights of the mortgagee from becoming barred, if otherwise they would be. The cases referred to by the learned Judge were cases where the mortgagee was entitled to possession either before or after the mortgage amount had become due, and it is possible in those cases for a mortgagee to bring ejectment against a trespasser. A squatter taking possession of the mortgaged property may equally affect the interests of the mortgagee and the mortgagor, where both of them are entitled to or are in possession of their respective interests in the property, where such interests are capable of possession. Even incorporeal property may be capable of possession in law, but such possession involves either actual possession of tangible property or the receipt of some tangible benefit therefrom. Such possession may also be protected by possessory remedies. It must also be remembered that the mortgagor does not hold possession of the property on behalf of the mortgagee and the mortgagor is not charged with the duty of protecting the interests of the mortgagee, as a trustee or the karnavan of a tarwad or the manager of a joint Hindu family is charged with the duty of protecting the interests of a cestui que trust or the junior members of the family. [See the observations of Sundara Aiyar, J., in Ambalavana Chetty v. Singaravelu Odriyar (28).] The mortgagor's laches or negligence should not affect the rights of the mortgagee. If, therefore, a simple mortgagee has no cause of action against a trespasser, his rights should not be affected or be extinguished by the operation of any law of limitation. It is true that a simple mortgagee may be entitled to enforce payment of the money due by a sale of the property, if the mortgage amount had become due; but that cause of action accrues to him owing to the default of the mortgagor and not on account of any act of the trespasser. If the mortgage-money had not become due, he cannot institute a suit to recover it, though a trespasser may have taken possession of the mortgaged property, and it would be most unreasonable to hold that the mortgagee's rights are extinguished by the extinction of the mortgagor's title by 12 years' adverse possession before the mortgagee is in a position to protect his rights. To adopt the language of the Master of the Rolls in Nisbet & Potts' Contract, In re (14), "unless and until the right of the covenantor has been in some way infringed, so that it becomes necessary for him to enforce that right, there is no reason, either in principle or in fairness, why his right should be in any way affected." I see no reason, therefore, for holding that the extinction of the mortgagor's title by the adverse possession of a third party operates to extinguish the mortgagee's right to enforce his charge, any more than easements over the property.

Subramania Aiyar, J., however, seems to think that a hypothecation right is liable to be affected by prescription. He says that "there can be no doubt that such a right is liable to be affected not only by lapse of time as between the creditor and the debtor, but also by possession of the hypothecated property held for the required period by a third person on a claim inconsistent with the rights of both the creditor and the debtor", and relies on some passages in Salkowski's Roman Law, Mackledy's Roman Law and Hunter's Roman Law. In the passage just quoted, the learned Judge seems to assume that a mere claim to hold property free of a charge could operate to extinguish such rights, although the act of possession by itself may not affect it. If the trespasser's possession by itself could not affect the rights of the simple mortgagee, the assertion by such trespasser could not possibly have any effect. As stated in Angell on Limitations: "The principle on which the Statute of Limitations is predicated is not that the party in whose favour it is invoked, has set up an adverse claim for the period specified, but that such adverse claim is accompanied by such invasion of the rights of the opposite party as to give him a cause of action, which having failed to prosecute within the time limited by law, he is presumed to have extinguished or surrendered. A mere claim of title, unaccompanied by adverse possession, gives no right of action to the person against whom it is asserted and consequently his rights are unaffected by Statute." (See Angell on Limitations at page 398.)

and an hypotheca and in both forms of mortgage the mortgagee was entitled to the possession of the mortgaged property. In pignus the possession was given to the mortgagee at the time of the transaction, while in hypothecation the mortgagee was entitled to obtain possession after the debt became due. Hunter's Roman Law, pages 436 and 447 (Remedies), Salkowski's Roman Law at page 485 and Mackledy's Roman Law at page 285. It is instructive to note that Lord Hobhouse thought that except for long practice and the Transfer of Property Act, it might be reasonably argued that a simple mortgagee in India was entitled to usufructuary possession under the terms of his contract. [Papamma Rao v. Ramachandra (26).]

Are we then compelled to answer the question in the affirmative by any authority binding on us? Reliance was placed on the decisions of the Privy Council in Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begum (9) and Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (10). The plaintiff in the case reported as Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begum (9) had obtained a mortgage by conditional sale from the owner and had instituted proceedings to foreclose the mortgage under Regulation XVII of 1806. After obtaining a foreclosure order, he brought a suit to recover possession of the properties, as owner against the defendant who was in possession claiming under a purchase from the mortgagor which, however, was not proved or admitted in the case. The question was whether the plaintiff had validly foreclosed the mortgage by conditional sale so as to enable him to bring ejectment as owner. The proceedings for foreclosure were taken more than 12 years after the expiry of the term for the repayment of the mortgage-money. Under Bengal Regulation III of 1793, a suit was barred "where the cause of action shall have arisen 12 years before any suit shall have been commenced on account of it." In discussing the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to bring a suit for foreclosure after the expiry of 12 years, their Lordships pointed out that a suit for foreclosure against the mortgagor or against persons claiming in privity with the mortgagor may not be barred, while a suit for possession against a stranger who claimed to hold the property free of any mortgage may be barred. But their Lordships do not say that the mortgagee's right may be barred by the possession of an adverse claimant, even if the mortgagee's right to possession had not accrued, or where the mortgagee was not entitled to possession at all. On the other hand, in the case of Anundo Moyee Dossee v. Dhonendra Chunder Mookerjee (29), their Lordships say: "if the title of the mortgagee to enter, by reason of a default having occurred before, had accrued, and if the purchaser under such a title, i. e., as purchaser at an execution sale, had been in possession for 12 years, believing himself to be bona fide owner under a claim to the ownership of the property, and not being in possession in any way as mortgagor or under the mortgagor...they are of opinion, that the suit to disturb the possession of such a purchaser ought to be brought within the 12 years after the commencement of his possession." That, I think, conclusively shows that a mortgagee who had no right to enter was not affected by any adverse possession.

In Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (10), the plaintiff, a simple mortgagee, sued to enforce his charge. The mortgages were executed in the year 1862 on behalf of the daughter's sons of the last male owner. The property was in the possession of his widow till the end of 1860. It appears that on the death of the widow, disputes arose as to the title to the property between the defendant, Karan Singh, and the daughter's sons of the last male owner, each claiming the property as his. Neither party was in possession, the Collector having taken possession of the property in 1861 soon after the death of the widow to secure the Government Revenue, pending the settlement of the disputes between the rival claimants. The mortgages were executed in January and October of 1862 on behalf of the daughter's sons, when they were not in possession of the property and before the disputes as to title were settled. In 1863 by an award, the title of the defendant, Karan Singh, was established against the daughter's sons in a proceeding to which the mortgagee was not a party and the Collector handed over possession of the property to Karan Singh and also paid him the income of the estate in his hands. The plaintiff brought the suit in July 1874 and the defendant pleaded that he had been in adverse possession for the statutory period of 12 years from the year 1861, treating the possession of the Collector as his possession. If the defendant's contention was correct, it is obvious that the mortgagee would not be entitled to sue to enforce his mortgages, as the effect of the defendant's possession would have been to extinguish the title of the mortgagor from the year 1861 [Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli Subbiah (30) and Nandkumar Dobey v. Ajodhya Sahu (7)]. The sole question in the case, therefore, was whether the defendant was in adverse possession from 1861. When their Lordships speak of the possession of the plaintiff or of the possession of the defendant adverse to the plaintiff, they were, I think, referring to the mortgagor under whom the plaintiff claimed, as they speak of possession and adverse possession in 1861 before even the mortgages were executed. There is really no warrant for the inference that their Lordships assumed that a suit by a simple mortgagee to enforce his charge by sale was a suit for possession, that such a mortgagee was entitled to possession or that such a suit was governed by Article 145 of the Limitation Act of 1871, corresponding to Article 144 of the Acts of 1877 and 1908. In the Act of 1859, there was no special provision for suits by a mortgagee except that, in suits by a mortgagee to recover possession of the mortgaged properties from the mortgagor in Courts established by a Royal Charter, the time when the cause of action arose was defined by section 6. They were governed by clause 12 of section I and even a suit by a hypothecatee to enforce his charge was held to be a suit for recovery of an interest in immoveable property and the period of limitation was 12 years from the time the cause of action arose. [Surivan Hussein v. Shahazadah Golam Muhomed (16), Chetti Goundan v. Sundaram Pillai (15) and Junes- war Dass v. Mahabeer Singh (17).] Sir Barnes Peacock is reported to have said that "if land is mortgaged as security for a loan, in addition to a covenant for payment of the money, the mortgagee may sue the mortgagor for a breach of the covenant, and he may also bring an action of ejectment to recover the land mortgaged as a collateral security. It appears to me that the charge upon the land created an equitable interest in the land, and that a suit brought to enforce that charge is in substance and in effect a suit for the recovery of that interest", see page 174 in 9 W. R. A simple mortgagee under the Transfer of Property Act can neither bring ejectment to recover the land mortgaged, nor can it be said that his right is an equitable interest. As pointed out by Seton Karr, J., in the same case, it must be admitted that the language of the Article was not quite appropriate as applied to a suit to enforce a charge by sale. Clause 12 was, however, applicable whether the suit was against the mortgagor or persons claiming under him or against a trespasser in possession. When the Act of 1859 was repealed and the Act of 1871 passed, a special Article was enacted in respect of suits to enforce payment of money charged on land, viz., Article 132, Article 149 in respect of suits in the Chartered High Courts to recover possession of the mortgaged property from the mortgagor, and Article 135 for similar suits in mofussil Courts, but the words "from the mortgagor" are omitted. It has been held that Article 135 applies to suits for possession against both mortgagors and strangers [Shurnomoyee Dasi v. Srinath Das (31)]. There was no special Article as regards suits for foreclosure (that was first introduced in the Act of 1877, Article 147). Clause 12 was re-enacted as Article 145, but with a change in the wording. Instead of the words 'for the recovery of' the words 'for possession of' were substituted, which are even less appropriate to a suit for sale. It is admitted that Article 132 of the Act of 1871 was applicable to suits by a simple mortgagee instituted against the mortgagors or persons claiming under them to enforce the charge by sale of the mortgaged property, and the Privy Council in Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai (21) say that it was perfectly settled that such suits were governed by that Article. The Privy Council in the above case make no distinction whatever between suits against mortgagors and against strangers in possession of the mortgaged property and the language of the Article does not warrant any such distinction. But we are asked to infer that their Lordships in the case of Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (10) assumed without question or discussion that such a suit was not governed by Article 132, but was a suit for possession against a stranger in possession of immoveable property governed solely by the residuary Article 145, that they assumed unnecessarily a metaphysical possession in the simple mortgagee and that he was affected by a vicarious bar. I decline to draw any such inference. The Privy Council characterised Act XIV of 1859 as an inartificially drawn Statute and the later Act of 1871 as a "more carefully drawn Statute" [see Maharaja Fultehsangji Jaswant-singji v. Desai Kulliauraini Hakoomutrai (32) and Delhi and London Bank Limited v. Orchard (33)]. It seems to me that the Legislature in 1871 specially enacted Article 132 for all suits by simple mortgagee to enforce the payment of money charged by sale of the property mortgaged instead of leaving some suits to be governed by that Article and others by Article 145.

It is unnecessary to deal with the other cases as they are reviewed by Munro, J., in Parthasarathi Naicken v. Lakshmana Naicken (1) and Karamat Hussain, J., in Nandan Singh v. Juman (4).

In England, the matter is settled by Statute. I may, however, refer to a passage in the judgment of Farwell, J., in the case of Nisbet & Potts' Contract, In re (14), in the first Court wherein he holds that a charge on the property can be enforced against a trespasser who acquired a title to the property by adverse possession. Nisbet & Potts' Contract, In re (14).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against a decree in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents for recovery of possession of land upon declaration of title. The Courts below have concurrently found that on the 3rd September 1896, the lands were purchased by the plaintiffs from the defendants. Notwithstanding this sale, the defendants got themselves registered under the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and kept the plaintiffs out of possession; the latter have consequently been driven to seek the assistance of the Court.

The defendants originally held under a settlement which was in operation from the 1st April 1883 to the 31st March 1898. In 1894, there was a survey for the purposes of a fresh settlement, but the term of the previous settlement was extended for two years and the new settlement did not take effect before the 1st April 1900. At the time when the new settlement was made, the defendants were able to obtain settlement from the Revenue Authorities, notwithstanding that they had parted with their rights, by reason of two circumstances; namely, first, that the settlement was based on the survey of 1894 when they were landholders lawfully in possession; and secondly, that after the transfer to the plaintiffs, the defendants took a sub-lease from them and were in actual occupation when the settlement was made in 1900. Subsequently, the plaintiffs applied to the Revenue Authorities to register their names; but their application was refused in 1907 by reason of the opposition offered by the defendants, who repudiated the sale. Consequently on the 1st September 1908, the plaintiffs instituted this suit for recovery of possession upon declaration of title. The Subordinate Judge has found upon the question of title in favour of the plaintiffs and no attempt has been made in this Court to assail the accuracy of his conclusion. But it has been argued that the Civil Court is not competent to make a decree for possession, and in support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Madhub Nath Surma v. Mayarani Medhi (1) and Patan Maria v. Bhabiram Dutt Barna (2). On the other hand, reference has been made by the plaintiffs-respondents to the decision in Hedlot Khasia v. Karan Khasiani (3) in support of the view that a decree for possession may be made by the Civil Court in favour of the successful plaintiffs. As the question raised is not free from difficulty and as its determination may affect the revenue administration of the Province of Assam, we thought it proper to invite the assistance of the Government Pleader who has now ascertained the views of the Revenue Authorities on the subject and has communicated them to us. After a careful consideration of the arguments addressed to us on both sides, we have arrived at the conclusion that it is competent to the Civil Court, not only to declare the title of the plaintiffs, but also to place them in possession of the disputed property by ejectment of the defendants.

Sections 8 and 9 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, define the status of a landholder, as a person who has a permanent heritable and transferable right of use and occupancy of his land. Consequently, when the defendants, who were themselves landholders, transferred the property to the plaintiffs, the latter acquired the status of a landholder. The plaintiffs were, however, at the time when they applied for registration of their names, out of possession, and their application was properly rejected by the Revenue Authorities. But this did not affect their title as landholders. This is plain from section 39 of the Regulation, which is in these terms: "subject to the provisions of section 151, the order of a Settlement Officer as to the person to whom a settlement should be offered, the amount of revenue to be assessed and the nature and term of the settlement to be offered, shall be final, and a settlement concluded with that person shall be binding on all persons from time to time interested in the estate; but except as provided by sections 35 and 36, no person shall, merely on the ground that a settlement has been made with him or with some person through whom he claims, be deemed to have acquired any right to or over any estate, as against any other person claiming right to or over that estate." Sections 35 and 36 have no application to the case before us, as they refer to cases of refusal of settlement by the Revenue Authorities. It is consequently plain that the mere fact that the defendants have obtained a renewal of the settlement from the Revenue Authorities, does not create in them a right which they do not possess. We are not unmindful that these sections must be read along with section 154 on which much reliance has been placed by the defendants-appellants. Sub-section (1) of section 154, no doubt, provides that except when otherwise expressly provided in the Regulation or in rules issued under the Regulation, no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction in the matter of questions as to the validity or effect of any settlement or as to whether the conditions of any settlement are still in force; but this provision must be read along with, and is obviously controlled by, the concluding clause of section 39. It is further clear that the plaintiffs do not raise any question as to the validity or effect of the settlement, nor do they seek to alter the conditions of the settlement by the Revenue Authorities. Their object is to substitute themselves in place of the defendants; in other words, to acquire the property as settled by the Revenue Authorities with the defendants. Consequently, it cannot be maintained that the object of this suit is to raise a question which falls within clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 154. Equally unfounded is the contention that the claim for recovery of possession is barred under clause (m) of sub-section (1) of section 154, which merely provides that no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction in any matter respecting which an order expressly declared by the Regulation to be final subject to the provisions of section 151, has been passed. The view we take, is strengthened by an examination of clause (a) of section 62, which lays down that nothing contained in Chapter IV and nothing done in accordance therewith shall be deemed to preclude any person from bringing a suit in the Civil Court for possession of, or for declaration of his right to, any immovable property to which he may deem himself entitled. The suit now before us is clearly of this description. The application of the plaintiffs for registration was rightly refused by the Revenue Authorities; they were at the time out of possession, which, as is clear from section 53, is an essential requisite for an order of registration. The only remedy of the plaintiffs was to institute a suit in the Civil Court, as they have done, for declaration of their right and for recovery of possession. The appellants have contended, however, that the plaintiffs should obtain a mere declaration in this suit, and should then apply to the Revenue Authorities to register their names and to place them in possession. But, apart from the fact that the Revenue Authorities cannot register the name of a person who is out of possession, we must bear in mind what was properly emphasised by the Government Pleader namely, that they have no power, in fact, they have no machinery, to give possession, except in the circumstances mentioned in sections 12, 54 and 116, which do not cover the case before us. Consequently, if we were to accede to the contention of the appellants and to give the plaintiffs a mere declaration, the declaratory decree would be infructuous; in fact in this very case, the Board of Revenue, in dealing with the application of the plaintiffs for registration of their names, said in 1907 that they must obtain possession from the Civil Court before their names could be registered. We hold accordingly, upon a review of the statutory provisions on the subject, that the Civil Court is competent to make not only a decree for declaration of title but also for recovery of possession. This, as we have been informed by the Government Pleader, is precisely the view of the Revenue Authorities. We have been pressed, however, with the decisions of Mudhub Nath Sarma v. Mayarani Medhi (1) and Putan Maria v. Bhabiram Dutt Barna (2), which to some extent support the contention of the appellants. But we observe that in those cases, the provisions of section 62 were not brought to the notice of the Court; and we also notice that in the later case of Hedlot Khasia v. Karan Khasiani (3) a decree for possession on declaration of title was made, notwithstanding the earlier decisions. We follow accordingly the decision of Hedlot Khasia v. Karan Khasiani (3) and hold that the decree for possession made by the Subordinate Judge must be maintained.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution—Decree against one set of defendants on contest, against another by consent—Appeal against whole decree by contesting defendant—Execution, limitation for—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182, cl. (2).

A person who is a party to a compromise cannot challenge the validity of the consent decree by way of appeal, but the party to the suit who has not joined in the compromise is competent to appeal against the decree if he has been prejudiced thereby. [p. 428, col. 1.]

In a suit where a decree has been obtained against one set of defendants by consent and against the other on contest and the contesting defendant appeals against the decree and thereby the validity of the entire decree is in controversy in the appeal, the decree-holder is entitled to the benefit of clause 2 of Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, 1908, in execution of the decree against both sets of the defendants. [p. 429, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order in proceedings in execution of a decree for delivery of possession of land made on the 17th September 1903. The question in controversy is, whether an application for execution of this decree, made on the 7th May 1910, is barred by limitation. The Courts below have concurrently held that the application is not barred. We are now invited by the judgment-debtors to hold that this view is erroneous in law. For the determination of the question raised before us, it is necessary to recapitulate the essential facts, which are all admitted.

The plaintiffs sued two sets of persons, who may be called A and B, for recovery of possession of land. A petition of compromise was filed on behalf of some of the defendants. The Court came to the conclusion that the compromise was operative only as regards some of them (A) and gave effect to it to that extent. The suit was heard on the merits as against all the other defendants (B). The result was a two-fold decree, first, for possession as against the consenting defendants (A), without mesne profits or costs; and, secondly, for possession against the contesting defendants (B), who were made liable for costs and mesne profits. B appealed to the District Judge and valued their appeal at the value of the subject-matter of the entire property involved in the suit in the Court of first instance. They did not join A as respondents; the only respondents to the appeal were the successful plaintiffs. The appeal was preferred on the 25th January 1904. The parties, however, agreed to await the decision of this Court in an analogous litigation, which had been brought up here by way of first appeal. After the disposal of that appeal by this Court, the appeal before the District Judge was taken up, and was dismissed on the 8th May 1907, on the footing of the agreement that the parties would abide by the decision of the High Court in the suit previously mentioned.

[The present application for execution of the decree of the 17th September 1903 was made on the 7th May 1910. On the 28th August, writ for delivery was issued; and it is alleged that the decree-holders were placed in possession on the 5th September. On the 29th September, however, objection was taken by the judgment-debtors that the decree was incapable of execution as the rights thereunder had been extinguished by the Statute of Limitation. The Courts below have overruled this contention. On the present appeal, the controversy has centred round clause 2 of the third column of Article 182 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. That clause provides that an application for execution of a decree of a Civil Court not provided for by Article 183 or section 43 of the Code of 1908 must be made within three years from the date of the final decree of the Appellate Court or the withdrawal of the appeal, where there has been an appeal. On behalf of the judgment-debtors appellants reliance had been placed upon the cases of Sreenath v. Brojo Nath (1); Wise v. Raj Narain Chuckerbutty (2); Hur Proshad v. Enayet Hossain (3); Raghunath Pershad v. Abbul Hye (4); Christiana Beushawn v. Benarasi Proshad (5); Sangram Singh v. Bujhara Singh (6); Mashiat-un-nissa v. Rani (7) and Badi-un-nissa v. Shams-ud-din (8). On the basis of these decisions the argument has been founded that as the decree-holders could have executed the consent decree obtained by them against A, notwithstanding the pendency of the appeal preferred by B, they could not claim the benefit of clause (2) of the third column of Article 182. The contention in substance is that in reality there are two completely distinct decrees on the same sheet of paper and the fact that an appeal had been preferred by B against one of these decrees, does not entitle the decree-holders to an extension of time against A in respect of the other decree. It is further pointed out that not only was not an appeal preferred against the consent decree, but under the law an appeal could not have been preferred against that decree. Sir Rash Behary Ghose for the appellants has, however, drawn our attention to the decisions in Mullick Ahmed Zamma v. Mahomed Syed (9); Basant Lal v. Nojmun-nissa Bibi (10); Gungamoyee v. Shih Sanker (11); Nundun Lal v. Rai Joykishen (12); Kristo Churn Dass v. Radha Churn Kur (13); Nurul Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (14); Muthu v. Chellappa (15) and Gopal Chunder v. Gosain Das Kalay (16). Some of these cases are possibly distinguish-able, but it has not been disputed that from the others a rule is deducible which would negative the contention of the appellants. On behalf of the respondents, reliance has been placed particularly upon the cases of Badi-un-nissa v. Shams-ud-din (8); Gopal Chunder v. Gosain Das (16); Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (17), which, it has been contended, negative the position taken up by the appellants.

It is not necessary for our present purpose to determine the true scope and meaning of the term 'appeal' as used in clause 2 of the third column of Article 182; upon that matter there has been divergence of judicial opinion. While a narrow view was taken in some of the cases already mentioned, a wider interpretation was placed upon the term in the cases of Abdul Rahiman v. Moidin Saiba (18); Shivram v. Sakharani (19), Viraraghava Ayyangar v. Ponnammal (20) and Kristuama v. Mangammal (21). In these cases the position was maintained that time ran against the decree-holder from the date of the final decree in the appeal, irrespective of the question whether the appeal did or did not imperil the decree whereof execution was ultimately sought. We do not propose to enter upon an examination of this wide problem for two reasons; first, because, even if the view be maintained that a decree-holder is entitled to the benefit of the extended time contemplated by clause (2) of Article 182 only when the decree whereof execution is sought, is imperilled by the appeal, the position taken up by the appellants cannot be sustained; and secondly, because the contention of the appellants must fail in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (17).

As regards the first point, it is clear that although a person who is a party to a compromise cannot challenge the validity of the consent decree by way of appeal, it is competent to a party to the suit, who has not joined in the compromise, to appeal against the decree if he has been prejudiced thereby. This has been recognised in suits for partition of joint properties where a decree has been made by consent of some only of the parties to the litigation: Nityamoni Dasi v. Gokul Chandra Sen (22). It is also clear that circumstances may be imagined in suits of other description, for instance, suits for contribution or even suits for possession of joint property where, in the event of a compromise amongst some only of the parties to the litigation, another person, a party to the suit but not a party to the compromise, may challenge the decree by way of appeal on the ground that he has been prejudiced thereby. In the present instance, we have the unquestionable fact that the contesting defendants did prefer an appeal against the entire decree. In that appeal, there was, to use the language of the decision in Ramchandara Gopal v. Antaji Vasudev (23), the chance or risk of the Appellate Court modifying the decree of the trial Court. The entire decree was under appeal and was in peril. It is worthy of note that the contesting defendants were in a manner constrained to appeal against the entire decree. The plaintiffs sought a decree for ejectment of the defendants; the relief claimed was a joint decree against all of them. The result of the consent decree and of the decree on contest was that there was a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiffs against all the defendants, but against some, the decree was by consent while against others, it was on contest. The decree did not define the precise position of the defendants who had entered into the compromise. It did not specify their share in the property if they were in joint possession; if they were in occupation of demarcated plots, the decree did not define such portions. The result was that the decree, though made by consent as to a portion and on contest as to the remainder, was still a joint decree, in the sense that, if maintained, it entitled the plaintiffs to recover possession of the entire property in dispute from all the defendants jointly. The contesting defendants appealed against this decree. As the decree did not define their position, they were bound to appeal against the whole decree. It is thus plain that the validity of the entire decree was in controversy in the appeal, and from this point of view, the plaintiffs-decree-holders would undoubtedly be entitled to the benefit of clause 2 of Article 182: Gopal Chunder v. Gosain Das (16); Badi-un-nissa v. Shams-ud-din (8). Some stress has been laid upon the decision in Christiana Benshawn v. Benarasi Proshad (5), which is clearly distinguishable and is of no assistance to the appellants. In that case, there were two distinct decrees, one in favour of some of the defendants against the plaintiff, the other in favour of the plaintiff against the other defendants. An appeal was preferred against the latter portion of the decree; that appeal did not and could not imperil the other portion of the decree. In these circumstances, the decree-holder was rightly held not entitled to the benefit of clause (2) of Article 182. Nor is the decision of the Judicial Committee in Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (24) of any avail to the appellants. In that case, there was no decree of the Court of Appeal, because the appeal preferred to the Judicial Committee never came up for disposal by their Lordships. The appeal was dismissed by the Registrar for non-prosecution, and it was ruled that the order of the Registrar was not a decree of the Court of Appeal.

As regards the second point, namely, the effect of the rule deducible from the decision of the Judicial Committee in Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (17), we are of opinion that it is completely destructive of the contention of the appellants. There a joint decree for sale of land was obtained by the plaintiffs against the defendants. The decree was ex parte against one of the defendants and was on contest as against the other. The person against whom the decree had been made ex parte took steps to have the decree vacated in so far as she was concerned. The decree, however, remained untouched as against the other defendants. Ultimately, the suit was re-tried as against the person at whose instance it had been re-opened, and a decree was made against her which was confirmed on appeal. It was ruled that the decree-holders were entitled to the benefit of clause (2) of Article 182, not only against the defendant at whose instance the case had been re-opened, but also as against the defendants against whom a decree had been made on contest in the first instance. The Judicial Committee pointed out that the plaintiffs were entitled to a joint decree against all the defendants, and that the decree originally made was merely a step for the attainment of that ultimate object, so that time ran as against the decree-holders from the date when the final decree was made. In the case before us, the plaintiffs were entitled to a joint decree against all the defendants. On appeal by the contesting defendants, the entire matter was re-opened. When the appeal was dismissed in the end, the decree of the trial Court stood confirmed; it is clear that the plaintiffs were entitled to wait till the final decree had been made in their favour. If this view were not taken, the plaintiffs might find themselves in a position of considerable embarrassment, as an attempt to execute against the consenting defendants alone a decree which did not define their liability, might lead to obvious complications. In our opinion, the plaintiffs were not bound to execute the decree till the final disposal of the appeal.

We hold accordingly that the view taken by the Courts below is correct and that the application for execution is not barred by limitation. We may add that on behalf of the appellants, Babu Joges Chandra Roy candidly admitted that the justice of the case was entirely with the respondents and that it was iniquitous on the part of the appellants, who had consented to a decree against themselves, to urge every conceivable objection against the execution of that decree. In that estimate of the merits of the case, we entirely agree.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Similar orders will be drawn up in each of the other appeals which will consequently be dismissed with costs, one gold mohur in each case.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff for recovery of eight elephants or, in the alternative, of their price. The facts material for the determination of the rights of the parties lie in a narrow compass, and may be briefly narrated. The defendant, the Gossain of Garamur Satra, took a lease from Government of the Dayang Dhausiri Mahal No. 6 in the district of Sibsagar for the purpose of catching elephants during the years 1909-1910 and 1910-1911. The license fee was Rs. 2,750 per annum. On the 3rd July 1909, the defendant took the plaintiff as a partner in the venture, and the terms settled between them are set out in a letter of that date written by the defendant to the plaintiff. The contract was subsequently embodied in a formal deed of agreement executed on the 24th November 1909. The substance of the arrangement was that the plaintiff became a partner to the extent of a half share, and was authorised to manage the works, such as building stockades, catching elephants, &c. It was further agreed that at the time of the sale of the captured elephants, the plaintiff would give intimation to the defendant, so that the sale might be conducted in the presence of a representative of the latter. The plaintiff was made liable to pay a half share of the license fee in four equal instalments. The elephants were captured in five places during the first three months of 1910, Loengtha, Rangma, Bokajan, Hazat Ali stockade at Depupani, Itonia stockade at Depupani. Two methods were adopted for capture of the elephants, viz., melalasikar or the noosing of wild elephants by mahouts mounted on tame elephants, and khedasikar i. e., the driving of wild elephants into a stockade. With regard to melalasikar, two sets of persons had interest in the elephants captured, viz., the mahaldars or licencees from Government, who had a one-fourth share and the kunkidars or the owners of tame elephants, who had the remaining three-fourths share. As regards khedasikar, three sets of persons had interest in the elephants captured, viz., the mahaldars who had one-fourth, the gardars or builders of the stockades who had a half share, and the kunkidars or owners of the tame elephants employed to take the wild elephants out of the stockade, who had the remaining one-fourth share. It is obvious from the preliminary statement that the title to an elephant captured could be transferred only with the assent of all the persons who possessed an interest in the animal. It may also be added that it is customary to allot to the lessee of the mahal the biggest elephant caught if the operations are exceptionally successful; and the defendant in this case was particularly anxious to secure an elephant worthy of his position. Animals were captured, as we have said, during the first three months of 1910, and the evidence shows that they were valued and sold, some to strangers, while others were taken by one or other of the parties interested in the capture. On the 28th February 1910, a tusker six feet nine inches high was captured, was marked down to the Gossain as worthy of his position, and was actually delivered to him in the first week in April; its value, Rs. 1,500, was debited in the account against the defendant. About this time, the defendant discovered that another tusker eight feet three inches high had been captured on the 25th March in the Hazat Ali Stockade and had been marked down to the plaintiff. The defendant resented this and he appealed to the plaintiff and his brother to let him have this elephant for the sake of his dignity. This request passed unheeded and the plaintiff removed with eight of the newly caught elephants and with others belonging to himself to Akhoy Phutya, about 50 miles distant from the depot at Yamguri, where all the captured elephants were brought. The defendant, thus baffled, sent information to the Police that the plaintiff was absconding with elephants. The result was that the Police intervened and attached the elephants; one was sold while under attachment, and seven others were made over to the agent of the defendant on the 13th May 1910. Attempts at a settlement proved abortive, and on the 1st October 1910, the plaintiff commenced this action for recovery of the elephants taken away from him or for their value. The defendant resisted the claim mainly on the ground that plaintiff had not acquired an absolute and exclusive title to the animals, that he had no enforceable claim till the partnership accounts were adjusted, and that if the accounts were settled, it would be found that a large sum was due from the plaintiff to the defendant. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit. He has held that in the suit as framed, the partnership accounts could not be adjusted, and that till the accounts between the parties were adjusted, the plaintiff was not entitled to relief.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and has contested the grounds for the decision of the Subordinate Judge; he has also suggested that, if necessary, leave should be granted to amend the plaint and to convert the suit into one for partnership accounts, so that the rights and liabilities of the parties might be investigated and determined.

We may state at the outset that there is no room for controversy that the plaintiff and the defendant were partners, for as Sir Montague Smith said in Mollwo, March & Co v. Court of Wards (1), a partnership is constituted whenever the parties have agreed to carry on business or to share the profits in some way in common: Pooley v. Driver (2). What then was the position of the parties as partners in this venture? It is plain from the evidence that the accounts of the captures in the different places were made up separately, i. e., stockade by stockade. Consequently, if it be found that the accounts of one stockade have been finally settled, it cannot be maintained that the rights of the parties in the elephants captured there, remained undetermined because the accounts of some other stockade had not been finally adjusted. Now the eight elephants in dispute as described in schedule 8 to the plaint were captured as follows—four, Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 8 at Rungma and Bokajan, three Nos. 2, 6 and 7 in the Itonia stockade, and one, No. 3, at the Hazat Ali stockade. As regards the Rungma and Bokajan elephants, we may state at once that the accounts were not finally settled. The oral evidence suggests that the agent of the defendant was present, made up an account and signed a book; these are not produced by the plaintiff and Malli Ram, the agent, was indeed not even cross-examined with regard to these accounts. There is no trustworthy evidence to show that the prices fixed by the plaintiff for elephants caught in these stockades were ever submitted to the agent of the defendant for approval. There is, on the other hand, indication in the evidence that the Rungma and Bokajan stockades were worked solely by the plaintiff. It is impossible for us to hold that the plaintiff has acquired sole ownership to the elephants captured at Rungma and Bokajan. This portion of the claim cannot possibly be sustained and we did not, indeed, think it necessary to hear the respondent on this part of the case.

RAMNATH GAGOI V. PITAMBAR DEB.

We have next to deal with elephant No. 3 captured in the Hazat Ali stockade and elephants Nos. 2, 6 and 7 in the Itonia stockade. In each of these cases, the evidence, in our opinion, proves that complete title had vested in the plaintiff. There was a sale in each instance with the concurrence of all the parties interested in the animal and the price fixed was approved on behalf of the defendant by Gopal Bhuyan and Maliram Khatomal, who was unquestionably the representative of the Gossain as contemplated by the deed of agreement. The only question is, whether the plaintiff is debarred of his remedy, because there has not been a complete adjustment of accounts. It is plain that a partner is entitled to purchase partnership property, provided there is full disclosure and the parties are at arm's length. It is only where the real truth is concealed and the facts are not disclosed that one partner has a legitimate grievance against the other; Dunne v. English (3), Imperial Mercantile Credit Association v. Coleman (4). Indeed, if this principle were not adopted, the transaction might not only be fruitless but end in loss to the parties. Elephants captured cannot be forthwith sold to strangers, and there is no reason why each partner should not be allowed to take some of the animals if the transaction is perfectly fair and they are agreed as to the prices. We are of opinion that the title of the plaintiff cannot be assailed merely on the ground that he has purchased partnership properties; he did so with the assent of all the persons interested in the animals, and his purchase was in no sense in contravention of the terms of the deed of agreement. Is there, then, any reason why the plaintiff should be denied relief, because all the accounts had not been adjusted? The acquisition of an absolute title to the four elephants mentioned, was not contingent upon the adjustment of all the accounts of the partnership. In this situation, the principle formulated by Lord Cottenham in Rawson v. Samuel (5) applies, viz., that an action for the balance of a settled account would not be restrained merely because there were other unsettled accounts between the parties. In the present case, there are not even cross-demands; the defendant has not chosen to sue the plaintiff for adjustment of the partnership accounts, and he cannot invite the Court to assume that the balance of that account would be found to be in his favour. Reference may be made to the earlier decision in Preston v. Strutton (6), where the pendency of an unsettled partnership account upon which the balance was in dispute, was held to be no ground for an injunction to restrain execution upon a judgment which had been obtained upon a note given for a balance upon a former settlement. In the present case, the plaintiff had acquired a complete and indefeasible title to the elephants mentioned; he was in lawful possession of them; he was deprived of that possession, because the defendants set the Police authorities in motion on untrue information, and thus obtained possession of the animals. We may observe that at least as regards one of the elephants, it was argued that the evidence showed that the plaintiff was not himself the owner as he had made the purchase for the benefit of another person. The contention in substance is that the suit in respect of such elephants could be maintained only by the person for whose benefit the purchase had been made. There is no foundation for this argument, as section 180 of the Indian Contract Act provides that if a third person deprives the bailee of the use or possession of the goods bailed or does them any injury, the bailee is entitled to use such remedies as the owner might have used in the like case if no bailment had been made, and either the bailor or the bailee may bring a suit against a third person for such deprivation or injury. This is good sense and conforms to what is now well-settled law in England (Story on Bailments, section 93F, Giles v. Grover (7), Jeffries v. Great Western Railway Co. (8). As was said by Baron Parke in Manders v. Williams (9), no proposition can be more clear than that either the bailor or the bailee of a chattel may maintain an action in respect of it against a wrong-doer, the latter by virtue of his possession, the former by reason of his property. We hold accordingly that the plaintiff is entitled to the value of the four elephants Nos. 2, 3, 6 and 7. But we are not prepared to allow him a decree for the sums claimed as expenditure for tending and training the animals; there is no satisfactory evidence in support of this claim.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge modified. The plaintiff will be awarded a decree for Rs. 4,600; this sum will carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the institution of the suit to the date of realisation; we observe that the plaint does not include a claim for interest antecedent to the suit. Each party will receive and pay costs in proportion to his success and defeat in both the Courts.

Appeal allowed in part;

Decree modified.

Where a deed by a limited owner with qualified power of alienation is impeached, the test is, is the transaction fair and proper, lawful and valid and justified by Hindu Law; necessity is only one of the phases of the test of propriety. [p. 434, col. 1.]

A widow has a larger power of disposition for religious or charitable purposes or for purposes which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband than what she possesses for purely worldly purposes. [p. 434, col. 1.]

There is a distinction between legal necessity for worldly purposes on the one hand, and the promotion of the spiritual welfare of the deceased on the other hand, and within proper limits the widow may alienate her husband's property for the performance of religious acts which are supposed to conduce, to his spiritual benefit. [p. 435, col. 2.]

A Hindu widow, daughter or mother, is entitled to alienate a small portion of the estate in her hands for religious purposes. [p. 435, col. 1.]

Under the Hindu Law the excavation and consecration of a tank are acts of high religious merit and a disposition made by a widow for such a purpose is lawful, valid and proper. [p. 436, col. 1.]

An alienation of an area slightly over two bighas out of ten bighas by a widow for the performance of a work of recognized religious merit, is not unreasonable in extent. [p. 436, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Gaya, dated the 12th December 1912, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 13th March 1912.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal is immoveable property admittedly included in the estate of one Syamlal Misser, who died in 1889. He was succeeded by his widow Puna Koer, who, on the 2nd May 1899, granted two permanent leases of the disputed land to the defendants on nominal rents. Puna Koer died in 1910. On the 20th May 1911 the plaintiff, whose paternal grandfather was the brother of the father of Syamlal Misser, instituted this suit for recovery of possession on declaration that he had succeeded to the estate as reversionary heir and was not bound by the permanent leases granted by the widow. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the transactions impeached were lawful, valid and justified by Hindu Law. The Courts below have concurrently found that the leases had been granted to raise money for the excavation and consecration of a tank and for the erection of a wall in connection with a temple founded by Syamlal Misser shortly before his death; and the evidence shows that the premium for the two leases, namely, Rs. 525 was applied for the aforesaid purpose. The Courts below have, however, decreed the suit, in the view that the excavation and consecration of the tank and the erection of the wall were not legal necessities. On the present appeal by the defendants, we have been invited to hold that the objects specified, justified the alienations which are consequently operative against the inheritance in the hands of the reversionary heir.

The test in cases of this description, where a deed by a limited owner with qualified power of alienation is impeached, is, whether the purpose for which the alienation was made was proper or legitimate. The limits of this power were defined by Turner, L. J., in a celebrated passage in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Collector of Masulipatam v. Caraly Vencata Narrainpah (1): "The widow cannot of her own will alien the property except for special purposes. For religious or charitable purposes, or those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband, she has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes. To support an alienation for the last she must show necessity." To maintain that in every case where an alienation by a limited owner is impeached, legal necessity therefor must be established to support its validity, is to take a narrow and restricted view of the scope of the true rule on the subject. The test is, is the transaction fair and proper, lawful and valid and justified by Hindu Law; necessity is only one of the phases of the test of propriety. This is manifest from the observations of Sir James Colville in Raj Lukhee Deba v. Gokool Chunder (2), of Lord Davey in Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (3) and of Lord Moulton in Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Girindra Nath Mukerji (4). It is unquestionable then that the widow has a larger power of disposition for religious or charitable purposes or for purposes which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband than what she possesses for purely worldly purposes. An exhaustive enumeration of these religious or charitable purposes is neither possible nor necessary; but some of them were mentioned by way of illustration in an opinion of the Pandits quoted with approval by Lord Gifford in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Cossinaut Bysack v. Hurroosondry Dossee (5), "religious purposes include dowry to a daughter, building temples for religious worship, digging tanks, and the like." The Pandits added "the widow has a life-interest (in both moveable and immoveable property), and is entitled to the enjoyment of the same, and to dispose of the same by gift, mortgage, sale, or otherwise, for the benefit of her departed husband's soul, even without the consent of her husband's kinsmen; in so doing, she will observe moderation." We may here refer to some very weighty observations, made by Lord Gifford, on the mode of determination of questions of this character by our Tribunals: "This being a question purely of Hindu Law, great care must be taken in coming to a decision upon that subject, in order to prevent the judgment of English Judges being warped by impressions made upon their minds in consequence of their habitual application of English Law and the nature of English decisions to which they are accustomed, and to consider in what way, a Hindu Court of Justice would have decided the point." These remarks could hardly have been borne in mind in some of the decisions quoted before us. It is not necessary for our present purpose to enter upon a minute analysis of the cases on the subject, but reference may be made to the decisions in Mahoda v. Kuleani (6); Ramchander v. Gungagovind (7); Kartick Chunder Chukerbutty v. Gour Mohun Roy (8); Runjeet Ram Koolal v. Mahomed Waris (9); Ram Kawal Singh v. Ram Kishore Das (10); Churaman Sahu v. Gopi

These cases generally recognise the doctrine that a Hindu widow, daughter or mother is entitled to alienate a small portion of the estate in her hands for religious purposes, though the actual result reached in individual decisions may be open to criticism upon their special facts. In some of these cases, however, a distinction is drawn between acts of which the religious merit is solely acquired by the female heir and acts of which the religious merit accrues to the deceased or is shared by the female heir with him. As Prannath Saraswati points out, however, in his erudite lecture on the Hindu Law of Endowments (page 167), this distinction is not supported by the texts in the case of the widow, though it may be valid in the case of the daughter or the mother. According to a text of Vrihaspati quoted in the Dayabhaga, Chapter XI, section 1, the husband and wife participate in the effects of good and civil actions, and this mutual relation is not dissolved by the death of either partner. This is emphasized in another passage (Dayabhaga, Chapter XI, section 1, clauses 43 and 44), where it is expressly stated that the widow performs acts spiritually beneficial to her husband from the date of her widowhood, and she is enjoined to be assiduous in the performance of religious duties, because, according to a text of Vyasa, she thereby conveys her husband, though abiding in another world, and herself to a region of bliss. To the same effect, is the Viromitrodaya of Mitra Misra, Chapter III, part 1 section 3 (Shastri Golap Chander Sarkar's translation, page 136), where reference is made to a text of Katyayana which recognises the right of the widow to make gifts for spiritual purposes and also to mortgage or sell so much as is sufficient for such purposes, even in religious ceremonies that are optional, and a fortiori, in those daily and occasional ceremonies which are enjoined by the Shastras and the omissions whereof entail demerit. The Viromitrodaya (page 141) also maintains that in making gifts for spiritual purposes as well as in making sales or mortgages for the purpose of performing what is necessary in a spiritual or temporal point of view, the widow's right extends to the entire estate of her husband; the author, in fact, reads the injunction as to moderation as restricted to improper temporal uses. This view, however, has not been accepted, and it has been ruled that a gift of a moderate portion of the property of her husband by the widow, with a view to his spiritual benefit, is valid (See Jagannath's Digest, translated by Colebrooke, Book I, Ch. 5, Sec. 3, Pl. 195; Book II, Ch. 4, Sec. 1, Pl. 2 & 3; Book V, Ch. 8, Pl. 399). The true rule thus appears to be that there is a distinction between legal necessity for worldly purposes on the one hand, and the promotion of the spiritual welfare of the deceased on the other hand, and that, within proper limits, the widow may alienate her husband's property for the performance of religious acts which are supposed to conduce to his spiritual benefit.

Tested in the light of these principles, what is the position of the parties here? Shyamlal Misser had, shortly before his death, founded a temple. His widow raised Rs. 528 by the grant of two perpetual leases with a view to excavate and consecrate a tank and to complete the walls of the temple buildings. The deeds contain recitals that her husband had enjoined her to carry out the works mentioned. These recitals, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Brij Lal v. Musammatt Inda Kunwar (22), are not by themselves conclusive evidence of their truth, and the facts alleged should be proved aliunde. But obviously, after the death of both Shyamlal Misser and Puna Koer, independent evidence is not likely to be available for the determination of the question, whether or not the husband gave any specific instructions to the widow. Assume, then, that the alleged instructions have not been proved; still the fact remains that the widow raised money and applied the same for completion of the buildings and for the excavation and consecration of a tank in connection with the temple. The water of the tank would be needed for purposes of ablution and worship, but even apart from this, the excavation and consecration of a tank are acts of high religious merit, as is authoritatively laid down in a series of texts quoted in the Jalashaotsargatattwa of Raghunandan and the Chaturbargachintamani of Hemadri (Dena-khanda, Cha. XIII, Asiatic Society's Ed., p. 1003). Many of these texts which extol the religious merit of the construction, consecration and maintenance of tanks and other reservoirs for storage of water, are translated by Pranuath Saraswati in his tenth lecture on the Hindu Law of Endowment. We feel no doubt what answer a Hindu Court of Justice would have given, if a question had been raised before it as to the propriety and validity of these acts of the widow from the point of view of Hindu Law. As Lord Gifford said in Cossinaut Bysack v. Hurroosondry Dossee (5), it is absolutely impossible to define the extent and limit of the power of the widow to dispose of her husband's property for religious purposes, because it must depend upon the circumstances of the disposition whenever such disposition shall be made and must be consistent with the law regulating such disposition. In the case before us, the disposition has been made for the performance of a work of recognised religious merit and cannot consequently be treated as other than lawful, valid and proper.

One other question requires consideration, namely, whether the alienation covers a reasonable portion of the property of the husband of the lady; this, as Lord Gifford said, must be determined with reference to the circumstances of the particular disposition. The Courts below did not direct their attention to this aspect of the case, possibly because its true bearing on the question in issue was not realised; and it seemed at one stage as if a remand might be necessary for the investigation of this point on fresh evidence. An examination of the record, however, shows that there are materials sufficient to enable us to come to a conclusion on the matter. Several other suits were instituted, simultaneously with the present suit, for the cancellation of other alienations by Puna Koer. These cases show that Shyamlal Misser left more than ten bighas of land and that the area now in dispute slightly exceeds two bighas. We are of opinion that, in the circumstances of this case, the area alienated did not constitute an unreasonably large fraction of the entire estate. In the case of Ramchunder v. Gurgagorind (7), the Pandits indicated their opinion that the widow might validly alienate, for religious purposes, three-sixteenths of her husband's property. In Churaman Sahu v. Gopi Sahu (11), the gift which was sustained, was of a portion of the estate worth more than one-fourth and less than one-third of the total value. In these circumstances, we are unable to say that the alienation was unreasonable in extent.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Forest Act (VII of 1878), ss. 81, 82—Forest produce, right of Government to recover money payable for, without giving credit for amount realized from sale of attached property—Pleadings—New plea, raising of, first in appeal, propriety of.

CHANDIRAM KARAMSING V. SECRETARY OF STATE.

A by a contract with Government obtained the right of felling and removing timber and of manufacturing charcoal in certain forest coupes. Under this contract A had to pay Rs. 6,431 in four equal instalments. A paid only the first instalment. On his failure to pay the second instalment, the Divisional Forest Officer attached all materials of timber, firewood and charcoal which A had in the coupes or depots and prevented A from further exploitation of the coupes until the instalments due were paid or security for payment given. The materials attached were subsequently sold and the amount retained by Government. The Divisional Forest Officer, sought to recover in addition, the full amount of all the three unpaid instalments, as arrears of land revenue under section 81 of the Forest Act:

Held, that the action of the Divisional Forest Officer could not be justified under section 82 of the Forest Act, as that section expressly provides that the proceeds of the sale should be applied first in discharging the amount due and as it does not authorise an absolute confiscation of the forest produce and independent recovery of the entire amount due. [p. 439, col. 2.]

Held, further, that the plea of justification under section 82 not having been raised in the pleadings in the lower Court, could not be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal. [p. 439, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—On the 22nd September 1909, plaintiff-appellant entered into a contract, under which (subject to the conditions and restrictions specified therein), he obtained the right of felling and removing timber, and of manufacturing charcoal, in certain forest coupes. Under this contract, plaintiff had to pay the sum of Rs. 6,431 in four equal instalments of Rs. 1,607-12-0 on 15th January 1910, 15th March 1910, 1st July 1910 and 15th August 1910. He paid the first instalment on the 5th February 1910, but has paid no other instalments. On the 21st February 1910, he had been asked to pay the second instalment punctually and on the 4th June, he was similarly asked to pay up the third instalment due on 1st July. On the 16th June 1910, the Divisional Forest Officer ordered the Range Forest Officer to attach all materials of timber, firewood or charcoal, plaintiff had in the coupes or depots, as he had failed to pay the second instalment. This order was given effect sometime before the 2nd July 1910, when a report that the attachment had been made, was submitted by the Sub-Ranger deputed to make the attachment. On the 30th August 1910, the Divisional Forest Officer demanded payment of all three instalments. Nothing seems to have been done by the plaintiff till the 12th September 1910, when he petitioned for permission to remove the attached materials and asked for time to pay the instalments due. On the 26th September 1910, the Divisional Forest Officer wrote to the Conservator of Forests the letter which is the first one in the correspondence, Exhibit 64. From paragraph 1 of this letter, it appears that the Conservator had sanctioned the plaintiff being granted an extension of time "for the exploitation of his coupes," and the Divisional Forest Officer enquires "whether this is not a mistake, and whether extension for the removal of materials already cut from the coupes to his depots is not what was actually intended." He himself was opposed to any grant of extension for further exploitation of the coupes for reasons which he gives in this letter. The Conservator on the 27th September replied that the plaintiff should be allowed "to cut and remove also the remaining portion of his materials in the coupe, provided a satisfactory surety is first given." The plaintiff admits that he was told by the Divisional Forest Officer that, if he gave security, he would be allowed to cut the standing trees and take away his attached materials and that he agreed to this, and mentioned Mr. Parsram, Pleader, as his surety. On 28th September, the Mukhtiarkar was accordingly requested to enquire into the solvency of the proposed surety and, if it was found satisfactory, to get the surety-bond executed. But on the 24th November 1910, Mr. Parsram definitely refused to stand surety for plaintiff. Meanwhile on the 10th November plaintiff had applied to the Conservator, saying he was sorry he had not been able to give security as ordered, and asking for further time to pay the instalments and work his coupes. The Conservator, however, on the 26th November 1910, in answer to a reference from the Divisional Forest Officer ordered that no further time should be given to plaintiff to furnish a surety, and on the 5th December 1910, the Divisional Forest Officer reported that he was informing plaintiff accordingly. On the 21st January 1911, the Collector at the request of the Forest Department issued a warrant for the arrest and detention of plaintiff under section 157 of the Land Revenue Code, and in respect of Rs. 4,823-4-0 due for the three unpaid instalments; and plaintiff was arrested and released on his giving security under section 164 of the same Code. On the 8th February 1911, plaintiff through his Pleader, Mr. Parsram, submitted certain proposals for compromising the matter by plaintiff being allowed further time to exploit the remaining area subject to his payment of the arrears, but these were refused by the Conservator on 11th February, on which date plaintiff filed a suit against Government for a declaration that nothing was due from him and an injunction restraining defendant from recovering anything from him or executing a warrant against him. On the 15th February 1911, the Conservator instructed the Divisional Forest Officer not to "sell the material in the coupe and depots which has been confiscated pending further orders." On the 27th May 1911, the Divisional Forest Officer gave orders, however, for the sale of these materials, which he describes as "confiscated material" of plaintiff, and an auction was accordingly held on the 5th June 1911, resulting in the recovery of Rs. 1,785 as sale-proceeds.

CHANDIRAM KARAMSING V. SECRETARY OF STATE.

In paragraph 7 of the plaint it is contended that, as plaintiff did not get possession of the coupes till after the agreed time, defendant first failed to comply with the terms of the contract and could not insist on plaintiff's strict compliance with the terms as to payment of instalments. In answer to this, defendant in his written statement says, "he did not abandon the contract as suggested in paragraph 7 of the plaint, and that he was willing up to the very end to continue the contract, provided only that plaintiff would give security for payment of the amount due from him." It is then pleaded that the plaintiff's material, which had been attached, "therefore, vests in him by virtue of clauses 3 (c) and (f) of the agreement." Under clause (c) plaintiff agreed "that he will pay the full amount of the contract sum, whether the whole of the material contracted for, be exploited by him from the coupe or not", and under clause (8) "that any material remaining within the coupe, on the 1st October 1910, or later, shall be the property of Government." The District Judge has accepted this contention. He holds that plaintiff had committed a breach of the agreement by not paying the second instalment at any rate by May 15th, 1910; that the Forest Department was justified in preventing him from removing any more of the forest material before he paid the overdue instalment; that from the moment his materials were attached, plaintiff gave up the contract as he made no attempt to have the attachment raised by paying the second and subsequent instalments; and that as the attached property became the property of Government under clause 3 (f) of the agreement, plaintiff cannot claim that its value should be deducted from the amount of the three instalments due from him under clauses 1 (a) and 3 (c) of the agreement.

This view is, however, in my opinion, quite untenable. Clauses 3 (c) and (f) of the agreement obviously contemplate the contract continuing for the full period of the contract, and are subject to an implied condition to that effect. Clause (c) provides against the contractor claiming any remission merely because of his neglect to exploit the coupe fully, and it cannot reasonably be held that under clause (f), it was intended that Government should be enabled to obtain the contractor's property by the simple process of attaching it and preventing its removal from the coupe before the date specified. Nor do I think it can properly be held that plaintiff gave up the contract, in the sense that he could have continued it and was in no way prevented by the Forest Department from doing so. The facts I have already mentioned, in my opinion, conclusively show that, as contended by the appellant's Pleader, the contract must be treated as having been put an end to by the Conservator under clauses (c) and (f) of the agreement. These clauses are as follows:—

"3 (a) That if in the opinion of the Conservator, the contractor has broken, evaded or failed to fulfil any of the herein-contained conditions or infringed any provision of the law or rules, forest or other, at the time being in force, it shall be lawful for the said Conservator, by a notice in writing to be served upon the contractor, to put an end to this agreement without prejudice to the right of the Secretary of State for antecedent breaches of contract, and to retain out of the contractor's deposit, or out of any other money of the contractor's in the possession of any Railway or Forest Officer, the amount or such portion as is possible of the amount of damages sustained by reason of the non-performance by the contractor of this agreement; or, instead of so putting an end to this agreement and retaining such sum, to retain such sum without putting an end to this agreement.

Provided always that nothing in this clause or in that last preceding, shall affect the liability of the contractor to criminal prosecution for any offence committed by him against any law or rules, forest or other, at the time in force.

(p) That, if this agreement be put an end to in whole or in part by the Conservator as aforesaid, the privileges secured to the contractor under the contract in whole or in part, as the case may be, may be re-sold by the authorised officer, subject to the orders of the Conservator, at the risk of the contractor (who shall have no claim to the profit, if any realised by the Government on such resale), or may be otherwise disposed of as the said Conservator may direct, and any money which may have been paid to Government under this agreement, and the entire stock of timber, firewood and other things in the coupe or at the depots aforesaid, or in transit between the two at the time at which the operation of the agreement was suspended by the authorised officer, or, in the event of suspension or part of the agreement only, such part of the entire stock of timber, firewood and other things in the coupe or in the depots, or in transit between the two, as relates to the part suspended, shall be and remain the property of Government and shall be disposed of for the benefit of Government in such manner as the Conservator shall direct."

The first circumstance which justifies the view that the contract was put an end to under these clauses, is that the confiscation of plaintiff's materials cannot otherwise be justified, and the Court should presume that the intention was to act legally rather than illegally. This is consonant with the maxim, omnia presumuntur rite esse acta, and the general principle that it is right to put the most favourable construction on the acts of others and to presume that a man intends to be just, which, as stated in Snell's Principles of Equity, 12th edition, page 43, is the basis of the maxim that "equity imputes an intention to fulfil an obligation." Under clause (p) mentioned above, the plaintiff's "entire stock of timber, firewood and other things in the coupe" could be confiscated to Government, as was done by the Conservator. At the hearing of the appeal an attempt was made by the Government Pleader to justify this confiscation under section 82 of the Indian Forest Act. But though section 81 of that Act has been relied on in defendant's written statement, there is no reference in it to section 82; and on the contrary the attachment is apparently sought to be justified only by "the circumstances of the case" (paragraph 2) and the agreement (paragraph 3). To allow the respondent in the appeal to fall back on section 82 would, therefore, be to allow a considerable departure from defendant's pleadings, which appellant might reasonably complain, would operate to his prejudice. But in any case, I do not think section 82 can possibly cover what was done in this case. It gives a lien on forest produce for money payable for or in respect of that forest produce, and a power to sell such produce for the recovery of the amount due. But it expressly provides that "the proceeds of the sale shall be applied first in discharging" the amount due. It does not authorise an absolute confiscation of the forest produce and independent recovery of the entire amount due, such as defendant seeks to justify in this case. Here the Conservator has treated the attached property as confiscated, and the entire amount of the three instalments due is sought to be recovered from the plaintiff, irrespective of the sale-proceeds of the attached property. No doubt, the Divisional Forest Officer's order of attachment on 16th June 1910 was justifiable, and was very likely intended to be passed, under section 82. But if so, the procedure laid down in that section should have been followed, i.e., the forest produce should have been sold at any rate in December 1910, when it was decided that plaintiff would be granted no further extension of time, and the sale-proceeds applied in reducing the amount due from him. But this was not done, and on the contrary the property was confiscated in the manner authorised by clause 3 (p) of the agreement: consequently, defendant cannot fall back on section 82 of the Forest Act as a justification of the action taken in this case.

Then again, the correspondence shows that there was an actual "putting an end to" the agreement between the parties. This is virtually admitted in paragraph 5 of defendant's written statement, where it is stated defendant "was willing up to the very end to continue the contract, provided only that plaintiff would give security for the amount due from him." There is nothing in the agreement under which the Conservator could demand such security as a condition of the continuance of the contract; and if the offer of the Conservator to allow plaintiff an extension of time for exploitation of the coupe and removing his materials, provided he gave security, had been carried out, it would clearly have amounted to an altered contract, which would take the place of the original contract under section 62 of the Contract Act. It also seems clear from the Divisional Forest Officer's letter of 26th September 1910 (Exhibit 64) that he was not allowing plaintiff to go on cutting timber and otherwise exploiting the coupe, because in his view, this meant his spending more borrowed money and lessening the chance of recovery of the outstanding instalments. This is corroborated by plaintiff's evidence that he was told by the Divisional Forest Officer that he would be allowed to cut the standing trees and take away his goods if he gave security, and by the admission in paragraph 4 of defendant's written statement that Government confiscated the remaining portion of the wood. The proposed arrangement about plaintiff's giving security fell through, and the original contract was certainly put an end to at any rate in September 1910, when the Forest Department refused to allow plaintiff to carry on further operations, unless he furnished good security. The term of the contract, it may be noted, did not expire till 30th September 1910.

No doubt, it is true that plaintiff was not prevented from cutting further timber at the time of the attachment, and that Government are not to blame for the obstacles in the way of further exploitation due to water entering the coupe in July and plaintiff's coolies running away. If the Forest Officials had exercised due care in proceeding so that their action could have been justified under section 82 of the Forest Act, Government would have had a much better case. But as it is, the Court can only presume that their action was taken under clauses 3 (o) and (p) of the agreement, which is consonant with the facts for the reasons already given and which at any rate gives Government a better case than if the action of attaching and confiscating plaintiff's materials is treated as entirely unjustifiable. And this is in no way prejudicial to appellant, because it is the case put before the Court by his Pleader.

The mere fact that defendant failed to pay the three instalments, and had no other means to pay what was due, could not, of course, justify the attachment of the materials. Under the agreement plaintiff had free possession and control of these materials subject only to the restrictions as to passes for removal, etc., specified in the agreement.

In my opinion, therefore, the Conservator must be taken to have put an end to the agreement under clause 3 (o) and to have acted as he did under that and the connected clause (p). The fact that under clause (o), there has to be a notice in writing served upon the contractor, does not prevent this clause operating, because this qualification is introduced for the benefit of the party to whom such notice must be given, and it may accordingly be waived by plaintiff under the principle quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto, just as notice of dishonour of a title of exchange may be waived by the drawer or endorser (cf. Broom's Legal Maxims, 7th Edition, pages 533-4). There is no difficulty about this, as appellant asks the Court to treat the case as one in which the agreement was put an end to under this clause (o).

This being so, the question arises whether Government are entitled to recover the three unpaid instalments in addition to the property confiscated and money retained under clauses (o) and (p). There is nothing in those clauses reserving any such additional right, though provision is made for saving any right of the Secretary of State for antecedent breaches of contract. The whole agreement is also of an elaborate nature, in which it appears to be intended to specify all the disabilities and restrictions to which the contractor is subject. I think it is clearly a case to which the ordinary rule of construction, expresso unius est exclusio alterius, must be applied; and that the provisions of clauses (o) and (p) must be treated as exhaustive in regard to the remedies available to Government in the event of the agreement being put an end to by the Conservator. This construction does not seem unreasonable, because Government might, and probably in general stand to, gain much more than was actually due, by the confiscation, etc., authorised by these clauses, and the clause (p) has probably been framed on the basis that the risk of loss in such a case may be safely taken by Government. If this is not the intention, then it should have been made clear. In this connection it may be noted that a contractor cannot get relief from the stipulations by way of penalty contained in this agreement, as he might otherwise do (where they press hardly) under section 74 of the Contract Act, because of section 84 of the Forest Act, which expressly applies to the agreement. There is, therefore, all the more reason for the above construction of clauses (o) and (p), as in such a case one beneficial to the person subject to the penalties imposed should, where otherwise justifiable, be preferred.

In the present case Government have recovered Rs. 4,035-14-0 as against Rs. 6,431 due under the contract, and have the benefit of the timber which remained uncut by the plaintiff, so that the equities are not so very much in their favour. And it certainly would be inequitable that they should be entitled to recover Rs. 4,823-4-0 in addition to the Rs. 4,035-14-0 already recovered, and thus make a considerable profit out of the plaintiff's breach of agreement.

For these reasons, I hold that the three instalments, in respect of which the warrant was issued by the Collector, are no longer payable or due to Government, and, therefore, that section 81 of the Forest Act does not authorise the recovery of those instalments under the provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code.

It may be added that, though Government would have been entitled to recover the Rs. 4,823-2-0, if the contract had not been put an end to and advantage not been taken of the provisions of clause 3 (p) of the agreement, cf. P. R. & Co. v. Bhagwan Das Chaturbhuj (1), yet they are clearly not entitled under ordinary contract law both to this recovery and the penalty provided in that clause of the agreement (cf. section 74, Contract Act). Also as the Conservator subsequently ratified the Divisional Forest Officer's order of attachment, which was passed at the time when the first of the three unpaid instalments was due, that ratifications must, as part of the confiscation and putting an end to the agreement, have retrospective effect under the ordinary rule in such cases. The agreement was thus put an end to in respect of the first breach of contract and the saving of the right of the Secretary of State for antecedent breaches of contract in clause 3 (o) will not operate to prevent clause 3 (p) barring the recovery of all three instalments.

I would, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Court and grant the plaintiff a declaration that this sum of Rs. 4,823-4-0 is not due from him to defendant in respect of the agreement Exhibit 29. An injunction is unnecessary in this case, as defendant is the Secretary of State. I would also allow plaintiff his costs from defendant throughout.

PRATT, J. C.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal comes before us on a judgment of Mr. Justice Macleod upon an originating summons for the purpose of deciding certain questions with regard to a settlement executed by one Hakoobai on the 11th of December 1873. The summons was taken out by one of the trustees of the settlement, who also claimed to be a beneficiary entitled to the trust property in the events that had happened. The other parties to the summons were the other trustees and all persons who could conceivably be supposed to be interested as the heirs of the settlor or her daughter Gomtibai.

The question concerning the plaintiff's beneficial interest was raised in the plaint in these terms:—

"The plaintiff says that he was born at the date of the said indenture and is the nearest heir of the said Gomtibai according to Hindu Law, capable of taking any benefit under the said indenture, and submits that under the terms of the said indenture and a true construction thereof, the plaintiff has become absolutely entitled to the aforesaid trust property."

The plaintiff was represented in chambers upon the summons and had his case fully argued by Mr. Setalvad, but after argument, it was decided against him by the learned Judge, and having regard to the fact that the matter has been fully considered and that no appeal has been preferred on behalf of the plaintiff, we must take it that the question of his interest is finally settled against him. That question having been settled by the learned Judge, there remained for decision question 8: "In the events that have happened, who is the person entitled to the property?" It was conceded by all the parties to the summons except the unsuccessful plaintiff that in the events that had happened, there was an intestacy and a resulting trust in favour of the settlor. Then the question arose who were or was the heirs or heir of the settlor entitled to take the property. On the one hand, it was contended that the heir of the settlor at the time of her death was Gomtibai, her surviving daughter, and that since Gomtibai was dead at the date of the summons, her children, the respondents, were entitled to the property. On the other hand, the tenth defendant claimed that the heir of the settlor could not be ascertained until the extinction of the beneficial interests which were validly created under the settlement, and that at the date of such extinction, he was the nearest heir of the settlor.

Now the law as to what are known in ordinary legal language as "resulting trusts" is stated in section 83 of the Indian Trusts Act:—"Where a trust is incapable of being executed, or where the trust is completely executed without exhausting the trust property, the trustee, in the absence of a direction to the contrary, must hold the trust property, or so much thereof as is unexhausted, for the benefit of the author of the trust or his legal representative." Section 191 of the Indian Succession Act provides that "Letters of Administration entitle the administrator to all rights belonging to the intestate as effectually as if the administration had been granted at the moment after his death." Similarly, the Probate and Administration Act, section 4, says:—"The executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such." That would include property falling into possession at the time of the testator's death or many years afterwards, for all interests vest in the personal representative. The executor or administrator, as the case may be, holds all property not validly disposed of, for the persons beneficially entitled at the moment of the death of the deceased owner.

DWARAKADAS DAMODAR v. DWARAKADAS SHAMJI.

In the present case, we have to deal with the estate of a deceased intestate for which no administration has been granted. We have only to find the beneficiary. The Succession Certificate Act does not on the facts necessitate a grant of administration. The term 'legal representative' in section 83 of the Trusts Act must in such a case include the person or persons beneficially entitled who represent the interests of the deceased by virtue of inheritance.

The heirs then are the 'legal representatives' and they represent the estate of the deceased for the purpose of interests established by way of a resulting trust just as would the executor or administrator. Their representation dates from the same period and the reversion under the resulting trust, whether foreseen or unforeseen, having vested as a transferable interest in the deceased, vests on her death in her representative. The representative by inheritance is to be found according to law at the moment of the death of the deceased, the maxim being "solus Deus facit heredem, non homo."

On behalf of the appellant, it was argued that there could be no vested reversion till the "succession opened". This expression is appropriate where there is a claim on the death of a Hindu widow enjoying her husband's estate, but its use in the present case indicates the fallacy underlying the argument for the appellant. To use the words of the Judicial Committee in Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (1), the widow's "estate is an anomalous one, and has been compared to that of a tenant-in-tail. It would perhaps be more correct to say that she holds an estate of inheritance to herself and the heirs of her husband. But whatever her estate is, it is clear that, until the termination of it, it is impossible to say who are the persons who will be entitled to succeed as heirs to her husband. The succession does not open to the heirs of the husband until the termination of the widow's estate."

Here, the valid life-interest of Gomitibai under the settlement was merely a "particular" estate, by reason of which the reversionary interest of the settlor remained to fall into possession at some future time, although capable of immediate transfer or inheritance.

As Gomitibai was at the death of the settlor both the sole heir and the sole beneficiary capable of taking under the settlement, her life-interest under the settlement merged in her reversion, on the principle that "whenever a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person without any intermediate estate, the less is annihilated or in the law phrase is said to be merged, that is, sunk or drowned in the greater." 2 Blackstone's Commentaries, 177.

The question of merger was not, however, argued and it is sufficient for the disposal of the appeal to say that Gomitibai and not the appellant was the settlor's heir. If that had been the only question in appeal, we should dismiss it with costs. But it is not the only question. There remains a question of costs.

The question which we have dealt with in the foregoing remarks appears to have occasioned considerable difficulty in the lower Court. It was argued on the 21st of November after the decision of the case against the plaintiff and was then adjourned for further argument into Court under the rule which permits a Judge to adjourn a case where he thinks fit for argument into Court.

The tenth defendant had been brought before the Court by one of the trustees, who for his own reasons wished to have all possible claims adverse to his claim disposed of in the originating summons, and it was also a matter of much interest and importance to the other trustees because they had to decide whether or not they held for their co-trustee or whether there was a resulting trust for the heirs of the settlor. The case, therefore, falls within the authorities which have been cited to us, Waidanis, In re, Rivers v. Waidanis (2) and In re Buckton, Buckton v. Buckton (3), both of which appear to us to justify the conclusion that the tenth defendant ought to be allowed his costs upon this summons, and that being so, he is entitled to his costs of this appeal also.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiff obtained six decrees on hand-roles against defendant No. 1, Ramji Lal Das, and his father, and in execution caused the property in suit and other property to be put to sale, and himself purchased it on April 11th, 1906. Meanwhile, he says, Ramji Lal fabricated three bonds, among them a mortgage-bond purporting to have been executed on February 25th, 1893, in favour of Raghunath Jha, defendant No. 2. The latter obtained an ex parte decree against Ramji Lal on the basis of this mortgage-bond in Suit No. 26 of 1906 and in execution bought the property now in suit. In February 1907 the plaintiff asked the Court to put him in possession of the property in suit, but resistance was offered by Raghunath Jha. The Munsif disposed of the matter by an order dated February 18th, 1907. The plaintiff instituted the present suit on August 8th, 1910, and the reliefs for which he asked were, so far as this appeal is concerned, for declaration that the mortgage bond of February 25th, 1893, the proceedings in Suit No. 26 of 1906 on that bond and the proceedings in execution of the decree were fraudulent and inoperative against him (the plaintiff) and that he (the plaintiff) is entitled to possession of the land in suit. Defendant No. 2 contested the suit and it is he who has preferred this appeal.

On the merits, the Courts below have decided in favour of the plaintiff, and the only contention in appeal is that the suit is barred by limitation. It is said that the Munsif's order of February 18th, 1907, was an order under section 335, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and that the suit is barred by Article 11 of the Limitation Act of 1877, because it was not brought within one year of that order.

It is obvious that this contention must prevail if the order mentioned was an order under section 335, Civil Procedure Code.

It appears that on February 15th, 1907, the plaintiff as auction-purchaser applied to the Court to be put in possession of the purchased property, and the Munsif's order of the next day was that the nazir should go and give him possession but should return if there was any opposition. On February 18th, the Munsif recorded this order: "this petition is vehemently objected to. The best course left for the applicant is to bring a suit. Case is dismissed." In this order, the "applicant" must be the plaintiff, then auction-purchaser, and the "petition" and the "case" are his petition to be put in possession.

By section 335, Civil Procedure Code, it is provided that "the Court on the complaint of the purchaser shall enquire into the matter of the resistance * * * and pass such order thereon as it thinks fit." We are asked to presume that the Court made an enquiry, although no record of such an enquiry exists, and that the order dismissing the decree-holder's petition was in consequence such an order as is contemplated by section 335, Civil Procedure Code. Our attention has been drawn especially to the case of Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1), where their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked that "the Code does not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go." That case may be distinguished from the present one, firstly, by the fact that there was an order allowing certain objection to an attachment made by the decree-holder, and secondly, by the fact that the nature of the enquiry made by the Court was not known, and their Lordships assumed that there was some sort of enquiry. These are substantial points of difference, and because of these differences, I do not think that the principle laid down by the Privy Council governs the present case.

On the other hand, we have been referred to two Calcutta cases, where the circumstances are very similar to those of the present case. The first is that of Rash Behary Bysack v. Budden Chunder Singh (2). If the Munsif's compressed order of February 18th were expanded, it would be, mutatis mutandis, very much the same as the order recorded by the Munsif in that case, and it was held that there had been no judicial enquiry as required by the section and consequently no proper order. The second case is much more recent and it refers to the Privy Council judgment; it is the case of Sarat Chandra Bisu v. Tarini Prasad Pal (3), where Maclean, C. J., held that if there was no enquiry at all, there was no order within the meaning of section 335, Civil Procedure Code.

In my opinion, it is clear that there was no enquiry at all in the present case on which an order could be based, and that the order passed was not an order under section 335, Civil Procedure Code. Consequently I hold that the suit was not barred by limitation. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(March 13th, 1915)—I am unable to agree with the finding of the officiating Collector with powers of the Commissioner that the defendants had acquired occupancy rights before the passing of Act II of 1901. Under section 8, Act XII of 1881, only tenants who had actually occupied or cultivated land continuously for twelve years had rights of occupancy and under that Act a mere trespasser could acquire no right under that section. The evidence in this case is rather meagre. The small plot in question, of about two-thirds of an acre, was recorded as a tank in 1288 Fasli, and in 1307 Fasli the defendant was recorded as tenant without paying rent for 14 years. There is nothing to show whether the land is now cultivated, but assuming that it is, he has been in possession for some 27 years without paying rent at all. It would appear that he began to cultivate a portion of the tank without the consent of the land-holder and there is nothing to show that the land-holder consented. Babu Sat Narain Prasad v. Ram Kumar (1) governs the case. The only weak point is that the plaintiff in his

"The properties acquired by the members of each tawazhi as their own as well as those that may be so acquired, shall, on the death of such acquirers, lapse only to their tawazhi."

Held, that there was nothing in the language of the instrument to show that the acquirer of the property debarred himself from dealing with it during his life-time either by alienation inter vivos or by means of a Will, and that, therefore, a legatee claiming under such a Will made by such a member was prima facie entitled to a succession certificate. [p. 449, col. 2]

Appeal against the order of the District Court of North Malabar in Original Petitions Nos. 57 and 115 of 1913.

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair and J. L. Rozario, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Sundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case two persons applied for certificate of succession to a deceased man, who was a member of a Muhammadan family in Malabar. The appellant was an anandravan of the deceased's tawazhi and the respondent was the karnavan of the tawazhi as well as of the main tarwad.

The appellant asked for a certificate with respect to certain property, which he alleged was the self-acquired property of the deceased. The learned District Judge has dismissed the petition of the appellant, on the ground that by virtue of a certain karar whatever property the deceased might acquire in his life-time, belonged to the tawazhi; so that the Will under which the appellant claimed the certificate was not operative in respect of the property of the deceased. The karar is a family settlement and what is its effect, so far as this matter is concerned, depends upon the proper interpretation of paragraph 5. What that paragraph says is: "The properties acquired, by the members of each tawazhi as their own as well as those that may be so acquired, shall, on the death of such acquirers, lapse only to their tawazhi." There is nothing in this language to show that the acquirer of the property debarred himself from dealing with it during his life-time either by alienation inter vivos or by means of a Will. All that it says, is that on his death the property shall descend to the tawazhi. This is like any similar provision in an ordinary Will and it does not preclude the person making such a provision from dealing with it in his life-time either by an inter vivos or a testamentary disposition. We think, therefore, that the appellant has a prima facie title under the Will to a succession certificate.

But there is also another question in the case which has not been clearly determined by the learned District Judge, and that is whether the properties in question were the self-acquisitions of the deceased or belonged to the family. If they are not the self-acquisitions of the deceased, then the Will in favour of the appellant can have no operation. The District Judge has not come to any finding on the point. He touches on the point, but leaves it undecided. Before the petition could be disposed of, there ought to be a finding on the question whether the property was the self-acquisition of the deceased or family property. If the District Judge finds that it is self-acquired property, then the appellant would be entitled to a succession certificate. With these observations, we remit the case to the District Judge to dispose of it according to law. It Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 16th September 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector of Fyzabad District in a case of recovery of compensation.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(March 4th, 1915)—I may dispose of a minor point first in this case. Ground No. 2 has nothing in it. The respondent has every right to sue the landholder alone for compensation under section 108 (9).

The appellant contends that, under Kashi Nath Singh v. Shamju (1), the respondent is entitled to recover compensation only for the time he was out of possession during the year preceding the date on which he instituted the suit, that is to say, the 21st November 1913. The respondent alleges he was wrongly dispossessed on the 25th June 1912; the suit for recovery of possession was decreed on the 28th

November 1912; and he was restored to possession on the 22nd January 1913 by order of the Court. The Board have held in that Selected Decision that dispossession following on illegal ejectment is a continuing wrong and that a plaintiff may bring a suit for compensation under section 108 (9) (c) between any time from the date of the illegal ejectment up to a year after the date of the recovery of possession, but that he only can get compensation in respect of the time during the year preceding the bringing of the suit in which he was out of possession. The respondent, however, argues that he is entitled to get compensation for the whole period of his dispossession. He urges that, as he has a year in which to bring his suit after the date of his restoration, if he could not do this and waited till the last moment, he would be entitled to nothing; whereas if he were to bring a suit before the date of his restoration to possession, he would have to sue again on account of the compensation for the subsequent period until his restoration and that this would result in an inconvenient multiplicity of suits. He, therefore, asks me to dissent from the Selected Decision. I agree with the observations of the Board of 1892, that it would have been more convenient had the law allowed the period of limitation in suits under section 108 (9) (c) to run from the date of restoration to possession, limiting the compensation to three years as in the case of mesne profits; but I am unable to agree with the appellant's argument that this is the present law, without any limitation as to the number of years' compensation to be given. If a plaintiff wishes to avoid losing compensation for some years, clearly he has a remedy by bringing promptly a suit for recovery of occupancy under section 108 (10) and a suit for compensation under section 108 (9) (c) at the same time within a year after the illegal ejectment first took place. It is true that the interpretation adopted in the Selected Decision creates one difficulty. If the trial of these suits lasts some time, the plaintiff might be entitled to fresh compensation from the date of the institution of the suit till the date of his recovery of occupancy. Whether he would have to bring a fresh suit or whether his compensation could be awarded in the suit referred to, need not be discussed here. The Board of 1892 in their decision came to no definite conclusion as to this.

I see no sufficient reason to dissent from Kushi Nath Singh v. Shamju (1). This being so, it seems clear and is practically not disputed that there could be no kharif crop on the ground of any kind between 21st November 1912 and the date of the rabi crop being put in. I would set aside the orders of the lower Courts and dismiss the suit for compensation, parties bearing their own costs in all Courts in the circumstances.

Hindu Law—Marriage, form of, how determined—Lingayat form of marriage—Joshi, whether can demand fees.

In order to determine whether a marriage is in the Hindu form or in the Pancha Kalas Lingayat form, the Court must consider the marriage as a whole rather than the particular ceremonies performed. [p. 449, col. 1.]

If the ceremony performed is not a Hindu marriage ceremony as a whole, the joshi or gramopadhya has no right to demand the marriage fees. [p. 449, col. 2.]

Waman Jagannath Joshi v. Balaji Kusaji Patil, 14 B. 167, explained.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Dharwar, in Appeal No. 88 of 1912, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Dharwar, in Civil Suit No. 227 of 1911.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. V. Palekar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The contest in this case resolves itself into this, whether the ceremonies observed by Lingayats in marriages are to be regarded as a whole in deciding whether or not the village gramopadhya is entitled to perform the ceremony, or whether the ceremony can be split up into parts, and if it is found that some part of the ceremonial is similar to that according to the Brahmin ritual, the gramopadhya can insist upon payment of fees in respect of such part of the ceremonial as may have been performed by another. The point is stated exceedingly well by the learned Subordinate Judge, Mr. Wagh. He says:

"It is urged that some of the ceremonials such as the fastening of the mangalsutra and the kankandhara are common to the Hindu form and the Pancha Kalas form, and that, therefore, the fastening of the mangalsutra and the kankandhara in the Pancha Kalas form of marriage entitles the plaintiffs to the fee appropriate to the Hindu form. If the ceremonials of the Brahmins, the Jains and the Lingayats are compared, it would be found that they agree in some points and are divergent in others. Yet they have their characteristic basic differences arising out of the faith on which they are founded. It would not be right, therefore, from the common circumstance of the fastening of the mangalsutra or of the wristthread or the throwing of rice on the bridal pair to say that the ceremony is Hindu in form and that the watandar joshi is entitled to his fee. We have to take the marriage ceremony as a whole and determine whether it is in the Hindu form or in the Pancha Kalas Lingayat form. If it is the former, the joshi is entitled to his fee, and if it is the latter, he is not."

The contrary view is stated by the District Judge who, after consideration of the cases cited to him, namely, Raja valad Shivappa v. Krishnabhat (1), Waman Jagannath Joshi v. Balaji Kusaji Patil (2), and Krishnumbhat v. Anunt Gangadharbhat (3), says:—

"I am, therefore, of opinion that the Court must consider the particular ceremonies performed rather than the marriage as a whole and that even if some ceremonies, whether optional or obligatory, were performed which plaintiff himself could not perform, and for which he can, therefore, claim no fees, the fact does not debar him from claiming fees on account of other ceremonies which were actually performed and which plaintiff could perform, and is entitled to perform, in the ordinary course in the case of marriages in the caste of defendant No. 1. The addition of some ceremonies which plaintiff could not perform and the omission of others which would necessarily have been performed had plaintiff officiated, does not affect his right to recover his proper fees, if any, on account of such ceremonies as were performed."

We are of opinion that the view taken by the District Judge is based upon a misapprehension of what was decided by this Court in Waman Jagannath Joshi v. Bulaji Kusaji Patil (2). The judgment of the Subordinate Judge, with appellate powers, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, was there under appeal to the High Court. The Appellate Court's opinion was that "the plaintiffs were only entitled to recover in case a marriage was performed in any of the modes known to the Hindu Law, or in the mode described by Mr. Mandlik with respect to castes other than the Brahmin caste, and that the marriages in dispute being not performed in any such way, they were not such marriages as they were entitled to recover fees for in virtue of any right acquired by grant or prescription." The High Court said:

"We agree with the lower Appellate Court that, under such circumstances as he thinks existed here, there would have been no intrusion on the plaintiff's privileges which would give them a right to recover their fees from the yajman as laid down in the decisions of this Presidency... But no issue was expressly raised as to the manner in which the marriages in question were performed; and although in the course of the hearing, some evidence was given on the subject, neither party, we think, clearly understood what was the real issue between them on that part of the case." Therefore, the issue was sent down to the District Court: "What ceremonies were performed on the occasions of the marriages, or either of them, and by whom?" We have referred to the record in that case, and we find that the learned District Judge, after stating what ceremonies were, on the evidence taken on remand, performed, stated his opinion that "the ceremonial enumerated by the late V. N. Mandlik in his Hindu Law, as observed by lower castes, was not followed on these occasions." That was a confirmation of the inference drawn by the lower Appellate Court whose judgment was under appeal to the High Court, and upon that finding, the Court confirmed the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge, with appellate powers, with costs. We take that as an authority for the opinion of the Subordinate Judge that if the ceremony performed is not a Hindu marriage ceremony as a whole, the voshi or gramopadhy has no right to demand the fees.

We reverse the decision of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs throughout upon the plaintiffs. The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Compromise in Court—Perpetual lease executed but not registered—Mention of lease in compromise—Terms not entered—Lease, admissibility of, in evidence.

A previous suit for ejectment was compromised. A sulehnama was written and filed in the Court. A lease was executed on the same date giving particulars of the terms upon which the land was to be held by the tenant. The lease was a perpetual lease, but it was not registered. In the sulehnama, the lease was mentioned but the terms were not mentioned.

Held, in a subsequent suit for ejectment, that the lease, not being registered, was inadmissible in evidence. [p. 450, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 13th October 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Sultanpur District, in a case of ejectment under section 108/8 of Act XXII of 1886.

The appeal first came up for hearing on the 11th of March 1915 when the Court passed following ORDER.—The lease which was executed on the same date as the sulehnama, on the 8th of RAJARAM NANDLAL P. ABDUL RAHIM.

June 1882, was in favour of the present appellant, Harpal Singh, as to whom there is a finding of fact by the Assistant Collector that he is the nephew of Sheoraj Singh, the husband of Musammal Bilasi. It is undisputed that after Musammal Bilasi died, Harpal Singh succeeded to the holding, though the appellant says she died twenty years ago and respondent says she died ten or eleven years ago. It is clear then that the respondent treated Harpal as the heir of Musammal Bilasi, as there is no allegation that he was given the land in any other capacity. He pays the same rent as Bilasi paid and as was entered in the sulehnama. One of the respondents, the lambardar Kanhaiya Bakhsh, who issued the notice of ejectment in 1832 against Musammal Bilasi, apparently gave the putta, but the respondents contend that it is inadmissible in evidence as it was not registered. If this contention is correct, the appeal must fail. I feel, however, some doubt whether in a case of this sort the putta which was executed on the same date as the sulehnama and was mentioned in it, should not be considered an integral part of the sulehnama and as such not liable to be registered.

Adjourned to look up rulings on this point. After the adjourned hearing the appeal again came up for hearing on the 14th June 1915 when the Court passed the following

JUDGMENT.—The sulehnama mentions a putta, but does not call it an istimrari (perpetual) lease. Its terms then are not embodied in the sulehnama, and it is inadmissible in evidence as it was not registered.

JUDGMENT.—The facts in this case, except in details which seem to us to be of little importance, are not really in dispute.

The plaintiffs in the Punjab employed the defendants to do business for them as commission agents in Karachi. The defendants from time to time and in accordance with instructions received from the plaintiffs entered into contracts for the purchase and sale of toorla. Forward contracts for the purchase of toorla of February, March and April deliveries were made by the defendants in accordance with personal instructions given by plaintiffs' manager who had come to Karachi for that purpose. The toorla of the February delivery was re-sold at plaintiffs' instructions at the end of February and the transaction resulted in a loss of Rs. 1,972.

Plaintiffs' manager then left Karachi and subsequent instructions were given by letter and by telegram.

Plaintiffs had not paid for the February loss, but on the 15th of March the plaintiffs wrote Exhibit 5 to say that they were ashamed but were making arrangements to find money to meet this loss. On the 16th March, the defendants drew a hundi for Rs. 500 on the plaintiffs which they did not honour.

On the 17th of March defendants telegraphed (Exhibit 6) to the plaintiffs asking them to pay the hundli and remit money to pay the amount of the loss and to enable them to take delivery, failing which they would be obliged to sell it.

Plaintiffs replied by telegram (Exhibit 7) and by letter (Exhibit 8) on the 21st March asking the defendants for a week's time promising to arrange for payment and requesting the defendants not to sell without hearing from them. The telegram contains the words "Settled with Mukamdin." This Mukamdin was defendants' man who had been to see plaintiffs. It was plaintiffs' case in the lower Court that the demand for indemnity had been settled by their giving Mukamdin a pro-note for Rs. 2,000. But the lower Court has found that this story is absolutely false and no serious attempt has been made before us to dispute the finding of the lower Court on the point.

The defendants replied (Exhibit 9) on the 22nd March, reiterating the demand made for payment in Exhibit 6 and stating that unless they were put in funds they would have to sell.

Plaintiffs replied on the 25th March (Exhibit 13) giving the defendants instructions to deal with the tooria of the March delivery as they thought best, either to sell or to take delivery and give it to a European office on "unfixed rate" terms.

The vendor of the March delivery did not make mili khari, i. e., did not fix a date for delivery, and the March contracts were settled at the rates prevailing on the last day of March.

In other words, the defendants sold on behalf of plaintiffs on the 31st of March—but after doing so, they sent to the plaintiffs, the following telegram (Exhibit 15) on the 1st April 1912:—

"Rajaram Nandlal, Bhalwal."

"Accept B. C. I inform you that the tooria of March will be settled and inform you about April tooria that neither you paid my receipt, nor you sent remaining amount nor you sent rupees for deposit, hence on registering this card in Post Office, I shall dispose of tooria of April at my discretion in your account, any work write me. 1st April 1912 Abdul Rahim Haji Fatehadin, Karachi Bunder, written by Atta Mahomed."

After this telegram, the defendants ignored plaintiffs' instructions and sold the April tooria on the 2nd, 8th and 9th April.

The plaintiffs filed this suit for an account and the lower Court has debited the plaintiffs with the loss on the February contracts and credited them with the profits on the March and April transactions taking the rates at which the defendants actually sold. The result was a decree against the plaintiffs for Rs. 381-12-0. Plaintiffs appeal. The correctness of the debit for February is admitted. As to March, the plaintiffs cannot complain that the defendants did not act in accordance with the instructions given them in their telegram, Exhibit 13. The telegram gave them the option of selling and the settlement of the rates of the 31st March, the last day of the period of delivery, was made in accordance with the rule in Leigh v. Paterson (1) followed in Mackertich v. Noba Coomar Ray (2) and was equivalent to a sale. It is contended, however, that if the defendants had acted with skill and reasonable diligence, they would have taken delivery and disposed of the goods to a European firm on 'unfixed rate' terms. But there are two complete answers to this contention. In the first place, the defendants had not been put in funds to enable them to take delivery or even to pay the margin money. It is not alleged that under the contract of agency, it was incumbent on defendants to use their own capital in plaintiffs' business. Nor did plaintiffs allege this in reply to defendants' telegram, Exhibits 6 & Exhibit 9. And again, as the rates of the 31st March were profitable, the defendants acted in the best interests of plaintiffs in selling according to their instructions. They could not have foreseen the future rise of the market and, therefore, the utmost that could be said against them is that they committed an error of judgment in so selling. But an agent is not responsible for an error of judgment provided he exercises reasonable skill and diligence: Lagunas Nitrate Company v. Lagunas Syndicate (3).

As to the April delivery, Mr. Rupchand's contention is that as the defendants had no instructions to sell, the plaintiffs are entitled to the rates of the last day of

April as the vendors did not make miti khari.

But it seems to us clear that the defendants' letter Exhibit 15, terminated the agency on the 1st April under section 201. An agreement to serve as an agent may be rescinded like any other agreement. This is recognised in section 205 of the Contract Act, for when the agency has to last for any particular period, the agent is only liable to make compensation if he renounces the agency within that period without sufficient cause. Here, no doubt, it was an implied term of the agency that it should last at least until the end of April. But we think it clear that the defendants had sufficient cause for renouncing and that cause is set forth in their telegram. The plaintiffs had failed to indemnify them for the February losses, they dishonoured the hundi drawn upon them, they then asked for a week's time, they made a false statement that the indemnity had been settled, and up to the end of March made no payment at all. The promise of indemnity is an implied term of the contract of agency and the plaintiffs' conduct amounted to a refusal to indemnify and justified rescission under section 39. This default on the part of the plaintiffs justified the defendants rescinding the agency. The telegram, Exhibit 15, is written in bazar English, but its meaning is very clear. It says in effect: "the March account I have settled as your agent, but as to the April delivery your conduct has been such that it is impossible to continue to do business with you—for you have dishonoured our hundi, you have not paid the losses, you have not put us in funds to take delivery, therefore, I shall sell the April delivery, tooria without reference to you and credit proceeds to your account." This is a clear rescission of the agency and the cause stated is sufficient.

The case of Lacey v. Hill, Crowley's Claim (4) is in point. In that case, the stock-brokers Messrs. Crowley & Co., in consequence of a representation by their principal Sir Robert Harvey that he would indemnify them for losses incurred on the settling day of the 15th July, continued contracts as to part of his stock, i.e., made contracts to buy it back and re-sell it on the next settling day, the 20th July. The principal failed to pay on the 15th July and the brokers sold on the morning of the 16th. Mr. Fry, Q. C., for the legal representative of the principal contended that the brokers had no authority to sell. As to this Jessell, M. R., said:—

"The first question I have to decide is, was such a sale authorised? It was said, the only authority Messrs. Crowley had was to purchase for the next account day, the 30th, and they had no right, therefore, to sell before that day. I admit that their right to sell before that day is not a right ordinarily possessed by an agent who has contracted to buy for delivery on a future day. I think the right depends on two grounds and that it is well warranted on both. The first ground is that they did not agree to continue, except on the representation by Sir Robert Harvey that he would pay on the Friday. He left them to continue or not, knowing they could not continue unless they relied on that representation, which he failed to perform. I agree with Mr. Fry's observation that under that right, they were bound to sell soon afterwards, that they had not the right to sell at any future time they pleased; but the sale took place next morning, and so no time was really lost."

The other reason referred to by Jessell, M. R., was the custom of the stock exchange with which we are not concerned in this case. But the ratio decidendi in the passage quoted is that the principal's default justified the agent in rescinding the agency. In that case the agent's duty is to sell on the date the agency is terminated—for the principal is entitled to credit for the price of the goods on the date the business is terminated. So here the agency was terminated on the 1st April and the plaintiffs are entitled to the rates of that day. It is true that the defendants delayed selling and they did so at their own risk, for if the rates had fallen the plaintiffs would have still been entitled to the rates of the 1st April. But this delay of the defendants has not damnified the plaintiffs for the sales were at rates better than those of the 1st April. Mr. Rupchand's argument that plaintiffs are entitled to the rates of the 30th April is the same argument as that urged in Lacey v. Hill, Crowley's Claim (4) and the answer is the same: "You would have been entitled to this rate if the agency had continued, but as the agency was legally determined you, are only entitled to the rates of the day when the agency so terminated."

RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 58, 79—Ejectment—Grove—Possession by landlord—Groveholder, possession of, nature of—Remedy of grove-holder.

A landlord took forcible possession of a grove in his zemindari. No contract to pay rent was entered into nor was there anything to show that the landlord was admitted as a sub-tenant. The grove-holder sued to eject the landlord as his sub-tenant. The Courts below gave a decree for ejectment. The landlord applied in revision:

Held, that if the grove-holder was to be treated as a tenant, his remedy was to sue for possession under section 79 of the Tenancy Act within six months; but if he was not a tenant, a suit under section 58 did not lie.

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Jhansi Division, dated the 24th June 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector of Hamirpur District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—There seems to me little doubt that the Courts have taken a wrong view of the law. Either the grove-holder should be treated as a tenant of a holding or he should not. What he has done is to sue to eject his landlord under section 58, on the allegation that he is a sub-tenant of the land. There is no evidence whatever on the record to show that the landlord entered into any contract with the grove-holder to pay rent or was admitted to the sub-tenancy by the grove-holder. Indeed the respondent now changes his story and says that the landlord is a sub-tenant only in respect of 07 acres and not of the whole area in dispute, 20 acres. It is true that the landlord is recorded as a sub-tenant in the land with a note that he is zemindar. This merely indicates that the landholder is in possession and nothing more. The respondent's case really is that the landholder has wrongfully dispossessed him from the land. This being so, if the grove-holder is to be treated as a tenant of a holding, he had his remedy under section 79 of the Tenancy Act but failed to exercise it within six months. In this case, he cannot now treat the landholder as a nominal sub-tenant and sue to eject him. On the other hand, if the respondent is not a tenant of a holding, he has no power to sue under section 58.

As regards the first ground of appeal, it seems true that under the recent ruling of the Board [His Highness the Maharaja of Benares v. Babu Vijai Narain Singh (1)] which follows at any rate one previous decision of the Board, as the zemindar raised the plea that he was cultivating part of the land as his khulkaht, the appeal should have been to the District Judge. It is, however, the appellant's own fault that he appealed to the Commissioner, and he can hardly be permitted now to question the jurisdiction of the Commissioner. Both Courts have held, as a matter of fact, that the land still retains the character of a grove. An error of law seems to have been committed, but I have to consider whether the Board should interfere on revision. The appellant's story apparently is that the respondent has abandoned his grove and that he entered in possession thereon. This on the face of it is an improbable story and has not been believed by the lower Courts. Thus no substantial injustice has been caused, and following the practice of the Board, there is no sufficient reason to interfere on revision.

Application dismissed. In the circumstances, parties will bear their own costs.

The forfeiture is claimed by reason of a breach of a covenant in the lease, which may be translated in the following terms: "If I fail to conduct myself accordingly, I shall at once give up the said land to you and I shall have no objection to your giving it away to others." It is argued in the first instance that this covenant must be read as referring to albreach only of the covenant to pay rent. We are unable to accept this construction of the lease. Reading the clause with the rest of the lease, we are of opinion that it was meant to come into operation on the tenants failing to act in accordance with any of the covenants contained in the lease.

The covenant which the tenants are alleged to have failed to observe is that they shall not alienate the land in any manner.

It is admitted that there have been alienations of portions of the tenancy that might prima facie cause forfeiture of the lease under the clause referred to. We reserve the question whether alienations of portions operate as forfeiture of the whole. But it is contended that the forfeiture has been waived in the manner referred to in section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The third issue in the suit is whether the forfeiture of the lease by the lessee, if there has been any forfeiture, has been waived by the temple.

The District Munsif discussed this question at some length in paragraphs 11 and 12 of his judgment and came to the conclusion that "the mulgar has acknowledged the alienation by receiving rent from the alienee and cannot now repudiate the alienation."

The Subordinate Judge says he feels no doubt that there was no waiver of forfeiture. We cannot regard the reasons given in paragraph 4 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment as a satisfactory ground for this finding, as they do not meet the whole of the defendants' case.

The Subordinate Judge first refers to the money receipts, which he says do not show that rent was sent by the 8th defendant as alienee and then he considers the oral evidence of Amrita Rao and accepts his statement that no alienation ever came to his notice.

Now there are four alleged alienations, viz., (1) a mortgage by Azimuddin to the 11th respondent in 1894, (2) a partition into three shares in 1900, (3) a credit sale in 1901 by Azimuddin to Kasim Sabih, father of the defendants Nos. 8 to 10, and lastly (4) a usufructuary mortgage by

7th defendant of his share to 11th defendant on 29th January 1908.

During these years, the proprietorship has not remained in the hands of a single lessor continuously but has changed hands three times. In 1905, Amrita Rao sold the suit property to Ramakamthi and on 20th January 1908, Ramakamthi sold it to the temple, whose moktessors are the present plaintiffs.

Under the law as to waiver of forfeiture analogous to the provisions of section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act, acceptance of rent by any one of these lessors might operate as a waiver of such forfeiture as might arise from any breach committed during the period when he had the landlord's interest in the land. Where after forfeiture the lessor transfers his rights to another person, the act and the mode of transfer may itself show an intention either to keep the right to claim the forfeiture subsisting or to waive it. Whether or not the lessor intended to waive the forfeiture and to treat the lease as subsisting, may be clear from the terms of the transfer. The terms of the sale-deeds B and C have not been considered by either of the Courts below.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider as to each of the alleged acts of forfeiture whether there has been a subsequent acceptance of rent or other equivocal act by the lessors concerned or by any of their successors-in-interest, and if so, what was its effect on the subsistence of the lease. The payment by the 8th defendant is not the only payment which can be considered, nor is Amrita Rao's statement sufficient to dispose of the matter. The alleged waiver of the forfeiture arising from the alienation through Exhibit L is the act of permitting 1st to 7th defendants to pay the assessment after the plaintiffs knew of the execution of Exhibit L, thus showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting.

We must, therefore, call on the Subordinate Judge to return a fresh finding on the third issue which should be amplified by adding the words 'or by the predecessors-in-interest of the temple.'

At the same time, he will also return a finding on the question, whether there has been a forfeiture of lease by reason of non-payment of rent. In paragraph 5 of his judgment, he has given it as his bald opinion that there has been forfeiture of rent on this account also, but he has not given reasons for his opinion nor has he stated what rent was not paid and when. The District Munsif has considered this point more fully in paragraph 13 of his judgment and has found that there has been no forfeiture on the score of non-payment of rent. The Subordinate Judge has not dealt with the payments referred to by the District Munsif, as it was necessary that he should do in a reversing judgment. Findings to be returned on the evidence on record within two months. Objections within six days.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of South Canara submitted the following FINDINGS.—(1). The issues remitted for findings are:—

(1) "Whether the forfeiture, if any, has been waived by the temple or by the predecessors-in-interest of the temple?"

(2) "Whether there has been a forfeiture of lease by reason of non-payment of rent?"

On the first issue the lower Appellate Court submitted a finding that Amrita Rao and his brother and his mother had waived their right to claim forfeiture when they executed the sale-deed, that no forfeiture occurred during the period the property was owned by Ramakamthi and that the temple did not waive any right it could have had in consequence of the alienation made in favour of the 11th defendant, and on the second issue he held that there was a proper and valid tender of the full rent from 1906 to 1909 both inclusive.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the findings of the lower Court on the 14th and 17th September 1915, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—With reference to the findings now received, it is urged that there is no evidence to support the Subordinate Judge's conclusion that the forfeiture caused by the conditional sale in 1901 by Azimuddin to Kasim Sahib (father of defendants Nos. 8 to 10) was waived. The Subordinate Judge relied on the terms of Exhibit B and the conduct of the parties in not giving notice to the tenants or their lienees. We think that these were matters which the Subordinate Judge might properly take into consideration in determining the question of waiver, and we declined to disturb his finding on this point. We, therefore, accept all the findings.

Next with reference to the usufructuary mortgage by 7th defendant of his share to 11th defendant on January 29th, 1908, if it offended against the forfeiture clause, we have the lower Court's finding that there was no waiver on behalf of the temple of any right arising out of it. The lease (Exhibit A) provides, "Further I have no right to alienate the said land in any manner"; and contains a provision for re-entry on the breach of any of the covenants in the lease, to which we have already adverted. Now, is it clear that the parties intended to refer to such a transaction as is now before us when they spoke of alienating the land? The law leans against forfeiture. To adopt the language of Lord Chancellor in Northcote v. Duke (1) "When you come for a forfeiture, you must be very exact and certain," vide [Northcote v. Duke (1)]. Here there was no abandonment or divestment by the 7th defendant of all his interest in the land. He usufructuarily mortgaged his share for a term of 12 years, which was not co-extensive with his own right of occupancy, and at the same time, as recited in Exhibit L, he took a lease from his mortgagee, so that, in the result, the possession remained with him. We are of opinion that this was not such a disposition of the property in the land as would necessarily amount to an alienation within the terms of the forfeiture clause in the lease-deed.

We must, therefore, allow the appeal, and as the defendants did not appeal against the decree of the District Munsif, we restore that decree with costs in this Court. Each side to bear their own costs in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

Section 31 of the Tenancy Act will not apply to a mortgage of a holding entered into before the Tenancy Act came into force. [p. 456, col. 2.]

A mortgagee of an occupancy holding is not a necessary party to a suit for arrears of rent, as the occupancy tenant is the only person responsible for the rent of the holding. [p. 457, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner of the Allahbad Division, dated the 28th October 1913, confirming that of the Collector of Etawah District, in a case of arrears of rent.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, J. M.—(November 21st, 1914.)—The land is occupancy tenure and was mortgaged by the defendants in the suit for arrears of rent to one Ram Sahai. The respondent argues that, as the landholder did not sue for the cancellation of the mortgage under section 31 of the present Tenancy Act, it is, therefore, valid against him. The mortgage, however, was entered into before the Tenancy Act came into force and this section has no application. The respondent urges that, because the landholder has received rent from Ram Sahai, he must be taken as having recognised him as a mortgagee in possession. The finding as to the payment of rent is contained in the Tahsildar's decision. He writes:—"The plaintiff received the rent for 1316 Fasli through Ram Sahai by money order". There is no evidence now on record to this effect. The money orders which apparently prove this, have been taken back by the respondent, who does not now produce them. From the wording of the decision it would appear that Ram Sahai paid the rent on behalf of the defendants, the occupancy tenants. This fact is quite insufficient to show that the plaintiff ever recognised Ram Sahai as a mortgagee in possession.

SHANMUGHAM ASARI V. SIYID NATHADU SAHIB.

or habitually received rent from him. In this view, Ram Sahai was not a necessary party to the suit, and in any case under rule 9, Order I, of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is doubtful if the suit should have been dismissed merely by reason of his non-joinder. There seems to have been a clear error in law which has led to substantial injustice, as the permission to bring a fresh suit was useless as it would have been time-barred.

I would, therefore, set aside the orders passed and restore the suit to the file of the Assistant Collector for re-trial on its merits. Costs to follow the event.

TWEEDY, S. M.—I agree. There is a gross and palpable error of law which vitiates the decision of the Assistant Collector and the Collector. It makes no difference whatever whether the landholder did or did not recognise Ram Sahai as mortgagee in possession and collect the rent from him on any particular occasion. The occupancy tenant is the one and only person responsible for the rent of the holding and Ram Sahai was not a necessary party. Any arrangement by which the landholder collects rent from the mortgagee in possession is one which he makes for convenience's sake and which he can cancel any time he likes.

I agree with the proposed order.

period as well he could not make the payment. Thereafter he applied to the Court to direct the judgment-debtor to execute the conveyance.

Held, that as the application was made beyond the period fixed in the decree, it was ineffective and the judgment-debtor was within his rights in refusing the execution of the conveyance.

JUDGMENT.—The decree in this case directed "that the 1st defendant do execute a sale-deed to the plaintiff in respect of the properties described thereunder on receiving the balance of purchase-money, Rs. 250, within one month from this date," that is, from the date of the decree. The plaintiff, who is the 1st respondent before us, failed to pay the amount and applied for time to be given to him and he was granted a month's time on 29th March 1911. He again failed to comply with the order. That being so, the application must be held to be ineffective. The appellant was to convey the properties only if he received the money which he was entitled to, under the decree. As he was not paid money within the time allowed by the Court, he was quite within his right to refuse to make the conveyance.

Our attention was drawn to the decision in Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone (1). That was a very similar case and the learned Judges came to the conclusion that an application which was made after the period allowed by the Court, was ineffective. We think that the rule applies to this case. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and restore the order of the District Munsif. The respondent must pay the cost of the appellant.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 11—Occupancy rights, acquisition of—Twelve years' continuous occupation—Land lying fallow.

A tank land carried crops of singhara or paddy in years of heavy rainfall. No rent was paid in the years when there was no cultivation and rent varied largely from year to year. The tenant claimed continuous possession on the ground that he grazed cattle when cultivation was impossible.

Held, that this was not the case in which cultivated land was left fallow for a year or two without the period necessary for the acquisition of a right of occupancy being interrupted and that under the circumstances occupancy rights did not accrue as there was no continuous occupation for twelve years.

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Meerut Division, dated the 18th August 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector of Bulandshahr District in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—(March 22nd, 1915.)—I am unable to agree with the lower Courts in this case, and consider that they have so misinterpreted the law that the Board are justified in interfering in revision. The land, from which plaintiff-appellant wishes to eject defendant-respondent, is a tank or depression which can only carry crops of singhara or paddy in years of heavy rainfall. Defendant first began to cultivate it in 1308 Fasli, but in several years since then, the land has been uncultivated. The rent has varied very largely from year to year, and defendant has admittedly paid no rent in the years when there has been no cultivation. Defendant, however, claims that he has been in continuous possession on the grounds that he has grazed his cattle on the land, when cultivation has been impossible.

The lower Courts have found that he has held the land continuously for more than 12 years, and has acquired occupancy rights. Under the circumstances described, I am unable to agree with them. I am of opinion that he has taken the land on a new contract on each occasion when it has been found to be culturable; and in the intervals, he cannot be considered to have held it at all.

I would, therefore, set aside the lower Court's orders and decree plaintiff-appellant's suit with costs in all Courts.

HOLMS, S. M.—I agree. This is not the same as a case in which cultivated land is left fallow for a year or two without the period necessary for the acquisition of a right of occupancy being interrupted.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the decree is in accordance with the award and there is no objection taken on that score, but it is sought to impeach the decree on other grounds. Rule 16 of the 2nd Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that there shall be no appeal from a decree which is in accordance with the award, and it has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that there being no appeal from such a decree, a revision petition to revise a decree confirming an award, would be still more objectionable, vid. the decision in the case of Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (1). But if it can be shown that the lower Court acted without jurisdiction or failed to exercise jurisdiction or acted with material irregularity in dealing with the award, it would be open to the High Court on a proper case being made out to revise such an order. The ruling of the Privy Council has been followed in a number of decisions of this Court and no doubt that represents the law. In this case, grounds Nos. 5 and 6 in the revision petition, cannot at all be said to allege grounds for our interference. It is stated in ground No. 6 that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to frame a scheme in respect of the charity, the reason given, therefore, being that the charity referred to was a public charity. But there is no such finding, it is not even alleged in the pleadings that the charity in question was a public charity. Further, the plaintiff himself in his plaint asked for a scheme to be framed. In these circumstances, we cannot hold that this is a proper ground for exercising our jurisdiction under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

As regards ground No. 5, it is said that a certain additional amount was allotted by the arbitrator for the carrying on of the charity and this was in excess of his powers. But we find that an issue was raised raising the question, viz., what further provision, if any, should be made for the charity, and so far as we can gather from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge as well as the proceedings before the arbitrator, no objection was raised to the question being dealt with by the arbitrator. On looking at the nature of the dispute between the parties, it does not appear to be unreasonable for the arbitrator to have gone into the matter. This objection also fails. It is not alleged that the Subordinate Judge in dealing with the award has been guilty of any irregularity in the conduct of the proceedings. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that this is not a fit case for our interference under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and dismiss Civil Revision Petition No. 849 of 1913 with costs.

The other petition, No. 850 of 1913, relates to the costs awarded by the Subordinate Judge with reference to the fees of the arbitrator. We think that he was entitled under the terms of the reference and in the circumstances of the case to award proper fees to the arbitrator. He did not include this amount in the decree itself, but dealt with it in a separate order passed on the same day as the decree confirming the award. This is not a matter for interference in revision. Civil Revision Petition No. 850 of 1913 is also dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of Agra, dated the 26th August 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Etah District, in a case of enhancement of rent under section 43 of Act II of 1901.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(February 19th, 1915.)—I am unable to accede to the contentions in the grounds of appeal as drafted. Section 49 of the Tenancy Act is for the benefit of the

NIKUNJA RANI v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

State as much as for the benefit of the landholder and is clearly against the contention of the appellant that the respondent is bound for ever by his previous agreement. It seems to me, however, that the respondent in suing for an enhancement of rent under section 43 has adopted the wrong remedy. His proper course was to have sued under section 49 and have the agreement rendered void, unless the tenant agreed to pay a fair and equitable rent to be determined by the Collector. The Commissioner has remanded the case for a decision as to fair and equitable rent, but if the decree is given for an enhancement of rent under section 43, the result might be that the rent would be fixed for 10 years only. The suit, therefore, to my mind, was wrongly instituted originally and I would set aside the order of the Commissioner and dismiss the suit, the respondent paying costs in all the Courts.

The respondent will, of course, be at liberty to institute a suit under section 49.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870, s. 19E, object of—Penalty, imposition of—Order ultra vires—Suit to recover penalty imposed, maintainability of—Civil Court, jurisdiction of—Revenue Authority, power of—Penalty, nature of.

Unless there is a statutory bar, a suit is maintainable by the Secretary of State for India in Council for recovery of a penalty lawfully imposed [p. 461, col. 2.]

Where a penalty has been imposed by a Revenue Authority, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to review the decision on the ground that the valuation had been incorrectly made or that the discretion in the imposition of the penalty had been erroneously exercised, but if the action of the Revenue Authority is ultra vires there is no enforceable claim which a Civil Court is bound to recognize. [p. 461, col. 2; p. 462, col. 1.]

Section 19E of the Court Fees Act contemplates an application on the part of the person who had taken out Probate and produces the same to be duly stamped and applies where the estimated value of the estate is less than what the value has afterwards proved to be: and in the absence of any such application, it does not authorize a Revenue Authority to impose any penalty. [p. 462, col. 1.]

In a Probate case notice was issued to a Collector under sub-section 1 of section 19H of the Court Fees Act. As no reply was received from the Collector, Probate was issued to the petitioner on payment of the duty payable upon her valuation of the estate. The Collector, thereafter, held that the value of the estate was much more and directed a notice to the petitioner to amend the valuation, and to explain the cause of under-valuation. The petitioner did not accept the Collector's valuation but in order to avoid litigation deposited the additional fee. The Board, however, ordered that double the fee payable be levied as penalty and a suit was instituted to recover the amount:

Held, that the imposition of the penalty was ultra vires and, therefore, the suit was not maintainable. [p. 462, col. 2.]

Semble.—In a case where section 19E is properly applicable, the petitioner is entirely in the hands of the chief controlling Revenue Authority, who is at liberty to refuse to stamp the Probate till the penalty has been paid. [p. 462, col. 2.]

Quære.—Whether the penalty imposed in such a case is personal and not recoverable from the estate? [p. 462, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT. This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of a penalty imposed on her under section 19E of the Court Fees Act, 1870. The facts material for the determination of the questions of law raised before us are undisputed, and lie in a narrow compass. The appellant applied for Probate of a Will executed by her husband Kailas Chandra Choudhury. Thereupon notice was issued to the Collector of Faridpore under sub-section 1 of section 19H of the Court Fees Act. As no reply was received from the Collector, Probate was issued to the petitioner on the 28th August 1900 on payment of Rs. 1,563, the duty payable upon her valuation of the estate. On the 10th December 1908, the Collector of Faridpore, who had meanwhile communicated with the Collector of Backergunge where some of the properties were situated, held that the value of the estate was Rs. 1,69,123, and not Rs. 78,122 as stated by the petitioner in her application for Probate. He accordingly directed the petitioner to amend the valuation and to explain the cause of under-valuation. Notice was served upon her on the 15th December 1908. On the 2nd January 1909, she presented a petition to the Collector, in which she stated that the valuation as made by her agents and accepted by her in good faith was correct, as the majority of the properties were small shares in various estates and could not fetch large values. She added, however, that she had no desire to litigate the matter and deposited Rs. 1,821, the additional fee payable, on the hypothesis that the valuation of the Collector was correct. On the 16th January 1909, the Collector recommended to the Commissioner that the additional sum might be accepted, and the Probate amended. This was endorsed by the Commissioner and submitted by him to the Board of Revenue for sanction. The Board, however, on the 4th July 1909, directed that double the fee payable, that is Rs. 6,768, be levied as penalty from the petitioner under section 19E of the Court Fees Act. This order, made without any notice to the petitioner, was communicated to her on the 15th August 1909. On the 11th September 1909, she petitioned to the Board to re-consider the matter, but during the pendency of her application for review, the Collector instituted the present suit on the 11th December 1909 for recovery of Rs. 6,768. On the 16th January 1910, the Board, on review, reduced the penalty to Rs. 3,384. On the 8th August 1910, the plaint was amended and the claim was reduced to that sum. The defendant resisted the claim substantially on three grounds, namely, first, that the suit as framed was not maintainable, secondly, that the penalty had not been imposed in accordance with statutory provisions, and consequently could not be recovered, and thirdly, that even if the penalty was recoverable, no decree could be made against the estate in her hands. The Subordinate Judge overruled these contentions and decreed the suit. Upon appeal that decree has been affirmed by the District Judge. The present appeal was summarily dismissed under rule 11 of Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code by Brett and Sharf-ud-din, JJ. The appellant then applied for review of judgment and obtained a Rule. After the retirement of Brett, J., the Rule was made absolute by Sharf-ud-din, J., on the ground that important questions of law were involved in the appeal. The appeal has now come up before us for final disposal, and on behalf of the appellant the three grounds urged in the primary Court in answer to the claim have been reiterated.

NIKUNJA RANI v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

As regards the first objection, namely, that the suit is not maintainable, we are of opinion that there is no foundation for it. Assuming that the penalty has been rightly imposed, there must be some method for its recovery. A suit for its recovery is not barred either explicitly or impliedly. There is no provision in the law for recovery of the penalty by summary process, as section 19E is not mentioned in sub-section 1 of section 19J. But even if a summary remedy had been provided, it would not follow that the Crown was not entitled to the ordinary remedy by a suit, which is open to all its subjects. In England, where the Crown claims sums due to it by way of penalty or otherwise, the recovery may be had by information: Attorney-General v. Freer (1); Bradlaugh v. Clarke (2); Cawthorne v. Campbell (3). We feel no doubt that unless there is a statutory bar, a suit is maintainable by the Secretary of State for India in Council for recovery of a penalty lawfully imposed.

As regards the second objection, namely, that the penalty has been imposed in contravention of the Statute and is consequently not recoverable, the question has been raised whether it is open to the Civil Court to determine the matter. The decision in Manekji v. Secretary of State for India (4) shows that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to review the decision of a Revenue Authority on the ground that the valuation had been incorrectly made or that the discretion in the imposition of the penalty had been erroneously exercised. But the position is different when the order for imposition of penalty is assailed on the ground that it has not been made in accordance with the Statute. If the action of the Revenue Authority is ultra vires, if he has not followed the procedure prescribed by the Statute which is the source of his authority, there is no enforceable claim which a Civil Court is bound to recognize. We must consequently determine whether the imposition of the penalty in the case before us, was ultra vires.

Section 19-I of the Court Fees Act contemplates the pre-payment of duty before an order for grant of Probate is made: In the goods of Omda Bibi (5). In the case before us, this appears to have been done. A notice was thereupon issued to the Collector under section 19H to enable him to test the valuation. As no communication was received from him, the Court issued the Probate. Subsequently, the Collector called upon the petitioner to amend the valuation under subsection 3 of section 19H. The applicant for Probate did not accept the valuation made by the Collector. She maintained, on the other hand, that the original valuation made by her was not inadequate, but with a view to avoid expense and litigation, she deposited the excess sum demanded. The Board of Revenue thereupon proceeded to impose a penalty on the applicant under section 19E. In our opinion, section 19E had no application in the events which had happened. As pointed out in the case of Manekji v. Secretary of State for India (4), section 19E contemplates an application on the part of the person who has taken out Probate and produces the same to be duly stamped. There was no such application in the present case. The section further contemplates that the estimated value of the estate is less than what the value has afterwards proved to be. In the present case, there was no determination of the valuation by the Probate Court; there was, on the one hand, an estimate by the petitioner, there was on the other hand, an assessment by the Collector which was not accepted as correct by the applicant; indeed, she disputed the correctness of the grounds for the higher assessment. There was consequently no room for the application of section 19E. If it was intended to take proceedings under section 19E, as the petitioner disputed the correctness of the assessment by the Collector, the Court should have been moved for an enquiry into the true value of the assets under section 19H and if the Collector had adopted such a course, it would have been incumbent upon him, as explained in the case of In the goods of Sterenson, (6), to make out a case for enquiry upon definite facts. No such step was, however, taken, possibly for the reason that the Collector was of opinion that no penalty should be imposed. But whatever the reason might be, it is plain that there was no compliance with the statutory requirements and that the contingency contemplated in section 19E had not arisen. Nor was action taken under section 19G, which is moulded on section 43 of 55 Geo. III, Ch. 184, and section 122 of 56 Geo. III, Ch. 56. We may here point out the reason why section 19J, which prescribes the mode of recovery of penalties, makes no mention of section 19E. In a case where that section is properly applicable, the petitioner is entirely in the hands of the chief controlling Revenue Authority, who is at liberty to refuse to stamp the Probate till the penalty has been paid; no occasion can consequently arise for recovery, by summary process or by suit, of the penalty imposed under section 19E. We are of opinion that the action of the Board of Revenue was entirely misconceived and that the imposition of the penalty under section 19E was ultra vires. There is thus no legal foundation for the claim.

As regards the third objection, namely, that the penalty is personal and is not recoverable from the estate, we need only say that it raises a question of first impression and of some nicety, which need not be determined in view of our decision on the second objection.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge reversed and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—Suit dismissed for defect in form—Subsequent suit, whether barred—Joint ownership—Right to demand partition incidental.

Where the dismissal of a suit takes place for defect in the form of the suit, Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code does not preclude a plaintiff, whose suit has been thus dismissed, from bringing a second suit. [p. 463, col. 2.]

Bhola Singh v. Gurdit Singh, 66 P. R. 1834, referred to.

Order II, rule 2, requires a plaintiff to include in a suit the whole of the claim which he is entitled to make in respect of the particular cause of action which forms the basis of the suit and does not compel him to include claims arising out of different causes of action. [p. 463, col. 2; p. 464, col. 1.]

The right to demand partition is one of the incidents of joint ownership and as long as the joint ownership subsists, any of the joint owners may demand partition. [p. 464, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a plaintiff's suit for his share of two mortgage-debts realised by the defendants from the mortgagors was dismissed on the ground that the suit for partial partition did not lie, and he then brought a suit for partition of all joint properties:

Held, that, the causes of action in the two suits being different, the second suit was not barred by reason of Order II, rule 2. [p. 463, col. 2.]

Abdun Nasir v. Rasulan, 20 C. 385, referred to.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Sialkot Division, dated the 23rd January 1913.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit which has given rise to this second appeal has been dismissed by the learned Divisional Judge as barred by the provisions of Order II, rule 2. We have considered the arguments advanced on both sides, the facts of the previous case and the law bearing on the subject, and come to the conclusion that the rule enunciated in Order II, rule 2, has no application to the case and that this appeal must succeed.

It appears that in 1909, the present plaintiff sued the defendants for his share of two mortgage-debts realised by the defendants from the mortgagors. That suit was decreed by the Court of first instance, but the District Judge on appeal accepted the plea that the suit for partial partition did not lie. The finding on that point was, it is clear, sufficient for the dismissal of the suit, and the fact that the Court also recorded the further finding that the debts, the subject-matter of the suit, were not proved to be joint property (which finding was a mere obiter dictum) does not affect the determination of the question which arises in the appeal before us.

In pursuance of the direction given by the Appellate Court, the present suit for the partition of all the joint properties has been instituted, and we fail to understand how the provisions of Order II, rule 2, govern the case. The previous suit failed because it was not properly framed, and it is a well established principle of law that where the dismissal of a suit takes place for defect in the form of the suit, Order II, rule 2, does not preclude a plaintiff, whose suit has been thus dismissed, from bringing a second suit, vide, inter alia, Bhola Singh v. Gurdit Singh (1).

Further, it seems to us that the causes of action in the two suits are not identical. In the present suit the cause of action is the right to have the whole joint property brought together and divided. As observed by Melville, J., in Kakaji v. Bapuji (2)—“So far from these two being the same cause of action, they present all the difference which is expressed by saying that the one is a cause of action, and the other is no cause of action.” It appears that at the time of the institution of the first suit, the plaintiff's right to participate in the joint property other than the two debts referred to above had not been denied, and the denial by the defendants in their written statement, which has been relied upon by the learned Divisional Judge, was a cause of action which accrued subsequent to the institution of that suit. We consider that the causes of action in the two cases were quite distinct, vide Abdun Nasir v. Rasulan (3), and it is clear that Order II, rule 2, requires a plaintiff to include in a suit the whole of the claim which he is entitled to make in respect of the particular cause of action which forms the basis of the suit and does not compel him to include claims arising out of different causes of action.

Another aspect of the matter leads us to the same conclusion. What was the effect of the dismissal of the first suit for partition? It was clear that the parties continued to be joint owners in the properties as before and it is beyond question that the right to demand partition is one of the incidents of joint ownership, and as long as the joint ownership subsists, any of the joint owners may demand partition. We do not, therefore, see how the dismissal of the previous suit operates as a bar to the present one.

We are, therefore, quite clear that the previous dismissal on account of the plaintiff not having included the whole of his claim does not bar his second suit for partition of the whole property. If any authority is needed for the view, we would refer to the judgments of Umrao Singh v. Piare Lal (4) and Kakaji v. Bapuji (2), which are on all fours with the present case. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, for the decision of the defendants' appeal on the merits. Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal shall be refunded and other costs shall be costs in the cause.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

Ejectment—Suit by mortgagor before obtaining decree in redemption suit, maintainability of.

DINA V. BISHAMBHAR SINGH.

A suit for ejectment brought by the mortgagor of a zemindari share during the pendency of the redemption suit and before his obtaining a redemption decree is premature and not maintainable.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Meerut Division, dated the 3rd November 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Saharanpur District, in a case of ejectment under section 58/63 of Act II of 1901.

JUDGMENT.—I think this case must be accepted. It seems quite clear that appellant paid his rent to Ahmad Husain in 1911 and 1912. Ahmad Husain resisted respondent's possession of the land, on the strength of his mortgage; and respondent's suit for redemption of the mortgage was not decreed until November 1912, whereas the present suit for ejectment was filed in September 1912. I think that at that time appellant was justified in looking upon himself as Ahmad Husain's tenant, and that he bona fide paid the rent to him as he had always done before. He was not supposed to know the details of the dispute between the mortgagee and respondent.

I consider that the respondent's suit for ejectment was premature and should have been dismissed.

I would, therefore, set aside the Commissioner's order and restore the order of the Assistant Collector, giving appellant his costs in all Courts.

Appeal against the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jubbulpore Division, dated the 14th November 1913, confirming that of the Additional Judge to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Seoni, dated the 10th December 1912.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and K. V. Deoskar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises, relates to the village Tuapar in the Seoni District of the Central Provinces. One Dadu Gulab Singh, since dead and now represented by the respondents, was the superior proprietor of that village. The inferior proprietary right in the same village originally belonged to the family of which the appellant Dina is now the representative member. This right was held by several co-sharers, and the share of Dina and his nephew Mangal is two annas eight pies. But Dina is the lambardar of the whole village. Dadu Gulab Singh gradually bought out all the shares other than Dina's thus—

On the 25th October 1886 (Exhibit P 11) ...	0	4	0
On the 21st May 1906 (deed not filed). ...	0	4	0
Total ...	0	13	4

But Dina has stoutly adhered to his share, and has continued to be the sadar lambardar. In 1909, he filed a civil suit in the Court of the District Judge of Seoni, repudiating the title of Dadu Gulab Singh and of his vendors, and claiming a declaration that he was the sole owner of the inferior proprietary right in the entire village. The suit failed, and it was decided that Dadu Gulab Singh had become the owner of a 13 annas 4 pies share in that estate.

Subsequently Dadu Gulab Singh applied for an imperfect partition of the village. Here again Dina appeared in opposition. After an infructuous attempt to revive the title decided against him in the above civil suit, he set up a claim by prescription to certain sir and khudkasht land which had been in his physical possession for more than twelve years preceding the suit. The Revenue Officer holding the partition proceedings, dealt with this objection as a case under section 136-G, Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881, and decided it against Dina. An appeal to the Court of the Divisional Judge followed, and has been dismissed by that Court upon the ground that, as a holder of common property, the possession of Dina was not adverse to his co-sharers, and that as lambardar, he was a mere bailiff of the proprietary body and could not defeat or destroy their titles by mere exclusive possession and the non-payment of profits. The learned Divisional Judge completely overlooked the decision of this Court in Sheodayal Singh v. Bhagirath Singh (1), and if that ruling were to prevail, this case would have to be sent back. But it was not accepted by Skinner, A. J. C., in Daud Khan v. Gorinda (2), so far as the general rule laid down in the placitum, is concerned; and one of us, before whom the appeal originally came, considered that this conflict of opinion should be set at rest by a Bench. This appeal was, therefore, ordered by the Judicial Commissioner to be decided by a Bench.

The placitum in Sheodayal Singh v. Bhagirath Singh (1) reads thus:

"The possession of one co-owner is ordinarily adverse to another co-owner who is excluded from possession.

"In the absence of proof that a lambardar is in possession as agent of a co-sharer, such possession must be deemed to be adverse and not permissive."

We have nothing to say against the merits of the decision arrived at by our learned predecessor in the particular case which was before him. But, with all due respect, we are unable to accept as correct the two propositions of law embodied in the above placitum. They are opposed to numerous decisions, forming a consistent cursus curiarum in this and other High Courts; and we would state the law to be as follows:—

(1) 13 C. P. L. R. 69.

(2) 2 Ind. Cns. 15; 5 N. L. R. 41.

DINA P. BISHAMBER SINGH.

"The exclusive possession of one co-owner who has entered under a common title is not ordinarily adverse to another co-owner.

"In the absence of proof that a co-sharer lambardar is holding the property of himself and his co-sharers adversely to the latter, his possession must be presumed to be permissive and as that of an agent for them."

It will be seen that these propositions are diametrically opposed to the dicta of Ismay, J. C., in the above case, but there is ample authority in support of both of them.

First, as regards the general law applicable to all joint or common owners. It will be seen that the ruling of our learned predecessor proceeds upon an English Statute which has no application whatever to India, and we are unable to understand why any analogy should be drawn from it, either for dealing with co-owners in India generally, or with co-sharers of maljuzari villages in the Central Provinces in particular.

So far as the general proposition is concerned, the Calcutta High Court have declared in Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baldeo Das Maricari (3) that it is a fundamental rule that the entry and possession of land by one under the common title of a co-owner will not be presumed to be adverse to the other co-owners, but will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all. To the same effect, are the decisions in Mihin Lal v. Badri Prasad (4), Har Charan v. Biwla (5), Ahmad Raza Khan v. Ram Lal (6) and Bundacharya v. Shrinivasa-charya (7). How far this presumption may be carried, will be found illustrated in a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in a Ceylon case, Corea v. Appuhamy (8). That was a case in which a man named Elias having died intestate, his property devolved by law upon his brother Iseris and three sisters. Iseris was in jail and the three sisters were otherwise absent when the estate fell in, and, therefore, the District Court took temporary possession. Iseris alone subsequently took over the property from the Court officials, and retained it exclusively for a period which, had such possession been adverse, would have extinguished the title of the sisters. On a suit between Iseris and a purchaser of the estate of the only sister surviving at the date of the purchase, the Ceylon Courts held that Iseris had entered in the character of a sole heir or plunderer, and ruled that whichever it was "so he continued, and acknowledged no title in any one else" and had, therefore, acquired a good prescriptive title. This decision was reversed by their Lordships of the Privy Council, who remarked as follows:—

"It is difficult to understand why it should be suggested that Iseris may have entered as 'plunderer.' He was not without his faults. * * * But it is perhaps going too far to hold that he was so fond of crooked ways and so bent on doing 'wrong' that he may have scorned to take advantage of a good legal title and may have preferred to masquerade as a robber or a bandit and to drive away the officers of the Court in that character. It is not a likely story. But would such conduct, were it conceivable, have profited him? Entering into possession and having a lawful title to enter, he could not divest himself of that title by pretending that he had no title at all. His title must have enured for the benefit of his co-proprietors. The principle recognized by Wood, V. C., in Thomas v. Thomas (9) holds good: 'Possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title.'"

It will thus be seen that the authority is overwhelming in support of the view that the physical possession of one co-owner is presumably not adverse to others not in physical possession. We find nothing against this rule in Gangadhar v. Parashram (10) or in Amrita Raji Row v. Shridhar Narayan (11). In particular cases ouster may be presumed from long possession; but in this connection the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the above case at page 227, are instructive. A very strong case of presumptive ouster would have to be made out. It is not so here.

DINA V. BISHAMBHAR SINGH.

Then, as to the more particular case of the exclusive possession by a lambardar in the Central Provinces of an agricultural village belonging to himself and other co-sharers, we have a series of rulings of this Court with which it seems impossible to reconcile the dictum of Ismay, J. C., in Sheodayal Singh v. Bhagirath Singh (1). In Daryasingh v. Mukundsingh (12), it was laid down that in an undivided village the lambardar is the agent of the co-sharers for the management of the estate according to the ordinary custom. In Sheoba v. Simaria (13), it was ruled that the possession of the lambardar cannot be said to be adverse to the recorded co-sharers merely because he pays them no share of the profits, nor would such non-payment amount to an ouster; and further, that the burden of proving that a suit for possession by the co-sharers was within time would not lie on them. In Ramratna v. Hira (14), it was taken to be an established proposition that a lambardar is the agent of the co-sharers for village management. The same assumption governed the decision in Sitaram v. Arjun (15). In Gopal v. Govind (16), Ismay, J. C., ruled that anything which the landlord is required or authorised to do under the Tenancy Act must be done by the whole proprietary body or by an agent acting on their behalf, and remarked, at page 114: "Ordinarily the lambardar as the agent of the co-sharers for the management of the village would be the person whose consent is necessary and sufficient," the remark having reference to a landlord's consent to the transfer of a tenant right. In Daud Khan v. Govinda (2), Skinner, A. J. C., considered that the remarks of Ismay J. C., in Sheodayal Singh v. Bhagirath Singh (1) were to a great extent obiter, and open to reconsideration. In Murlidhar v. Jagannath (17), Mitra, A. J. C., described the lambardar as the customary agent of the proprietary body. Finally, in Huijnath v. Raghunath (18), Hallifax, A. J. C., pronounced that in the case of a lambardar there is a presumption, until the contrary is shown, that he has been appointed as an agent to represent the whole proprietary body of a village in the management of the village. Apparently, however, in both the cases last above quoted, the dictum in Sheodayal Singh v. Bhagirath Singh (1) was overlooked, as there is no mention of that case in either decision.

For the above reasons, we respectfully dissent from the general propositions set out in the placitum of Sheodayal Singh v. Bhagirath Singh (1) and hold that it has been correctly held in the present case that the possession of the defendant over the sir and khudkasht lands, though exclusive and unaccompanied by any proved payment of profits to the plaintiffs or their predecessors as co-sharers, was not, prima facie, adverse: and no express ouster has been pleaded or proved to rebut the presumption that such possession was one on behalf of the whole proprietary body.

It was argued before us that the sales, by which Dadu Gulab Singh became the owner of the shares he claims to have partitioned, do not expressly transfer the right to cultivate the sir land, and that as to such land, at least, the defendant has become an ex-proprietary tenant. This is not merely inaccurate but absurd. The deeds expressly provide that the vendors shall take the standing crops and then give up cultivating occupancy to the vendee. But if they had not done so, the Tenancy Act of 1883 would have conferred an ex-proprietary tenure, not on the defendant, but upon the vendors themselves. It does not lie with the defendant who is only a co-sharer of the vendors, to claim that the statutory tenancy enures for his benefit.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

In cases of remissions made by the Manager appointed by the Court of Wards but not included in those specified in rule 58 of the rules framed by the Court of Wards under the Court of Wards Act, it is for the party relying upon the remissions to prove that the Court of Wards had specially authorized the Manager to grant them. [p. 468, col. 2; p. 469, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ganjam, in Original Suit No. 69 of 1913.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—This was a suit for rent due under a muchilika of the 3rd November 1908, executed to the late Raja of Kallikota by the defendant; and in addition to the arrears of rent claimed, as to which there is no dispute, a claim was also made in respect of interest, which was made payable under the instrument, at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum on the arrears.

The defendant's case with regard to interest was that he had had a meeting with the Tahsildar and the Manager in November 1911, that he had pointed out that he was quite unable to realise any rent due to him from the ryots, that it would be a great hardship to him to pay interest and that the Manager agreed to remit interest up to date; and in conformity with it, he (defendant) produced Exhibit III in which an account is drawn up giving him credit for a sum of Rs. 10 which he then paid. In that account, the ten rupees is divided up and credited bit by bit against the various instalments due; and the balance is brought down to Rs. 3,789-4-5. It is clear that that account does not include any interest at all. In view of that document, and of the evidence of the defendants and the admissions of the Tahsildar in his evidence, I think that a remission of interest was made; and I do not accept the Tahsildar's statement to the contrary. Unfortunately, the defendant had to do more than this. Besides showing that the Manager had remitted interest, he had also to show that he had authority to do so. The case is put in this way for the appellant. This was not a mere remission, this was an agreement; and the consideration moving from the defendant was that he agreed to assign the decrees he had got or might get in the future against the ryots. And if I thought that that agreement had been proved, I would have hesitated long before holding that that was not a matter within the authority of the Manager of an estate like this. However, I am satisfied by the evidence that there was nothing to connect the agreement to remit interest with the promise, if there was any, to transfer the judgments against the ryots. And that being so, the thing stands as a mere remission without any consideration. Of the rules relating to the Court of Wards, rule 58 specifically limits the instances where Collectors are empowered to remit debts due to the estates. They include matters erroneously included in rent accounts, and also irrecoverable rents and debts due either in cash or in grain, for the recovery of which all possible processes have been exhausted; and in any case, the limit is to sums under Rs. 100. I cannot suppose that the Manager had greater authority in those matters than the Collector and on the materials before me, I think it is impossible to hold that the Manager in this case had the authority to do what he has done. This Court like the lower Court has suffered very much from the meagre materials put before it and from the entire absence of any sort of guidance as to what principles are to help us in determining how this question of authority is to be decided. There must be plenty of materials to assist the Court as to what the actual rights and duties of a Manager are. We are left without any such instructions and on such materials as are available to me, I think the appeal fails. But in view of the fact that no suggestion is made, as far as I can see, that this is no other than a perfectly honest claim, and in view of the fact that I believe that the Manager in fact agreed to the remission of interest, I think it just to allow no costs in either Court.

By some error, the decree has awarded to the plaintiff compound interest on the amounts of rent due. There was no provision whatever for that in the instrument and the decree must be amended by awarding simple interest on the total rent due, amounting to Rs. 3,800, at 12 per cent. up to the date of judgment and then the amount will be consolidated and interest calculated at 6 per cent. on that.

SKINIVASA AITANGAR, J.—I agree. The defendant who pleaded that the plaintiff remitted the interest was bound to show that that remission was authorised by the Court of Wards. The defendant was dealing with the Manager appointed by the Court of Wards, who were guardians of the minor's estates; and I think it was his duty to show that the Manager was authorised to give that remission. In the absence of any such proof, although I agree that the Manager did remit the interest, he is not proved to have any such authority; and the rule referred to by my learned brother seems to suggest that the Manager could not have any such authority.

Suit for declaration—Non-proprietors, living in village on sufferance—Wajib-ul-arz recording exclusive right of proprietary body to refuse of village, whether binding on non-proprietors.

The non-proprietary body of the village of Nizamabad brought a suit for a declaration that the refuse and sweepings of the village were not the exclusive property of the defendants, the proprietary body, but that the plaintiffs had a right to dispose of and, if necessary, to sell the sweepings and refuse of their own houses:

Held, that as the non-proprietors lived in the village on sufferance on sites belonging to the proprietary body, the provision of the wajib-ul-arz specifying that all refuse from their houses should be the perquisite of the proprietary body was not inequitable and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the declaration sought for. [p. 470, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge of the Gujranwala Division, dated the 7th of January 1914.

Mr. Gokul Chand Narang, for the Appellants.

Mr. Abdul Rashid and Sheikh Gulab Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case are members of the non-proprietary body of Nizamabad, and they came into Court to secure a declaration that the refuse and sweepings of the village were not the exclusive property of the defendants, the proprietary body, but that the plaintiffs had a right to dispose of and, if necessary, to sell the sweepings and refuse of their own houses. The Courts below have agreed in dismissing the plaintiffs' claim and the plaintiffs have come up here on second appeal.

It has been found by the Courts below that, according to the entries in the wajib-ul-arz of 1868 which are repeated in the wajib-ul-arz of 1891-92, the refuse of the village is the exclusive property of the proprietors. The learned Counsel for the appellants contends that the non-proprietary body are not bound by the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz, but further he argues that even if the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz were binding on the plaintiffs years ago, is it equitable that they should continue to be operative at the present day when conditions have radically changed? He explains that the present litigation has been brought about by reforms in sanitation introduced by the Local District Board. Formerly one sweeper was entertained by the proprietors and he was responsible for the cleansing of the whole village; recently, however, the District Board decided that the sanitary condition of the village must be improved and it has imposed a tax upon the whole of the inhabitants of the village proprietors and non-proprietors—in order to defray the cost of entertainment of three sweepers. It is consequently urged that the manure of the village was conceded to the proprietary body in compensation for their outlay on the entertainment of one sweeper; and that inasmuch as the non-proprietors as well as the proprietors are called upon by the District Board to pay for the entertainment of three sweepers, the non-proprietors now receive no consideration for the surrender of the refuse from their houses. It is urged, therefore, that the raison d'être for the provisions set forth in the wajib-ul-arz no longer exists.

To this argument we are unable to attach any weight. The non-proprietors dwell in the village on sites which are the property of the proprietary body; non-proprietors dwell in the village on sufferance and one of the conditions of their residence in the village is that all the refuse from their houses shall be the perquisite of the proprietary body. Their residence in the village, and not the fact that the proprietary body had entertained a sweeper for the cleansing of the village, was the reason for their surrender of their rights in the refuse.

Though it is now asserted that the present contest has arisen from the action of the District Board, we notice that in 1891-92, when no such action on the part of the District Board was expected, the present plaintiffs objected to these provisions of the wajib-ul-arz. If the plaintiffs have now to pay a higher price for the cleansing of the village, they also enjoy the benefits of superior cleanliness. The fact that the proprietors have a right to all the manure from the village, might well have been represented to the District Board authorities with reference to the incidence of the taxation imposed, but with that aspect of the case we have no concern.

In our opinion, the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz are clear and they do not appear to be inequitable. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Where ex-proprietary occupancy rights accrue to a malguzar under sub-section (1) of section 69 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, the provisions of exception (c) of the section do not cease to have effect and an ordinary tenant is still liable to be evicted by the ex-proprietary occupancy tenant under the provisions of the Act. [p. 472, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Balaghat, dated the 7th May 1913, confirming that of the Munsif, Balaghat, dated the 30th November 1912.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. B. Dadabhoy, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to eject the respondent from a field, brought by the appellant, who is the ex-proprietary occupancy tenant of the field. The plaint stated merely that the plaintiff was the occupancy tenant and the defendant the sub-tenant, and that the cause of action for ejectment was the defendant's failure to comply with the notice that he should quit at the end of the agricultural year 1910-1911. From the further pleadings, it appeared that the field was a sir field, which had been leased to the defendant while the plaintiff was the malguzar; when the plaintiff transferred his proprietary rights to a third party, he became the occupancy tenant of the field by virtue of section 45 of the Tenancy Act. The plaintiff pleaded that the defendant had been a tenant of the sir land from year to year, and had by operation of law become a sub-tenant when the plaintiff became the occupancy tenant. The defendant pleaded that the field had been leased out to him in perpetuity by the plaintiff's father 18 years ago, and that he was, therefore, not liable to ejectment. The Munsif found that the field was recorded as the sir field of the plaintiff and that the defendant was recorded as the sub-tenant. The suit was dismissed on the grounds that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the lease was from year to year, and that the defendant had been in possession for over 12 years.

It is to be noted that the suit was first filed in the Court of a Revenue Officer, the Additional Judge to the Court of the Sub-ordinate Judge, and that a former District Judge on appeal held that the suit was not triable by that officer, and returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. This order was not appealed against.

Against the decree of the Munsif dismissing the suit, the plaintiff appealed on various grounds, one of which was that the Munsif erred in holding that the land in dispute was sir.

The material portion of the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge runs as follows:—

"The lower Court dismissed the suit on grounds of its own, which are not quite intelligible to me. Hence the plaintiff appealed urging several reasons for doing so.

"On the facts stated, however, the plaintiff has no case. When he was the proprietor, the defendant was the ordinary tenant of the land in dispute. Then, under section 69 of the Tenancy Act, he could be evicted on the ground that the holding entirely consisted of 'sir' land. The land, however, has since lost its character as sir. Now this plea, viz., that the holding consists of sir land, cannot be available to the plaintiff. Section 45 (5) of the Tenancy Act expressly provides that accrual of occupancy rights shall not affect the rights of ordinary tenants. The defendant still remains the ordinary tenant. He cannot, therefore, be evicted otherwise than under the provisions of sections 52 and 66 of the Tenancy Act.

"It is needless now to review the reasons set forth by the appellant in his memorandum."

In brief, the Additional District Judge has dismissed the appeal solely on the ground that on a malguzar becoming the ex-proprietary occupancy tenant of sir land, the land, as between such occupancy tenant and the former ordinary tenant of the sir land, loses its character as sir, and the ordinary tenant of the sir becomes an ordinary tenant without the special disabilities attaching to a tenant of sir under section 69 (c) of the Tenancy Act.

In appeal, the learned Counsel for the appellant-plaintiff argues, firstly, that on the plaintiff becoming occupancy tenant the defendant became a sub-tenant, and, therefore, liable to eviction at the end of the agricultural year by reason of the proviso to section 60 of the Tenancy Act, and secondly, that, if he does not become a sub-tenant, he is liable to eviction if the holding consists entirely of sir, under section 69 (c) of the Act.

I am unable to accede to the first proposition. Sub-section (5) of section 45 enacts that the accrual of occupancy rights shall not affect the rights of an ordinary tenant holding any part of the sir land at the time of such accrual. The rights of a sub-tenant are certainly less than those of an ordinary tenant, so that it is evident that such accrual cannot transform the rights of an ordinary tenant into those of a sub-tenant. The learned Counsel argues that the enumeration of tenancy rights mentioned in the Tenancy Act is exhaustive, that there can be two tenants of the same holding only when one of them is sub-tenant; and that there cannot be an occupancy tenant and ordinary tenants of the same land. This no doubt is the ordinary rule. But sub-section (5) of section 45 shows that the occupancy rights in sir land of the original proprietor, which section 45 is designed to protect, are compatible with the existence of ordinary tenants on the same land. The plea that the defendant has become a sub-tenant fails.

The next question is whether the Additional District Judge was right in holding that on the accrual of ex-proprietary occupancy rights, the land ceased to be sir land. In Dhondba v. Vishwanath (1) Ismay, J. C., expressed the opinion that "sir land which has lost its character as such under the provisions of section 45 of the Tenancy Act, will no doubt cease to be sir land on the expiry of the Settlement then current because, by reason of section 69 of the Land Revenue Act, it will no longer be recorded as sir land, but there is no apparent reason for holding that it ceases to be sir land at an earlier date." This opinion which, though given obiter, carries great weight was in reference to a suit between the new proprietor and the ex-proprietary occupancy tenant. It appears to me that this view applies with even greater force as between the occupancy tenant and the former ordinary tenant. With the question as to how the Settlement Officer shall deal with the respective rights of the occupancy and ordinary tenants, we are not now concerned. But until the Settlement, it would seem that sub-section (5) of section 45 of the Tenancy Act must be read as meaning that the relations between the former landlord and the ordinary tenant of sir land shall remain unchanged. The sub-section says that the rights of an ordinary tenant of sir land shall not be affected. As they cannot be affected for the worse by his becoming a sub-tenant, so they cannot be affected for the better by exception (c) of section 69 becoming inapplicable to him. Any other interpretation would result in the ordinary tenant of sir being put in a better position as against his landlord by a provision of law enacted for the purpose of protecting that landlord.

For these reasons I am of opinion that on the accrual of occupancy rights, the provisions of exception (c) of section 69 of the Tenancy Act do not cease to have effect.

It is argued for the respondent that the appellant did not sue to evict the respondent on the ground that the holding consisted entirely of sir land. For the appellant, reliance is placed on the ruling in Dulichand Chaudhri v. Lallah Kurmi (2), that the status of the defendant constitutes no part of the cause of action. With this question I am not concerned in this second appeal. The learned Additional District Judge decided the case without reference to the pleadings, on the sole ground that exception (c) of section 69 of the Tenancy Act can have no application when occupancy rights have accrued under sub-section (1) of section 69 of the Act. As I hold that this is not a correct view of the law, I remand the appeal for further trial according to law. A certificate for refund of Court-fees will be granted; other costs in this Court will follow the event.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 60, ejectment proceedings under—Proceedings declared null and void—Tenant, if trespasser—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Second application under s. 60, if maintainable.

A zemindar served upon his tenant a notice of ejectment under section 55 of the Oudh Rent Act and subsequently applied for assistance to eject under section 60 which was given, but the tenant did not give up possession. The tenant was then criminally prosecuted, when he set up the defence that he was never legally ejected and that there had been such irregularities in the action taken under section 60, that he was justified in treating the whole proceedings as null and void. This defence was allowed. The zemindar put in another application seeking assistance to eject under section 60. The Court below held that the position of the tenant was that of a trespasser and the zemindar's remedy was in the Civil Court.

Held, that the tenant never having been legally ejected, he was not a trespasser and the previous proceedings having been found to be null and void, a fresh application under section 60 was maintainable. [p. 473, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Fyzabad Division, dated the 3rd April 1914, confirming that of the Assistant Collector of Sultanpur District, in a case of assistance to eject.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—(February 5th, 1915)—I am unable to agree with the Commissioner in this case. It appears to have been decided at the criminal trial that there had been such material irregularities in giving appellant possession upon his first application under section 60 that respondent was justified in treating the whole proceedings as null and void and retaining possession, and that he was not thereby guilty of any contempt of Court, and was in the position of never having been legally ejected. Under such circumstances, I cannot see that he was a trespasser, subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil, and not of the Revenue, Courts.

The whole of the previous proceedings under section 60 being treated as null and void, I can see no reason why appellant should not be allowed to take fresh action under that section, as it is not alleged that respondent has been authorised by appellant in writing to continue to occupy the land.

I would set aside the orders of the lower Courts and order that respondent be ejected and pay all costs of these proceedings.

This order will also govern Nos. 48, 49 and 50.

HOLMS, S. M.—I may note, to begin with, that when I decided this case as Commissioner I had not the benefit of seeing the record of the criminal trial, as neither party had it summoned before me.

The Assistant Collector in the present suit says that he did not mean in his order in the criminal trial to imply that the landholder was not given possession, but only that "there appeared to be irregularities in the mode of taking and giving possession". In his decision in the criminal case, he says:—"The evidence of the Naib-Tahsildar throws a great deal of doubt on the legal correctness of the execution of the order of ejectment on the 29th June 1912;" but he acquitted the accused on the ground that there was no intention to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy, apparently holding that, because negotiations for a compromise were going on, the accused had acted as he did. I have endeavoured to ascertain what were the irregularities in giving possession on the first application under section 60 which are referred to, but the Naib-Tahsildar's report of the 22nd August 1912 is vague and does not mention precisely what the irregularities were. Had this been all, I would have hesitated to agree with my colleagues. I find, however, in the judgment of the 24th September 1912 in the criminal case that the present respondent said that no ejectment took place. As then he took up the position that he had never been legally ejected, I agree with the view taken that the whole of the previous proceedings under section 60 should be treated as void and that fresh action should be taken under that section. I agree with the order proposed.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's assignor executed a deed of mortgage in favour of the defendant on the 17th August 1898. It was a simple mortgage-bond. Six years after, in November 1904, a document which is styled as logia patram was executed by the mortgagor to the mortgagee. The terms of the document are that the defendant should be in possession for five years under it and credit the rent fixed towards the interest due under the mortgage of 1898 and that if, after the five years are over, the defendant continues in possession of the property, he should credit the rent towards the interest on the mortgage-debt. I have no doubt that this document is a lease. The fact that it is for five years and the other circumstance that provision has been made for holding over, make that position clear. The rent is fixed: only the lessee is directed to apply the amount for the interest due under the mortgage document. It was contended before me that this lease-deed supersedes the original mortgage: or at least the mortgage and the lease read together constitute a usufructuary mortgage. I am unable to accept the contention. Six years after the original deed, this document was executed and consequently the decision in Sukari Datta v. Ainuddy (1) has no application to this case. The two transactions must be deemed to be independent of each other and, therefore, the Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that until redemption, the amounts due under the lease deed, Exhibit A, ought to be taken into account. Moreover, when the plaintiff applied after the mortgage decree that the amounts due to him as rent should be credited towards the amount of the mortgage-decree, the defendant objected and said that he was only a lessee. The Court executing the decree upheld the contention and directed the plaintiff to file a separate suit for the amount due under Exhibit A. This decision is binding upon the parties and it is not open now to the defendant to plead that the plaintiff should have appealed against that decision of the executing Court. The decisions quoted by the Subordinate Judge related to a case of usufructuary mortgage and have no bearing on the construction of these two documents.

It is not disputed before me that if the defendant is regarded as a lessee, the assignment of the amount of rent due from him will not be obnoxious to section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. The rent is undoubtedly a debt and it is included in the definition of the term "choses in action" and consequently there can be no objection to the assignment of the amount due under Exhibit A. The decision in Kocharla Seetamma v. Pillala Venkataramanayya (2), relied upon by the Subordinate Judge, related to the amount of mesne profits assigned. The definition of the term 'mesne profits' pre-supposes that the person liable to pay it, is a trespasser and consequently it being a claim in tort, is not assignable under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act.

For the reasons, I cannot uphold the decree of the Subordinate Judge. I reverse his decision and send the case back to him for ascertaining the amount due to the plaintiff and to pass a fresh decree. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed; Case sent back.

Civil revision against the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Nagpur, dated the 26th September 1914.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. Lobo, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant for revision sued the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company on the 27th April 1914 for compensation in respect of a consignment of grease booked on the 3rd January 1913 from Belanganj (Agra) to Nagpur at owner's risk. The plaint alleged that the cause of action arose on or before the 26th January 1913 and that the Company was liable for non-delivery of the consignment, inasmuch as its employees had been guilty of wilful neglect not covered by the risk-note taken from the consignor under sub-section (2) (b), section 72, of the Indian Railways Act, 1890. The plaintiff admitted having been offered 31 tins, but pleaded that of these 28 contained castor-oil while three containing grease, were not part of the consignment in question.

The Company pleaded that the suit was barred under Article 31 of the Limitation Schedule and that the risk-note protected it from liability. It was further alleged for the defence that 24 out of the 31 tins offered to the plaintiff contained grease. As to the remaining 7, the written statement is not clear, but the suggestion seems to be that they too formed part of the consignment, the Company having accepted the tins as "said to contain grease."

The following issues were framed on the written pleadings, no oral statements by the parties or their Pleaders being recorded:—

- (1) Is the present claim time-barred?
- (2) Whether the plaintiff has purchased the goods consigned as alleged by him?
- (3) Whether the 31 tins consigned contained grease and whether the tins were shown to and accepted as such by the defendant's servants at Belanganj?

(4) Does the Railway Receipt passed to the consignor, contain the words "said to contain grease?" If so, whether these words absolve the defendant Company from liability to the plaintiff?

(5) Does the fact of the original consignor having executed a risk-note in Form B absolutely absolve the defendant from all liability as carrier?

(6) Did the defendant wrongfully refuse to accept delivery of 31 tins out of which only three contained grease?

The parties were not asked to adduce any oral evidence. Arguments were heard on the 1st and 5th issues only and the suit was then dismissed, the Judge holding the claim to be time-barred under Article 31 of the Limitation Schedule and the Company to be free from liability by virtue of the risk-note. The document thus relied on, was not produced in the Small Cause Court, but has been put in here: it is admittedly not in the form now current, which will be found reproduced on page 181, Part I, Gazette of India, 1907, in Notification No. 1851, dated the 27th February 1907.

It is contended here "on the plaintiff's behalf that Article 115, not Article 31, of the Limitation Schedule applies to the facts alleged by him. The former relates to suits "for compensation for the breach of any contract, express or implied, not in writing registered and not herein specially provided for," and the argument for the applicant is that by reason of the risk-note, the defendant Company ceased to be a common carrier.

Authority for the applicant's contention exists in British India Steam Navigation Company v. Hajee Mahomed Esack & Co. (1), Kalu Ram Maigraj v. Madras Railway Company (2), Mohansing Chawan v. Conder (3) and Danmull v. British India Steam Navigation Company (4). But the Madras and Calcutta decisions were dissented from in Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company

(2) 3 M. 240.

(3) 7 B. 478.

(4) 12 C. 477.

KISHEN SINGH v. BHAGWAN DAS.

v. Raisett Chandmull (5), and subsequently to all these, Article 31 of the Schedule in the Limitation Act of 1877 was amended by the Carriers Act, 1899, which added thereto the words "non-delivery of, or" next before the word 'delay' and reduced the period of limitation from two years to one year. Since that amendment, it has been held by Fulton and Starling, JJ., in Haji Ajam Goolam Hoosein v. Bombay and Persia Steam Navigation Company (6) that Article 31, not Article 115, applies to a suit against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of goods. This decision was followed by a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in Moti Ram v. East Indian Railway Company (7). A similar view was taken in Indian General Navigation and Railway Company v. Nanda Lal Banik (8) and in Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company v. Ganpat Rai (9).

The theory that a common carrier ceases to fill that character if he enters into a special contract limiting his liability, is not supported by any authority. Both the Carriers Act, 1865, and the Indian Railways Act, 1890, expressly contemplate such limitations, and in neither do I find any indication that making a special contract involves the change of status contended for. Moreover, the wording of Article 31, Limitation Schedule, is perfectly general and I can see no reason why its application should be restricted to persons who carry in the course of business as 'common' carriers. I would also observe that the definition of a "common carrier" in section 2 of the Carriers Act, 1865, is framed without reference to the extent of his liability.

The plaintiff's case, as put in the Small Cause Court, is clearly one of non-delivery in respect of the entire consignment sent from Belanganj. There was no suggestion by either side that the 31 tins or any of them were lost. The District Traffic Manager's letter of the 5th May 1913, to which I am referred by the applicant's Counsel, speaks of a 'shortage' extending to 7 tins and insists that 24 tins reached Nagpur and should be taken over by the consignee: it contains nothing to indicate what had happened to the 7 tins not at Nagpur. In these circumstances, there is no room for the plea, now taken for the first time, that the claim falls under Article 30 of the Limitation Schedule.

It was urged finally that if Article 31 is to be applied, the case should be remanded for a finding as to when the consignment ought to have been delivered at Nagpur. In my opinion, no useful purpose could be served by a remand. The plaintiff himself described his cause of action as having arisen on the 26th January 1913, and it is certain that 23 days is an ample time for the transit between Belanganj and Nagpur. The expression "when the goods ought to be delivered" in the said Article is identical with that used in Article 51, and there being no usage or time fixed, I think the time for delivery must be a reasonable time after the goods were made over to the Company at Agra: cf Boddonath Shah v. Lalunissa Bibee (10). The plaintiff allowed three months over and above one year from the 26th January 1913 to elapse before he instituted his suit.

Holding that Article 31 of the Limitation Schedule was rightly applied to the facts alleged by the plaintiff, I dismiss this application with costs. Rs. 15 are allowed as Legal Practitioner's fee in this Court.

Application dismissed.

KISHEN SINGH V. BHAGWAN DAS.

Caste Disabilities Removal Act of 1850 secures to individuals the same right in property after apostasy as they enjoyed before apostasy. Therefore, the right of a minor son to sue for a declaration that a certain mortgage-deed executed by his father should not affect his rights as member of the joint Hindu family after the death of his father is not taken away by the fact of the son having embraced Islam. [p. 477, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where it is shown that an alienor at the time of a mortgage executed by him was living a licentious life beyond his means, was indulging in drinking, prostitution and debauchery and was without any business or occupation on which the money might legitimately have been spent, it is unnecessary to prove that each item of the consideration money was spent on immoral purposes. Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated the 7th February 1914.

Messrs. Dhanraj Shah and Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Chaudhri Nabi Bakhsh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by a minor for a declaration that the mortgage-deed executed on the 21st of April 1910 by his father shall not affect his rights as a member of the joint Hindu family after the death of his father. The mortgagor's name is Jagan Nath, but he has recently been converted from Hinduism to the Muhammadan faith and has taken with him into the fold of Islam his minor son, the plaintiff.

The first Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs, but the learned Divisional Judge found that of the consideration money of the mortgage-deed, namely Rs. 3,000, only Rs. 545 were untainted by immorality, and he decreed plaintiff's relief subject to the condition that he should pay Rs. 545 before assuming possession.

In second appeal before us, the first contention raised is that inasmuch as the plaintiff has become an apostate from Hinduism, he cannot maintain the present suit under the cloak of Hindu Law. This same argument was advanced before the Court below, by which it was rejected on the ground that the plaintiff's rights as a Hindu are secured to him even after apostasy by Act XXI of 1850. We have consulted that Act and see no reason for differing from the conclusion of the learned Divisional Judge. It appears to us to be a clear object of that Act to secure after apostasy to individuals the same rights in property as they enjoyed before apostasy. This first contention is overruled.

It was next pointed out to us that of the consideration for the mortgage, Rs. 2,600 represented antecedent debts, whilst Rs. 400 were cash paid at the time of registration, and it is urged that the exposition of the law by the Divisional Judge in respect of the onus lying upon the plaintiff with regard to these two different categories, is incorrect. The learned Counsel for the appellant urges that under the Hindu Law, it is not the duty of the alienee to make reasonable enquiry as to the necessity for the cash taken from him at the time of the execution of the deed. He contends that even if such enquiry is not established, though the mortgage transaction cannot be maintained as a whole, nevertheless, the whole of the mortgage-debt is recoverable from the joint family property, provided the plaintiff is unable to show that the cash taken at the time of execution of the mortgage was taken for an immoral purpose. It is unnecessary for us to labour this point, for the matter was exhaustively considered in Bahadur Singh v. Des Raj (1), which concludes the matter.

Next, the learned Counsel took us through the evidence and indicated several items, which need not be detailed here, and urged that they too should have been passed by the Divisional Judge on the ground that they were just items and were untainted with immorality.

Into this question, however, we see no need to enter, for the Divisional Judge has found that the major part of the mortgage-money was spent on immoral objects. He holds that it is unnecessary to prove that each item of the consideration money was spent on immoral purposes, and he holds it sufficiently proved that the alienor at the time of the mortgage was living a licentious life beyond his means, was indulging in drinking, prostitution and debauchery, and was without any business or occupation upon which the money might legitimately have been spent. These are findings of fact and in second appeal, they cannot be challenged. In coming to these findings, he has relied upon Ram Nath v. Bulaqi Ram (2).

Appellant's Counsel has attempted to show that there are distinguishing features between the case decided in that judgment and the case now before us. Particularly does he lay stress on the fact that in the reported case, the alienor was engaged in no business. In the case before us, however, it has been found that the alienor, for some considerable time before the execution of the mortgage in dispute, had ceased to pay attention to the business he had inherited from his father. Consequently, the cases are for all practical purposes parallel. The findings of the learned Divisional Judge seem to us to be well considered and in any case they cannot be challenged in second appeal. No other point has been raised before us, and we dismiss the appeal, but in view of the fact that the suit is brought in collusion with the alienor, plaintiff's father, we leave the parties to bear their own costs in this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Where a mortgage decree is wrongly drafted as a money-decree, the proper course for an aggrieved party is to apply to the Court which passed the decree for its amendment in order to bring it in conformity with the judgment. An Appellate Court would not exercise that power when it would be inconvenient to do so. [p. 478, col. 2; p. 479, col. 1.]

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The decree-holder has misunderstood both his rights and remedies. The claim was for the assessment paid by the plaintiff, which ought to have been paid by the defendants. In the plaint, the prayer is that the properties in respect of which the revenue was paid, should be held liable.

We understand this prayer as claiming a mortgage-decree in effect. The decretal portion of the judgment gives a mortgage-decree and fixes a date within which the money should be paid. But in drafting the decree, a mistake was made by giving the decree-holder only a charge on the property. The decree-holder, instead of applying to have the decree amended, moved the Court to attach the property treating the decree in his favour as a money-decree. The District Munsif granted the prayer. In appeal, the District Judge, relying on Aubhoyessury Debee v. Gouri Sunkar Panday (1), held that the plaintiff's only remedy was to sue again to enforce the charge. Apparently, it was not argued before him that the decree was in effect a mortgage-decree. It is conceded by the learned Vakil for the respondents before us that it is open to a Court executing the decree to construe it in the light of the plaint and the judgment. In this view, we think that it was intended to give plaintiff a decree enabling him to bring the property to sale. The proper course was to have applied to the Court which passed the decree to bring the decree into conformity with the judgment. It was argued that we should allow this amendment ourselves. Supposing that we have the power, seeing that the decree was treated by the appellant as a money-decree and also having regard to the fact that the application for sale should be preceded by an application for a decree absolute, we do not think we can comply with the request of the appellant's Vakil. We feel no doubt that the Court of first instance will direct the amendment, which we think ought to be made in the decree. But as the plaintiff has misconceived his remedy, we must dismiss the Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal with costs; each party will bear his costs in the two Courts below.

VISHINDAS WADHURAM V. BOTOMAL DITOMAL.

Mr. Hindaram Mewaram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Tahiram Maniram, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—In the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen, plaintiff sued to recover the principal and interest due on a bond, dated the 6th December 1908. The suit was filed on the 6th December 1912. Both the lower Courts have held the suit to be time-barred and the only issue raised in this appeal is whether the suit was so barred.

The portions of the agreement with which we are now concerned are the following:—

"The agreement is that within 12 months from this day, we shall repay the principal amount to the lender. Interest on the above sum is fixed at the rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem from to-day until repayment, which we shall continue paying every month to the creditor. If we fail to pay interest in any month, then we shall pay the creditor two months' interest together. Should we fail to pay the principal sum on due date as stipulated above, or monthly interest, or two months' interest together to the creditor, then in that case the creditor aforesaid is at liberty to file a suit immediately and to recover the whole of the above amount with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem until satisfaction."

No interest was ever paid on the bond, and accordingly the creditor was at liberty to file a suit for the principal and interest on the 6th February 1909.

The document is not drafted in technical form, but a skilled conveyancer could embody its terms either in the form of a single bond (simplex obligatio) specifying the 6th February 1909 as the day for payment (in certain events), or in the form of a bond subject to a condition, or in the form of a contract to do a certain thing upon the happening of a specified contingency. But, whatever technical form might be given to the document, the practical result would, in every case, (in the events that happened) be the same—the principal and interest would become due and payable and the creditor would have a right of suit on the 6th February 1909. And, accordingly, whether we apply Article 65, or Article 66 or Article 68, the date from which the period of limitation began to run, was the 6th February 1909. As the suit was not filed until December 1912, it is prima facie time-barred.

In dealing with these Articles of the Limitation Act, it is well to remember that they are not separate, arbitrary rules, but are merely concrete examples of two general rules—(1) a plaintiff has three years, and only three years, within which he can file a suit to recover a simple debt; (2) the period commences from the date on which he has the right and is in a position to file a suit.

Article 75 is only another illustration to the general rules. In case of bonds and promissory notes payable by instalments, which provide that, if default be made in payment of one instalment, the whole shall be due, the period of limitation runs from the time when the first default is made, unless when the payee or obligee waives the benefit of the provision and then, when fresh default is made in respect of such waiver. Obviously, if there has been, in the legal sense, a waiver of the right to immediate payment, the right to file a suit does not exist and limitation cannot run.

It matters not by what form of words the right to immediate payment of the principal in default of payment of an instalment, or of interest, is conferred. Every creditor has an option to file a suit or not to file a suit and within certain limits to select his own time for filing it. The test whether or not the period of limitation begins to run is—has the payee or obligee a right to file a suit forthwith for the principal remaining due if he so chooses? The words used in the bond in suit, give to the plaintiff the creditor's ordinary option.

It would, of course, be quite easy to draw a bond in such form that the creditor would not get an immediate right to sue for the principal unless he elected to do so; thus: "In the event of interest being in arrears for two months, the creditor shall be at liberty to serve on the debtor a written notice calling on the debtor to forthwith pay the whole principal and interest then due and on such notice being served, the whole principal and interest shall become due."

But Mr. Hirdaram relies on certain reported cases which I will now discuss. In Ajudhia v. Kunjal (1), the bond was one payable by instalments with a provision that in default of the payment of any one instalment "it would be within the power of the creditor" to sue forthwith for the whole amount due under the bond. The suit was not for the whole principal, but merely for the instalments due up to date of suit. The Court relying on Maharaja of Benares v. Nand Ram (2) and Shankar Prasad v. Jalpa Prasad (3) held the suit not time-barred. The case came clearly within Article 75 and the question was whether or not the payee had waived the provision that the whole amount should become due in default of payment of an instalment. The learned Judges did not specifically find that there had been waiver, and the two decisions upon which they relied had reference to sets of facts entirely different from those with which the learned Judges were dealing.

In Maharaja of Benares v. Nand Ram (2), there was a bond payable by instalments, but the creditor had accepted payment of instalments after their due dates, and it was held that he had impliedly waived the provision under which the whole principal became due in default. A better foundation for such a ruling is suggested by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., in Kashiram v. Pandu (4).

Shankar Prasad's case (3) was one of construction of a decree. The passage relied on is as follows:—

"In the present case, it appears to us that the intention was that the decree-holder on the happening of any default might, if he wished, execute the decree for all the decretal money then unpaid, but that it was not the intention that on the happening of a default, the decree-holder should be bound to execute the decree once and for all. We consequently hold" etc.

Now, as no decree-holder is bound to execute his decree I am quite unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Judge. I prefer to follow the rule of construction laid down in Hemp v. Gar and [cited in Jethanand Topandas v. Lalama Sitalmal (5)]. If the judgment-creditor has the unconditional right to go to the execution department and take out a warrant, then it must be presumed that the decree has directed payment to be made within the meaning of Article 182 (7).

But, as pointed out by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Kashiram's case (4), a decree can be so framed as to make it clear that a judgment-creditor can take out execution for the whole balance in default only if he makes a positive election. That is to say, the order for immediate payment in default may be made subject to a condition precedent, and unless this condition is fulfilled, limitation will not begin to run.

In Narain Babu v. Gouri Pershad Bias (6), the facts were very similar to those of the present case. The Court held in a three lined judgment that Article 65 applied, and that the date specified for payment was the date fixed for payment of the principal in the event of the interest being regularly paid. The point that in the case of such bonds there are alternative dates specified for payment, was not taken or considered. The decision can only be justified on the presumption that the Court was of opinion that, on the construction of the bond, there was no implied covenant to repay the whole principal on failure to pay interest as agreed.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

PRATT, J. C.—I concur. Jenkins, C. J., in Kashiram v. Pandu (4) pointed out that instalment decrees should be so drawn up as to make it clear that the rights consequent in default depend upon a positive election by those in whose interests they are intended to be created. A similar provision could be made by appropriate words in bonds creating an obligation to pay successive sums of money. If the stipulation as to default does not come into operation unless and until the obligee elects to enforce it, then there is, as pointed out in himatrai Kashiram v. Wadero Sher Mahomed Khan (7), an alternative contract. But here there is no alternative contract for the phrase "is at liberty to file a suit for the whole amount" does not import an election. It merely implies that the whole amount is payable. It has been said that there is no distinction between the phrases "may be sued for" and "shall become due."

The case of Ajndhia v. Kunjal (1) was dissented from by this Court in the case already cited and does not seem to have been followed in subsequent cases of Amolak Chand v. Baij Nath (8).

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 14—Letting value, meaning of.

For the purposes of section 14 of the Tenancy Act, the letting value to be considered is the letting value at the time of the exchange, and not at the time of the suit for ejectment.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of Gorakhpur Division, dated the 25th June 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Basti District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—(January 22nd, 1915)—I think the Commissioner's order is a perfectly correct one. He has found that appellant and his brother cultivated 5 bighas 1 biswa 8 dhurs of land rented at Rs. 16-6 in 1308 and 1309 Fasli and then exchanged it for 5 bighas 1 biswa 14 dhurs of land rented at Rs. 15-12 in 1310 Fasli, most of the latter land being still in their possession. He has, therefore, held that they have acquired occupancy rights in the land which they have held continuously since 1310 Fasli. In this I think he was perfectly right. It is clear also that the land exchanged in 1310 Fasli was of approximately the same letting value as the land cultivated in 1309 Fasli.

Appellant's argument that the present letting value of the land should be compared with the rent of 1309 Fasli, is in my opinion an absurd one. What has to be considered is the letting value at the time of the exchange.

I uphold the Commissioner's order and dismiss this appeal with costs.

This case raises an interesting and important point. I should be glad to know if you agree with me.

HOLMS, S. M.—I held this back to find if the point had been dealt with in any previous decisions of the Board. It must have been, but none can be traced. I agree with my colleague, and have held so as the Commissioner of Meerut.

The 1st and 2nd defendants, who were members of a tarwad, agreed with the plaintiff to pay a certain remuneration for assisting them in a litigation concerning the tarwad property. The 1st defendant who thereafter succeeded to the management of the estate, compromised the suit. The plaintiff was not consulted with regard to the compromise, nor was the 2nd defendant a consenting party. The plaintiff, however, was informed not to do anything in connection with the suit. The suit was consequently dismissed. The plaintiff sued for the remuneration stipulated:

Where the tarwad is in its normal state, the karnavan alone is competent to pledge the tarwad credit but where the acts of the karnavan are such as to seriously endanger tarwad property the junior members have power to act on behalf of the tarwad. [p. 485, col. 2.]

If it is proved in a case where the junior members have pledged the tarwad property that the money was advanced and utilized for protecting the property from malversation or mismanagement, the lender has a claim on the tarwad for the loan. [p. 486 col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of North Malabar, in Original Suit No. 4 of 1913.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The only question in the case is, whether the agreement sued on is binding on the pandaram or family of the defendants. The question of ratification did not arise in the pleadings and the Subordinate Judge was not justified in making that one of the grounds of his decision. At the time the agreement was entered into, the defendants were in the position of junior members of a tarwad, who ordinarily have no power to enter into contracts binding on the tarwad. But though the karnavan has the exclusive right of management, he does not, it is now settled, hold only for himself, but for himself and all the other members of the tarwad and, therefore, to some extent in a fiduciary capacity and it is competent, at any rate, to the members next in seniority not only to sue for his removal, but also to sue for a declaration that an alienation made by him is not binding on the tarwad.

So, too, if the karnavan for the time being was submitting to an infringement by Government of the tarwad's right of property, it was in my opinion competent for the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as the next senior members of the tarwad to institute a suit, such as Original Suit No. 17 of 1903, in the District Court of North Malabar, the plaint in which is Exhibit U. Assuming for the moment, that the circumstances justified the institution of the suit, and assuming, though no express authority has been cited for the proposition, that as incidental to the right to institute the suit, the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 must be taken to have had authority to pledge the credit of the tarwad for the purpose of raising the sums necessary to carry on the litigation, it must, I think, be shown in any case that it was necessary to pledge the credit of the tarwad in the way in which it was pledged in this particular case, and I am not satisfied that the plaintiff has shown this with regard to Exhibit A, the document sued on. Exhibit A recites that the plaintiff had been Dewan or Manager under karars or agreements with two previous karnavans and had become entitled under those karars to special remuneration in the event of his getting back the Laccadive Islands, that the then karnavan was entering into arrangements to relinquish the islands to Government and to allow the Revenue Settlement to be introduced into the lands of the family—the inam land—contrary to the treaty with the East India Company of the year 1796. It is, therefore, stipulated that if the plaintiff succeeds in getting back the Laccadive Islands, he is to be paid an amount equal to 25 per cent. of the average annual gross income of the islands, and if he succeeds in getting the Settlement operations in the inam land cancelled, he is to receive from the family a remuneration of Rs. 8,000 and the necessary proceedings are to be taken at the cost of the defendants. The plaintiff's case is that the defendants were bound to go on with the suit to the end to give him a chance of earning this Rs. 8,000 and that they broke this contract with him by compromising the case and thereby entitled him to sue on a quantum meruit. Prickett v. Badger (1), Inchbald v. Western Cilyerry Coffee Plantation Company (2). These were not cases in which the defendants impliedly bound themselves, according to the case of the plaintiff, to institute, and go on with, a law suit in order to give the plaintiff a chance of earning his remuneration, even if it were otherwise in the interests of the parties to come to a settlement, and the legality of such an agreement may possibly be open to question. Apart altogether from this I am of opinion that the plaintiff has failed to show that the agreement was such as was binding on the family. The terms which were accepted by the 1st defendant after the institution of the suit were, as found by the Subordinate Judge, the same as those which had been accepted by his predecessor who had died before they could be carried out. It is not shown that the settlement was one which it was desirable to question in the interests of the family and still less is it shown that it was necessary and desirable in the interests of the family to enter into an agreement of this kind stipulating for exorbitant remuneration to be paid to a so-called law agent—unlicensed practitioner—in addition to the costs which would be otherwise incurred in connection with the suit. Assuming that the junior members of a tarwad have authority to bind the tarwad for the necessary costs of litigation of this nature, I think they had no authority to bind the family by the agreement Exhibit A. Relief is sought against the representative of the 1st defendant who is dead and against the second defendant personally. I would, therefore, reverse the decree and dismiss the suit with costs throughout. The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AITAR, J.—I entirely agree with my Lord.

The suit is for the recovery of the remuneration promised by the 1st and 2nd defendants to the plaintiff for assisting them in a litigation. The plaintiff was for some time the Dewan of the Arakal Rajah of Cannanore. Negotiations were proceeding between the Rajah and the Government of Madras regarding the Laccadive Islands and the introduction of Revenue Settlement in the estate owned by the swarupam. Some of the junior members of the family thought that the contemplated agreement with the Government would be detrimental to the interests of the swarupam. The senior anandaravan, the 1st defendant, and the present 2nd defendant who were entitled to succeed to the management of the Raj successively after the death of the then head of the swarupam, resolved upon instituting a suit against the Government for a declaration that the contemplated Settlement operations were illegal. They sought the help of the plaintiff, who was once a Deputy Collector in the British service and who was for some time the Dewan of the Rajah. The plaintiff agreed to assist them on certain conditions. Exhibit A was executed on the 3rd of May 1906 to the plaintiff fixing the remuneration at Rs. 8,000, "if his attempts become fruitful." Original Suit No. 17 of 1906 was instituted in the District Court of Tellicherry in October 1906 (Exhibit U), "for a declaration that the introduction of the ryotwari Revenue Settlement into the karar territory vested permanently in plaintiffs' house under the treaty of 1797 is illegal, unlawful and unauthorised and of no legal force and effect and consequently invalid and inoperative." The 1st defendant advanced the necessary funds for carrying on the litigation till June 1908. Meanwhile, the then head of the family died; and the present 1st defendant succeeded to the management of the estate. In November 1908 a compromise was entered into by the 1st defendant with the Government, and she retired from the suit.

The plaintiff was not consulted with regard to this compromise, nor was the 2nd defendant a consenting party to it; when the suit came on for final hearing the plaintiff did not appear, as he was informed by the 1st defendant on the 2nd of December 1908 that he "need not do anything in connection with the suit No. 17 of 1906 now pending in the District Court of Tellicherry" (Exhibit K-1). The suit was dismissed. The attempt of the 2nd defendant to resuscitate it in the District Court proved unsuccessful. An appeal was preferred to the High Court which was also rejected.

On these facts, the plaintiff claims that as the performance of his part of the contract was rendered impossible by the conduct of the 1st defendant, he is entitled to the full remuneration stipulated in Exhibit A. No personal decree is prayed against the 2nd defendant, as there is no allegation that there was any breach of contract on his part. It is the case for the plaintiff that the 2nd defendant was not expected to provide any funds for the litigation, as he was not then in a position to do so. The 1st defendant died after the institution of the suit, and the present 2nd defendant has succeeded to the Raj. The relief claimed against him is that he should as the present Manager of the swarupam pay the amount claimed from the estate.

The Subordinate Judge gave a decree for Rs. 2,500 on the principle of quantum meruit. The 2nd defendant has appealed. There is also a memorandum of objections by the plaintiff. The principal question argued in appeal by Mr. Rozario is, that the contract is not binding on the swarupam. Turner, C. J., and Muthusami Aiyar, J., in pointing out the essential difference between the position of the junior members of a joint Hindu family and that of the anandravans in a Malabar tarwad, say that the karnavan has larger powers than the Manager of a Hindu family in the management of the tarwad property. There is no doubt that under the Hindu Law as administered in this Presidency, the Manager alone can represent the family in transactions with strangers. In Mayne's Hindu Law edited by Sir C. Sankaran Nair, J., it is stated with reference to tarwad property that "it is vested in the head of the family not merely as agent or principal partner but almost as an absolute ruler." The original conception of the rights of the junior members that they have only "rights out of the property and not in it", requires qualification. The decision in Varanakot Narayanan Namburi v. Varanakot Narayanan Namburi (3), lays down that all the members of a tarwad have equal interests in the property and that the karnavan has no greater beneficial interest in it. In Moidin Kutti v. Krishnan (4), Muthusami Aiyar, J., summarises the powers possessed by the junior members of the tarwad and characterises them as individual rights. These are certainly not rights of representation. The right to question alienations, to sue to recover property from trespassers, to claim maintenance and to succeed to the karnavanship are all personal rights. Mr. Justice Kernan's view in the same case that the tarwad is a quasi corporation, does not advance the matter any further.

Mr. Madavan Nair who appeared for the plaintiff suggested that under the general principles of the law of contracts, 1st and 2nd defendants were entitled to represent the tarwad, as their object was to avert a danger which threatened the tarwad. He contended that the analogy of co-owners of property was more applicable to the members of a tarwad. Looking at the transaction as one entered into by two co-owners of property with a view to benefit the entire body of owners, there is no ground for holding that it would bind the others. In Freeman on Co-Tenancy, the rule of law regarding co-owners is thus stated: "As a general rule, no co-tenant has, by virtue of the relation of co-tenancy, any authority to bind his companion in interest by any contract, whether relating to the joint property or otherwise." In another place it is stated: "A pledge of the common property made by one of the co-tenants has no effect on the rights of the others, except to confer on the pledgee the right to retain possession to the extent of the pledger's interest, and no further." In a Malabar tarwad, unlike in a joint Hindu family, there can be no right to proceed against the share of the alienating member. It is, therefore, clear that under the law which governs the right of co-owners, any two of them are not competent to pledge the credit of the others.

But the position of the members of a tarwad differs in many respects from that of co-tenants. The decided cases already referred to lay down that the karnavan is alone competent to represent the tarwad in transactions with strangers. I think this rule requires some qualification. When the tarwad is in its normal state, the karnavan alone is competent to pledge the tarwad credit. But where the acts of the karnavan are such as to seriously endanger tarwad property, it seems to me that it would be legitimate to give the junior members power to act on behalf of the tarwad. These members cannot claim their separate shares by partition as in a joint Hindu family. The relationship of the karnavan towards the junior members is more like that of a trustee and cestui que trust or of guardian and wards. The decisions have recognised their right to sue to set aside improper alienations. As a corollary to this position, I think they should have the right of reimbursing themselves the expenses rightly incurred by them in protecting tarwad property. Outsiders who lend money to anandravans for the avowed object of preserving tarwad property, run the risk of losing their money if it is found that the purpose of the loan was unnecessary or not beneficial to the tarwad. But when it is proved that the money was advanced and utilised for protecting the property from malversation or mismanagement, the lender should have a claim on the tarwad for the loan.

But in this case I am not satisfied on the evidence on record that the plaintiff has established his right against the tarwad. There was no necessity for promising a large remuneration for a law agent. A recognition of such a right will not be in the interests of the swarupam. The payment of authorised legal practitioners and the other expenses incurred in filing and conducting a suit, would stand on a different footing. Further, the plaintiff has not proved that the apprehended danger was of such a character that the intervention of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was for the benefit of the swarupam. Although, therefore, I am not prepared to accept in its entirety the contention put forward by the learned Vakils for the appellant that the contract was beyond the powers of the 1st and 2nd defendants under all circumstances, I do not think that in the present case it has been shown that the defendants acted in the best interests of the swarupam.

Another contention of the learned Counsel for the respondent was that as the 1st defendant after becoming the Rajah continued the suit and made remittances, she must be deemed to have ratified the contract as karnav and it is, therefore, binding on the swarupam. No issue on the question of ratification has been raised and there are no materials for deciding that the 1st defendant, with knowledge of the obligations she was incurring as head of the family, ratified Exhibit A.

In the view that I have taken, the question of quantum meruit does not arise.

In the result, the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in both the Courts. The memorandum of objections will also be dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed; Suit dismissed.

Agra Tenancy Act II of 1901, ss. 11, 34—Tenant holding without consent of landlord—Presumption—Occupancy rights, acquisition of.

A person occupying land shall not be deemed to hold land within the meaning of section 11 of the Tenancy Act until he begins to pay rent therefor and in the absence of very strong evidence the presumption is that a tenant is holding without the consent of the landlord until he begins to pay rent.

Babu Sat Narain Prasad v. Ram Kumar, Selected Decision No. 3 of 1910, followed.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of Meerut Division, dated the 24th July 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Meerut District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

CAMPBELL, J. M. (March 18th, 1915)—I am unable to agree with the Commissioner in this case. I think that the presumption should be that a tenant is holding without the consent of his landholder until he begins to pay rent, unless he can produce very strong evidence in contradiction of this presumption. In this case there is no such strong rebutting evidence.

Section 34 of the Tenancy Act also seems to me quite clear, that a person occupying land shall not be deemed to hold land within the meaning of section 11 until he begins to pay rent therefor; and that this debars respondent from claiming occupancy rights, as he does not claim to have paid rent for more than 11 years. My reading of the section is supported by Babu Sat Narain Prasad v. Ram Kumar (1).

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—The suit lands in this case were part of the estate of one Yegnasamy, who died in 1863. His estate passed to the hands of his mother Subbalu, and in August 1863, she executed an agreement (Exhibit A) by which she gave 3/8ths of the estate to her mother-in-law Chellathammal, reserving 5/8ths for herself. In 1864 Chellathammal purported to sell 1/8th to plaintiff's father (Exhibit VII), 1/8th to Ramanatha Dikshitar (Exhibit VIII), and 1/8th to Subramania Sastri, but it has been found that the transfer was really a gift to the grandsons of her three daughters, i.e., plaintiff, Ramanatha Dikshitar and Subramania Sastri. On 5th June 1871, plaintiff and his father sold 1/8th share to Kuppusawmy Dikshitar (Exhibit I), and on the same day Ramanatha Dikshitar sold his share to the same man (Exhibit II). Subramania Sastri subsequently sold his share in 1909 under Exhibit V. Subbalu did not die until 1911 and now plaintiff sues as reversioner to Yegnasamy to recover his estate. Plaintiff does not claim the share sold by him under Exhibit I, and the only property in dispute in this appeal is the share given by Chellathammal to Ramanatha Dikshitar. Appellants (defendants Nos. 3 to 5 and the legal representatives of the fifth defendant) are the representatives in interest of Kuppusawmy Dikshitar, the vendee of the share under Exhibit II.

2. Plaintiff's claim has been allowed on the ground that the alienation by Subbalu to Chellathammal is not binding on him, as she could only convey her life-interest in the property.

In appeal, it is argued on three main grounds that the alienation is binding on plaintiff, i.e., (1) that plaintiff validated the alienation by giving his consent to it and is thus estopped from disputing it now, (2) that the question is res judicata, and (3) that the alienation was merely a family arrangement. Respondent's Vakil wished to argue that the alienation by Subbalu under Exhibit A purported to be an alienation of her woman's estate alone, but as the case had proceeded in both the lower Courts on the assumption that it was an alienation of the absolute interest and as the point was not raised in the pleadings, this question was not allowed to be raised in second appeal.

3. In arguing the appeal, Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar who appeared for the first and second appellants, devoted his attention chiefly to the first ground mentioned above. In a recent case before a Full Bench of this Court, Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangasami Gounden (1), the question of alienations by a widow and the consent of reversioners thereto was fully considered. After a consideration of the authorities referred to in his judgment, to which we have also been referred, Kumaraswami Sastri, J., deduced the following propositions:—(a) when the alienation is only of a part of the estate, the consent of the next presumptive reversioner is evidence of the necessity or propriety of the alienation, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the Court shall presume that the alienation was proper, (b) the consent of a reversioner will, if given bona fide and for consideration, estop and bind the reversioner so consenting, and (c) the assent has a double aspect, not merely raising a presumption, but also raising an estoppel against the person consenting even though he might not have received any consideration or benefit.

These propositions are not seriously disputed by Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri for respondent, and we see no reason why they should not be accepted as correct. The real question, therefore, for consideration is whether plaintiff did give his consent to the alienation by Subbalu for if he did, he cannot now go behind it and claim the suit property for himself. An objection is taken by respondent that this is a question of fact and cannot be gone into by us in second appeal. Apart from the facts that there is no very definite finding by the Subordinate Judge on this point, that he, relying on Arthanari Goundan v. Ramaswami Goundan (2), has held that a partial disposition in favour of the next reversioner is invalid and has not considered the effect of the ruling of the Privy Council in Bajrangi Singh v. Manakarnika Bakhsh Singh (3), that partial alienations are valid, we do not think that the question is one of pure fact. It is a question of what legal inference is to be drawn from certain facts [vide Beni Ram v.

Kundan Lal (4)] 'and this is certainly a point with which we can deal in second appeal.

4. In this case, the facts from which we have to draw an inference are as follows:—

In 1864, plaintiff's father accepted the absolute ownership of part of the widow's estate from Chellathammal under Exhibit VII, and plaintiff acquiesced in that by joining in the sale thereof to Kuppusawmy Dikshitar under Exhibit I, and says as plaintiff's witness No. 1 that he was personally aware of the alienation under Exhibit A, and must have known that the alienation was invalid unless made for proper causes. He was also present when Exhibit II, under which the property in dispute was sold, was executed. Then again in 1873, Kuppusawmy Dikshitar brought two suits, Original Suits Nos. 60 and 61 of 1873 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Shiyali, to recover the properties sold under Exhibits I and II. Plaintiff was a party to both suits and in both admitted that the suit property belonged to the respective vendors, i. e., himself and Ramanatha Dikshitar although in the suit against the latter, there was no reason why he should have made any such admission, so far as his interests in that suit were concerned. From these facts, it is clear that plaintiff all along treated the alienation under Exhibit A as valid, but it is contended that, even if so much be conceded, plaintiff did not intend thereby to bind his own interests as reversioner. Plaintiff has been examined as a witness, but gives us no help in arriving at a conclusion as to his intentions, beyond a false statement that he did not know whether Ramanath Dikshitar sold the suit property to Kuppusawmy Dikshitar. This statement is falsified by the judgments in the suits of 1873 (Exhibits III and IV). It must, therefore, be presumed that the plaintiff was not unaware that he was a presumptive reversioner, and must have intended the legal consequences of his acts. We must, therefore, hold, to adopt the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hari

Joint possession—Property belonging to shrine—Mujawars in possession as trustees—Rule of hotchpot, whether applicable.

The principle that one co-sharer who has joint property in his possession cannot seek a decree for joint possession of other property in the possession of a co-sharer-defendant unless and until he brings the property in his own possession into a hotchpot does not apply to a case where property belonging to a shrine is in the possession of mujawars as trustees. Bhagat. Gobind Das and Mr. W. C. Asquith, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are stated clearly and succinctly in the judgment of Rai Diwan Chand, Subordinate Judge, and the pleadings of the parties are also very accurately summarized therein. Plaintiffs and defendant are mujawars of the well-known shrine of Data Ganj Bakhsh in Lahore; and plaintiffs now claim joint possession of a baithak and certain shops, which belong to the shrine, and their share of the income that has accrued from the said property, all of which has been in possession of the defendant. The Subordinate Judge after an elaborate consideration of all the issues, some thirteen in number, granted plaintiffs a decree for joint possession of the property in question and for 57 shares of the income of the property, the rent of the baithak being assessed by him at Rs. 3 a month for the three years prior to suit. Defendant Muhammad Ali appealed to the Additional Divisional Judge, Lahore, who accepted the appeal and dismissed plaintiffs' suit on two grounds. In the first place, he held that plaintiffs as mujawars were merely attendants or servants of the shrine and as such not entitled to claim exclusive possession. Before proceeding, we might remark that, though the claim as laid in the plaint would suggest that plaintiffs were seeking exclusive possession of the property, it is well understood in the course of the trial that the suit was for joint possession, and, in point of fact, it was joint possession only that was decreed by the Subordinate Judge. The Additional Divisional Judge was, therefore, somewhat hard upon the plaintiffs in construing their plaint with such strictness and in overlooking the fact that the decree which was under appeal before him was one not for exclusive but for joint possession.

The second ground upon which the judgment of the lower Appellate Court was based was that, according to the compromise of the 18th of March 1905, the defendant had undertaken to surrender possession, not to the present plaintiffs, but to a modi or bursar of the institution, by name Muhammad Amin, and that it was consequently Muhammad Amin alone who could sue to enforce the compromise.

Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and we have heard arguments at some considerable length on their behalf and on behalf of the respondent. We do not find it necessary to decide whether it would be competent to the plaintiffs to enforce the compromise of 1905, though the strong inclination of our opinion is that plaintiffs would certainly be entitled to enforce it as a contract which was made between them and the defendant. Muhammad Amin was no party to that contract and there is considerable force in Mr. Shafi's argument that he was a mere agent appointed to act for both parties. We need not, however, labour the point, as it is now admitted that the plaintiffs as mujawars are clearly entitled to joint possession of the property in suit, and the only plea urged in opposition to the claim is that plaintiffs themselves are in possession of property belonging to the institution, to joint possession of which Muhammad Ali defendant is equally entitled with themselves and that unless and until they bring that property into a hotchpot, they cannot ask for a decree for joint possession against defendant. In our opinion, this contention cannot prevail.

In the first place, beyond a vague allegation of his own that plaintiffs have such property in their possession, there is nothing on the record to support defendant's statement; but assuming that there is such property in plaintiffs' possession, it will be open to defendant to sue plaintiffs for joint possession thereof whenever he is so advised. But in the meantime, this plea of his cannot affect plaintiffs' undoubted right to a decree for joint possession of the property in suit.

It was contended on the authority of certain cases, Rahman Chaudhuri v. Salama Chaudhuri (1), Phani Singh v. Nawab Singh (2), Watson and Co. v. Ram Chund Dutt (3), that plaintiffs were at most entitled to a decree declaratory of their right to joint possession and could not be granted a decree for actual joint possession, as that would be tantamount to a decree for the eviction of defendant. The decision of the Privy Council was upon an entirely different state of facts and is in no way relevant, and the other authorities cited refer to cases of co-sharers who are owners of property, the principle laid down being that one co-sharer who has joint property in his possession cannot seek a decree for joint possession of other property in the possession of a co-sharer-defendant unless and until he brings the property in his own possession into a hotchpot, and that the proper course in such cases is for a co-sharer to apply for partition. This principle obviously can have no application to a case like the present, where the mujawars are not owners of the property but merely trustees of it on behalf of the shrine which is in law the owner, and Ram Charan Rai v. Kauleshar Rai (4), Dillar Sardar v. Hosain Ali Bepari (5) and Sura Singh v. Sant Singh (6) are sufficient authorities for holding that a decree for joint possession can be granted and that it does not involve the eviction of defendant. We accordingly hold that plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for joint possession of the property in suit with the defendant.

The Additional Divisional Judge dismissed plaintiffs' suit on the preliminary ground that they have no locus standi and in the ordinary course of things, this appeal would have had to be remanded to his Court for decision on the merits. In the present case, however, the whole of the evidence is on the record and the two questions which alone remain to be dealt with, are very simple and can be disposed of by us without further protraction of this litigation.

The first point is that defendant is entitled

(1) A. W. N. (1901); 48

(2) 28 A. 161; A. W. N. (1905) 233.

(3) 18 C. 10 (P. C.); 17 I. A. 110.

ALAMELAMMALL v. SURAYAPRAKASAROYA.

ed to compensation for a shop which he alleges he has built upon part of the land in suit at his own expense. We find from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge (page 5, line 30) that the defendant admitted before him that the shop in question was built after the plans of 1891-1894 had been drawn out but prior to the suit for accounts in 1901. The compromise provides that defendant is to receive Rs. 500 as compensation for an a'ata built by him on the open space belonging to the shrine, and as there is no further provision for any compensation, it is only reasonable to suppose that this Rs. 500 was intended to cover everything including the cost of the shop; if not, then plaintiffs made no agreement to pay any compensation for this shop, and the parties must be taken to have agreed that no compensation was payable therefor.

Next, there is the question of the amount of rent realized by defendant in respect of the baithak. The Subordinate Judge allowed Rs. 3 per mensem for the three years prior to suit, and presumably relied for this purpose upon the evidence of Musammal Budhan, who has been the tenant of the baithak for several years past. Mr. Gobind Das asserted that defendant had been put to expenses for repairs, etc., and that these had not been allowed for. But as to this, it is only necessary to remark that no attempt was made by defendant to prove any such expenditure in these respects by him.

The result is that we accept the appeal and, setting aside the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge we restore that of the Subordinate Judge. Defendant Muhammad Ali must pay costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Messrs. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar and N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. V. V. Srinivas Aiyangar, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint in this suit alleges that the husband of the plaintiff died in 1911, possessed of certain properties and having made a Will appointing the defendant as his executor, who entered into possession and management of the properties immediately after the testator's death but has taken no steps to obtain Probate of the Will. It alleges various acts of mismanagement by the defendant and that the plaintiff is interested as the mother of the testator's son, who died subsequently to the testator and to whose interest the plaintiff has succeeded as heir. The prayer of the plaint is that the defendant may be directed to apply for Probate of the Will, that he may be ordered to account for the administration of the estate of the deceased and the moneys collected by him or that ought to have been collected by him but for his wilful default or negligence, and that an account may be taken of the estate and the same be duly administered under the orders of this Court.

It is stated that the defendant did apply for Probate and that the fiat of the Judge was obtained upon his application, but that the actual grant has not been issued through the failure of the defendant to pay the stamp duty leviable under the Court Fees Act, 1870. The Will is one to which the Probate and Administration Act and the Hindu Wills Act apply, and, therefore, the case is governed by section 187 of the Indian Succession Act, which applies to Wills of Hindus under the Hindu Wills Act. In the first place, I think that the fiat of the Judge upon the defendant's petition can only be read as an order that Probate shall issue to the petitioner upon his complying with the statutory provisions and the rules of the Court. One of the statutory provisions with which the petitioner must comply is that he must bring in the necessary stamps. Section 4 of the Court Fees Act directs that no document of the kind specified in the Schedules to the Act shall be received or furnished by any of the High Courts unless the prescribed fees have been paid.

The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Mungniram Maricari v Gursahai Nand (1) is strongly relied upon by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff as showing that the order of the Court is sufficient without an issue of the actual grant. But it is clear from the observations of their Lordships at page 357 that they were interpreting a particular Act—Act XL of 1858—which was passed prior to the Court Fees Act of 1870—and that they disregarded the latter Act in putting a construction upon the former. The decision may also be distinguished on the ground that in the present case, there has been no actual order for the issue of Probate; and also the point in that case was as to whether a minor had been properly represented or not and their Lordships held that he was, as a matter of fact, represented in the proceedings and they refused to treat them as invalid merely because the formal order had not been carried out. I do not intend to discuss the English cases which have been cited by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff. They relate to cases of executors de son tort in which the Court has evidently strained its powers in order to prevent misapplication of the assets of a testator. I do not think that it is useful to refer to cases decided under a totally different system from that which obtains in India and under Statutes different in wording.

The term "Probate" is defined in section 3 of the Probate and Administration Act as "the copy of a Will certified under the seal of a Court of competent jurisdiction, with a grant of administration to the estate of the testator," and section 187 of the Indian Succession Act provides that, "no right as executor or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless a Court of competent jurisdiction within the province shall have granted Probate of the Will under which the right is claimed, or shall have granted Letters of Administration under section 180." The words, I think, are perfectly plain, and the intention of the Legislature is clear that the party claiming an interest under a Will must prove the execution of the document and its terms by the particular procedure which has been laid down by the Legislature. Lakshamma v. Ratnamma (2) supports this construction. It is not sufficient if the actual document be produced in the suit and the plaintiff prove it in the way in which ordinary documents are proved; that is what the plaintiff apparently sought to do in this case to go into Court and to put the document in as an ordinary exhibit. The plaintiff claims as heir of a legatee, and is, therefore, under the section only in the position of legatee, and I hold that she must establish her title by production of the evidence required by the section, that is, a grant of Probate issued by a Court of competent jurisdiction. On this ground the suit fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Suit dismissed.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated the 16th March 1912.

Bhagat Govind Ram and Mr. Beni Parshad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Ganpat Rai and Hari Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Surjan Singh, a Sindhu Jat of village Khalra in the Kasur Tahsil of the Lahore District, had a son named Buta Singh by his first wife. On her death, he married a widow, who brought with her a son named Natha Singh. In 1915, after the death of Buta Singh, but in the presence of Buta Singh's son Chanan Singh, who was then a minor of some four years of age, Surjan Singh gifted 70 kanals 8 marlas of land to his step-son Natha Singh. Chanan Singh died shortly afterwards and in 1910, Surjan Singh executed a Will by which he bequeathed the whole of his remaining property amounting to 425 kanals 15 marlas of land to his step-son.

Surjan Singh being still alive, the plaintiffs, who are his collaterals in the 4th degree, have sued for a declaration that these alienations shall not affect their reversionary rights after the death of Surjan Singh.

The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge who relied largely on the ruling reported as Gagan & Singh v. Bulaka

Singh (1). On appeal, however, to the Divisional Judge, the suit was decreed. Natha Singh having obtained the necessary certificate, has now preferred a second appeal to this Court.

It was stated by Surjan Singh that Natha Singh is a Jat of the Sindhu got, but this allegation was denied and there is nothing to support it except the bare words of the alienor. We have ascertained that Natha Singh has inherited property from his father in his own village; and that being so, it would have been perfectly easy for him to prove by incontestable evidence that he belongs to Sindhu got if this were really the case. It must be taken then that he belongs to some other got.

The instances adduced by the defendant in support of his contention that a Sindhu Jat in the Kasur Tahsil is entitled by custom to make a gift or a Will in favour of a step-son belonging to a different got have been carefully examined by the Divisional Judge, who found that they were insufficient to discharge the onus of proof which lay heavily upon him. We have ourselves considered these instances in detail. With one exception, they are either extremely vague or insufficiently authenticated, and the remaining case was of a peculiar character. There a step-son was after objection allowed to succeed equally with sons, but the step-son had been adopted before the birth of his half brothers and had also in his favour a registered deed of gift which was 34 years old at the time when succession opened. It would be impossible to hold on the basis of the instances before us that the necessary custom has been established, especially when in the wajib-ul-arz of the village, it is laid down that step-sons have no rights even if documents have been executed in their favour; and Counsel for the appellant himself states that the same provision is to be found in the wajib-ul-araz of all other Sindhu villages in the Lahore District.

Similarly, in the riwaj-i-am of the District, it is stated that step-sons are not preferred to agnates and that they are not entitled even to maintenance. This riwai-i-am, it is true, was considered in Gagan Singh v. Bulaka Singh (1), the judgment on which the first Court relied. It was there held that among Sindhu Jats of the Chunian Tahsil, an appointment as heir of one who is not a member of that got, is valid by custom and that the person appointed may be a step-son whose father was not a Sindhu Jat. This ruling was, however, criticised somewhat severely in Natha Singh v. Sher Singh (2)—a case relating to Sindhu Jats of the Lahore Tahsil—in which it was held that the adoption of a daughter's son is not valid by custom; and it was pointed out that in the earlier case, the riwai-i-am had been held to be incorrect "on the general presumption believed to arise from the reported cases up to date—cases which cannot now be followed in view of the Full Bench ruling in Ralla v. Budha (3)."

We may ourselves remark that although in the earlier case, a very full enquiry had been made as to custom, the persons who supported it, had only been able to show two instances, one of which, reported as Albel Singh v. Vir Singh (4), related to Sindhu Jats of the Ferozepore District. The witnesses for the then plaintiff had roundly asserted that a Sindhu Jat could not adopt a person of a different got and appealed to the riwai-i-am.

There are, we find, numerous rulings such as Rattak Singh v. Mala Singh (5), Bura v. Man Singh (6), Fatteh Singh v. Suchela (7), Natha Singh v. Sher Singh (2) and Ishar Singh v. Lehna Singh (8), all of which indicate that the power of a Sindhu Jat to make alienations is very restricted. In Ishar Singh v. Lehna Singh (8)—a case of Sindhu Jats of the Tarn Taran Tahsil of Amritsar District—it was held that a proprietor could not transfer by Will even to collaterals in the presence of nearer collaterals. In Bura v. Man Singh (6)—a Ferozepore case—a gift to grandsons in the presence of a son was set aside, and in Rattan Singh v. Mala Singh (5)—a case relating to Sindhus of the Kasur Tahsil—a gift even to a nephew was disallowed.

There is, we think, no doubt that Gagan Singh v. Bulaka Singh (1), based as it was on the different view then obtaining with regard to the onus of proof in such cases, is no longer binding, and we have no hesitation in finding that the custom set up by the appellant in this case, has not been established.

The case of Natha Singh is doubtless a hard one, as although he was not adopted, he has lived practically all his life with his step-father who regards him with great affection. We ourselves tried to get the parties to compromise, but this the plaintiffs-respondents are unwilling to do. We, therefore, reluctantly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

KUNTHALAMMAL V. SURYAPRAKASAROYA MUDALIAR.

Messrs. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar and A. Durasami Aiyar, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. P. Sambandam and N. Chandra-sekhara Aiyar, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—One Dakshinamurthi Mudaliar was entitled to certain moneys in this Court under decree in Suit No. 45 of 1889. By an order in that suit, dated the 27th March 1893, certain moneys amounting to Rs. 4,056-12-3 were directed to be transferred by the Registrar to the Accountant-General for investment. These moneys represented certain jewels which were found to be part of the inheritance of Dakshinamurthi Mudaliar and not to have passed under the Will of his father. At the date of the decree, Dakshinamurthi Mudaliar was a minor, but having attained his majority he applied, in February 1904, for payment out of the funds in Court; and it appears from Exhibits H and H1, the certificate of funds issued by the Accountant-General, that his application was confined to the moneys specified in that certificate. Owing to some mistake on the part of the legal advisers of the plaintiff in that suit, the moneys in the hands of the Registrar of the Court were not transferred to the Accountant-General in pursuance of the order of the 27th March 1893, and were lost sight of when the application was made by the plaintiff for payment out to him.

This is clearly stated by the present 1st defendant in an affidavit filed by him in that suit on the 8th of August 1914, Exhibit C. In paragraph 8, he states: "It appears that the said sum of Rs. 4,056-12-3 which appears to have remained in the hands of the Registrar of this Honourable Court, was not known to exist and was consequently overlooked and I have now come to know that the said sum of Rs. 4,056-12-3 is standing to the credit of this suit". The amount was accordingly paid out of Court to the 1st defendant, who claimed it as the executor of the Will of Dakshinamurthi Mudaliar.

This Will is dated the 5th December 1905, and the testator died in the same month. The 1st defendant was appointed executor of the Will and has been administering the estate of the deceased, and this suit is brought by the widow of the deceased on behalf of herself and the other legatees under the

Will, for an account of the administration of the estate and for its administration under the orders of the Court. The question has arisen as to whether this sum of Rs. 4,000 and odd passed to the residuary legatees under the Will. The Will follows the form, which is very well known in this Court, of first stating the property which the testator intends to dispose of and then dividing it up amongst the various beneficiaries. Clause 2 of the Will reads as follows:—"The house No. 25 in Nattu Pillayar Civil Street and ready money were received (by me) under an order of the High Court according to my adoptive father's Will. Of the amount left deducting the sum spent therefrom, not only is a certain portion lodged in fixed deposit in Arbuthnot's House in my name and in the name of my senior elder brother P. N. K. Suryaprakasaroaya Mudaliar, but the remaining sum is in the shape of secured and unsecured debts and ready money." The testator then proceeds to give various specific and pecuniary legacies, and in clause 13, he says: "The sum which may be left after deducting the above-mentioned legacies and such other expenses, shall be utilised in my name without defect for pooja once, that is, daily, and repairs and other charities for the temple of Sri Vaideswarar in Poonamallee". Having regard to the fact that the existence of this sum of Rs. 4,000 and odd was unknown to the testator at the time, and to the statement made by him that he is dealing with a particular house and the moneys which had been already received by him from the High Court, I think that the words in clause 13 refer to the residue of the moneys in his hands which have not been already disposed of by him under the Will, and that the sum of Rs. 4,000 and odd is not disposed of by him. I may point out that the residuary clause in the form in which it appears in English Wills, is practically unknown to the ordinary testator in Madras and that the rules of construction which have been laid down by English Courts, are not applicable.

The defendant has also pleaded a release by the plaintiff of all claims against him but it is clear from the evidence that this document was executed by the plaintiff when she was a minor. It is also perfectly clear that it was executed under a mutual mistake and for that reason also it is not binding on the plaintiff.

The plaintiff has called for and put in a book purporting to be an account of the 1st defendant of his administration of the estate. It is not in his affidavit of documents and I think it is obviously a fraudulent concoction. Certain entries which appear in it have been proved, by the evidence called by the plaintiff, to be untrue.

There will, therefore, be a decree declaring that the sum of Rs. 4,056-12-3 did not pass under the Will of the deceased but will go to the plaintiff as on an intestacy, that the estate must be administered by the Court and that the 1st defendant must account from the date of the death of the deceased on the footing of wilful default. The 1st defendant will pay the costs of the suit up to date. The 1st defendant is ordered to pay this sum of Rs. 4,056-12-3 into Court within 10 days.

Where an original suit out of which an execution proceeding had arisen was valued at over Rs. 5,000 but was decreed for less than that amount, an appeal from an order in the execution proceedings would nevertheless lie to the High Court.

Execution second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated 21st November 1914.

Dr. S. M. Suleman, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The objection raised in this appeal is that no appeal lay to the Court below and that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal presented to it. It appears that the original suit was valued at a sum exceeding Rs 5,000. The claim was decreed in part and the decree provided that mesne profits should be determined in execution of the decree. An application was made to the Court of first instance for execution of the decree and for determination of the amount of mesne profits. The amount awarded by the Court of first instance was a sum of Rs. 44-4-6. The judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge and that Court reduced the amount awarded by the Court of first instance. It is clear in view of the provisions of section 21 of Act XII of 1887 that no appeal lay to the District Judge. The value of the original suit exceeded Rs. 5,000, and the proceeding in which the order complained of was made, was a proceeding arising out of that suit. Therefore, as the value of the suit exceeded Rs. 5,000, the appeal lay to the High Court. I accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the memorandum of appeal be returned to the respondent for presentation to the proper Court. As the objection now raised was not put forward in the Court below, I make no order as to the costs of this appeal. I direct that the record be not returned to the Court below for three weeks so that the memorandum of appeal may be promptly taken back and an appeal presented to this Court, if so advised.

Mr. Oertel, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The following is the pedigree table in the case:—

The contest is between Salam Din, plaintiff, and Allah Din, defendant, the property in suit being that left by Ilam Din and Khair Din. The first Court drew two issues:—

1—Is the property in suit ancestral?

2—Whether the property is ancestral, or was the self acquired property of Imam Din; has the defendant Allah Din a superior right over the plaintiff?

In the end, it was admitted on all hands that the property was acquired by Imam Din, but the first Court nevertheless left the burden of issue No. 2 upon the defendant and ultimately held that he had not discharged that burden. The plaintiff's suit, therefore, having been decreed, the defendant appealed to the Divisional Court, which affirmed the decree of the first Court and dismissed the appeal with costs.

Defendant has now come up here in second appeal, in which there are two main contentions: first, that the Courts below have erred in law in placing the onus on the appellant; and secondly, that according to the custom of the tribe, the appellant is the heir to the property and not the plaintiff. Mr. Oertel objects that a certificate is required. To this, it was replied that the appeal is not regarding the validity or the existence of any custom or usage, that if the onus had been rightly laid, the Courts below would inevitably have decided in favour of the defendant, and that, therefore, the defendant's object is fully gained if this Court will now hold that the onus was on plaintiff and then proceed to decide the case on the record. I am very doubtful whether an argument like this, is valid. It is opposed to the dictum of Chevis, J., in Arura v. Imam Bakhsh (1), and I do not think that it is really supported by the remarks made towards the end of the judgment in Santa Singh v. Waryam Singh (2). Mr. Justice Chevis's view is quite clear and fully applies to the present case. It seems to me that, even if I were to accede to Mr. Shafi's request and rule that the onus was on plaintiff, it would then become necessary to remand the case in order to allow plaintiff an opportunity to prove a custom. In these circumstances, it is hardly correct to say that this Court would be in a position, after laying down the rule as to onus, at once to proceed to judgment on the question of custom; and it seems to me that sub section 3 of section 41 of the Punjab Courts Act was expressly enacted in order to make it necessary for an aggrieved person to get a certificate from the lower Appellate Court on questions of custom or usage.

But, however this may be, I would decline to interfere in any case because in my opinion the onus was rightly laid. No doubt it has been held that daughters, especially among Arains, have very special rights in respect of self-acquired property, but as has been frequently pointed out by the Judges of this Court, daughters are on quite a different footing from a sister or a paternal aunt. I am not aware of any authority for the proposition that in any tribe in the Punjab, the paternal aunt's son has prima facie a better right of succession than a near agnate even where the property is self-acquired. Further, even if this was not clear and it was doubtful on which party the onus lay, one has only to read the judgment of the lower Appellate Court to see that, on the record as it stands, the onus certainly has at the least shifted to the shoulders of the defendant. Add to this the negative implication that defendant, finding the duty laid upon him of attempting to prove the custom in his own favour, failed so signally that he was not able to produce a single intelligible instance of succession of a paternal aunt's son in preference to collaterals.

In these circumstances, it seems to me that the defendant's appeal has no force whatever and I dismiss it with costs.

A suit for ejectment under section 58 of the Tenancy Act cannot lie in respect of a grove, as a grove does not come under the definition of the holding, not being land let or held for agricultural purposes.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of Agra, dated the 18th April 1914, in a case of ejectment under section 58/63 of Act II of 1901.

JUDGMENT.—The Commissioner seems to me to have taken the right view in this case. The respondent claims to hold the grove as a purchaser at auction from some previous owner and in view of his long possession, he has established a prima facie case and cannot be ejected under section 58. Another point which arises is that even if he paid rent to the appellant, of which there is no clear evidence, the rent can only be paid on account of the grove. This being so, ejectment under section 58 is only from a holding and a grove does not come under the definition of the holding, as it is not land let or held for agricultural purposes.

Suit, right of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 523, 524, distinction between—Claim under section 523 disallowed by Magistrate—Aggrieved person, right of.

The special provisions relating to investigation of claims to property mentioned in section 523, Criminal Procedure Code, do not deprive the person aggrieved of any right of action. [p. 499, col. 1.]

The distinction between a case under section 523 and one under section 524 of the Code of Criminal Procedure suggested by the Judges in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Vakhatsangji Meghrajji, 19 B. 668, has no substance. [p. 499, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Dharwar, in Appeal No. 108 of 1912, reversing the decree passed by the Assistant Judge of Dharwar, in Civil Suit No. 2 of 1911.

Mr. V. R. Sirur, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 9th of July 1909, the house of the plaintiff was searched by the Police of Dharwar and of the Savanur State in connection with a dacoity which had been committed in that State, and certain property including ornaments specified in the plaint, was attached on suspicion.

SUBRAMANIYAN CHETTY v. RAMASWAMI CHETTY.

On the 30th September 1909, the second class Magistrate issued a proclamation under section 523 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, requiring any person having a claim to the ornaments to appear and establish his claim within six months. On the 17th January 1910, the plaintiff appeared to support his claim to the ornaments. The claim was disallowed and, on the 13th June 1910, an order was issued by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under section 524 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for sale of the ornaments. The sale-proceeds were credited to the Government.

The plaintiff brings this suit alleging that the ornaments are his property and were illegally attached, and prays that the amount realised by the sale may be awarded to him with interest. The suit was decided in the plaintiff's favour, and a decree for Rs. 258-12-0 was passed by Mr. Varley, the Assistant Judge.

The defendant, the Secretary of State, appealed to the District Court, which held that as under section 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code the property was at the disposal of Government, Government could do what it liked with it and had an absolute right to it, and that the special provisions relating to investigation of claims to property mentioned in section 523 made the decision of the Magistrate final and deprived the person aggrieved of any right of action. We are of opinion that this decision cannot be supported. The case referred to by the learned District Judge, viz., Secretary of State for India in Council v. Vakhatsangji Meghrajji (1), did not decide or purport to decide the point. In the judgment, reference was made to a decision in which the point was decided, namely, Queen-Empress v. Tribhoran Manekchand (2). It appears to us that the distinction between a case under section 523 and one under section 524, suggested by the Judges in Secretary of State for India in Council v. Vakhatsangji Meghrajji (1), has no substance, for the order upon the claim is made under section 523, and thereafter if the claim is rejected, section 524 provides that the property shall be at the disposal of Government, and then as a consequence, Magistrates are empowered to make discretionary orders for sales of such property. Now in Queen-Empress v. Tribhoran Manekchand (2), the Court held that although the claim by two accused persons to property seized on suspicion had been decided against them under section 523, that did not deprive them of the right of suit to establish their claim.

The learned District Judge relied in support of his decision upon Ramachandra v. Secretary of State for India (3). But that case was properly distinguished by the learned Assistant Judge, who pointed out that the present case has nothing to do with rights created by Statute, for the enforcement of which a special remedy is given. We set aside the decision of the District Judge, and remand the case for disposal upon the other issues. The respondent must pay the appellant's costs of this appeal.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

Apart from section 150 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is the Court which has jurisdiction to grant the Probate under section 56 of the Probate and Administration Act that has also jurisdiction to demand an inventory to be furnished to it under section 98 of the Probate and Administration Act. That jurisdiction cannot be said to have been taken away because by bifurcation of the district, the properties dealt with by the Probate, lie within the jurisdiction of another district. Miller, in Civil Revision Petition No. 468 of 1913, dated the 11th November 1913, preferred against the order of the District Court of Madura, in Interlocutory Appeal No. 29 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of MILLER, J.—Section 98 of the Probate and Administration Act enacts that the Court which granted the Probate should receive the inventory. The District Judge of Ramnad granted the Probate and had in my opinion jurisdiction to receive the inventory. The case cited, Zamindar of Vallur and Guler v. Adinarayudu (1), is different. The judgment gives no reasons, but section 649 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 35 (1) of the Small Cause Courts Act, IX of 1887, seem to justify the decision. In the present case, I am not without some doubt, but I find nothing to support the view that the District Court of Madura has ceased to be the Court which granted the Probate, and I cannot, therefore, say that the District Judge was wrong in receiving the inventory though I recognise that some inconvenience may arise as to proceedings to be instituted hereafter. Section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code has been cited, but I am not satisfied that it takes away the jurisdiction of the Madura Court.

The objections to the inventory on the merits are not matters which can be dealt with under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

The petition is dismissed.

Mr. A. Venkatarayaliah, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Krishnasami Aiyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Judge is clearly right. It is not necessary to decide whether by the operation of section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code, the jurisdiction to receive an inventory has been conferred on the District Court of Ramnad. Having regard to the saving clause in the beginning of the section, the language of section 98 of the Probate and Administration Act is clear and imposes on the grantee the duty of furnishing the inventory to the Court which issued the Probate. Section 76 also shows that the undertaking is given to the Court which granted the Probate. Under section 56 of the Probate and Administration Act, the Madura District Court had jurisdiction to grant the Probate. That jurisdiction cannot be said to have been taken away, because the properties dealt with in the Probate are within the jurisdiction of another Court by reason of the bifurcation of the district.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Will—Legacy—Legatee to make good what he owes to the estate before he can take anything

A legatee is bound to make good to the estate of a testator what he owes to that estate before he can claim payment of a legacy out of the same estate. [p. 101, col. 2.]

Where a fund is being distributed, a party cannot take anything out of the fund until he has made good what he owes to it. It is immaterial whether the amount is actually ascertained or not. If it is not actually ascertained, it must be ascertained in order that the rights of the parties may be adjusted. [p. 501, col. 1.]

In re Taylor, Taylor v. Wade, (1894) 1 Ch. 671; 63 L. J. Ch. 424; 8 R. 86; 70 L. T. 556; 42 W. R. 373, distinguished.

Mr. Desai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kanga and Daruwalla, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J. In my opinion the appellants are entitled to succeed.

They are executors of the Will under which the plaintiff was entitled when twenty-one to a legacy of Rs. 5,000 payable out of the testator's general estate.

In answer to a claim for the legacy the executors replied the plaintiff had removed wrongfully a ring worth Rs. 2,700 belonging to the testator.

Correspondence then ensued, which ended in the executors saying that they had no alternative but to impound the legacy till the ring and certain other articles were returned or their loss compensated for. In their written statement, the defendants contend the plaintiff is not entitled to the legacy before he returns the ring and they bring into Court the value of the legacy less the estimated value of the ring.

The suit was tried as a short cause: no issues were raised, but the plaintiff's Counsel contended, the defendants could not set off, as under Order VIII, rule 6 of the Civil Procedure Code only a claim in respect of an ascertained sum could be set off. This contention found favour with the learned Judge who, notwithstanding that the defendants' Counsel said he wished to give evidence as to the straction of the ring, passed a decree for the amount of the legacy and interest with costs.

The plaintiff's title to the legacy is not complete against the executors until they have assented to the same: see section 112 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881. The plaint contains no allegation of assent by the executors to the plaintiff's legacy. on the contrary, the correspondence filed with it, shows they impose as a condition of payment that the plaintiff shall return the ring. This is at most a conditional assent under section 114. Whether the condition could rightly be imposed depends upon the question of fact on which the executors' Counsel wished to give evidence.

Before us, the appellants' case was based on the general principle that where a fund is being distributed, a party cannot take anything out of the fund until he has made good what he owes to it. "It is immaterial," it has been held in Rhodesia Goldfields, In re, Partridge v. Rhodesia Goldfields (1), "whether the amount is actually ascertained or not. If it is not actually ascertained, it must be ascertained in order that the rights of the parties may be adjusted." Here the amount claimable from the plaintiff, if the executors' case is true, is the value of the ring, an ascertainable sum, and they are entitled to give evidence on the point. It was argued for the respondent that such a conclusion would be inconsistent with the dictum of Chitty, J., in In re Taylor, Taylor v. Wade (2).

It was there held that a specific legacy payable out of a specified and sufficient fund could not be withheld on the ground that a debt might be due by the legatee which, if recovered, would increase the residuary estate. Here, however, the ring or its value if recovered would increase the general estate out of which the legacy is payable.

For these reasons, under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, we set aside the decree and remand the case to the learned Judge for trial on the merits. We hope it may be tried as a short cause. Costs reserved to be disposed of by the learned trial Judge.

DAVAR, J.—I concur in the order of remand which the learned Chief Justice proposes to make in this appeal. I should, however, like to add that in my opinion, the defendants are primarily responsible for the refusal of the learned Judge in the Court below to go into evidence on the question of the ring, which the plaintiff-respondent is supposed to have clandestinely taken possession of when the testator was on his death-bed. The case of Rhodesia Goldfields, In re, Partridge v. Rhodesia Goldfields (1) is very clear authority for the contention that a legatee is bound to make good to the estate of a testator what he owes to that estate before he can claim payment of a legacy out of the same estate.

This contention is no doubt specifically raised by paragraph 3 of the defendants' written statement, but it appears from the notes of the learned Judge taken at the hearing and from his judgment that when the case was heard by him, Counsel for the plaintiff assumed that the claim of the plaintiff was resisted on the bare ground of a set-off and the learned Judge rightly held that the value of the ring being unascertained, defendants were not entitled to maintain the plea of set-off. No issue was raised and no authority seems to have been cited before the learned Judge below and his attention was not specifically drawn to the contention set forth in paragraph 3 of the defendants' written statement.

From the judgment it appears that the learned Counsel for the defendants did contend before him that "the plaintiff was not entitled to the legacy before he returned the ring." The ground on which the contention was based becomes clear further on in the judgment where the learned Judge sets out what happened before him when the case was called on for hearing.

It seems to me under the circumstances that the learned Judge, on the materials placed before him and the way the case was presented to him, was justified in assuming that the only question before him was whether the defendants were entitled to a set-off, and on this question, he came to a correct conclusion.

Having regard, however, to the fact that the ground on which the appeal was argued before us, was specifically taken in the written statement, I agree in thinking it is in the interest of both parties that the questions in dispute should be disposed of in the present suit.

We have left the whole question of costs to be dealt with by the learned Judge to whom the case is remanded. He will, I have no doubt, have regard to what happened before him at the original hearing when dealing with the question of costs.

Decree set aside; Case remanded.

RESPONDENT.

Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863), ss. 8, 10—Devasthanam Committee, vacancy in—Appointment by District Judge—Evidence not taken—Order, if legal—Revision, maintainability of—Nature of proceedings—Qualifications laid down in s. 8, if apply to vacancies subsequent—Improper appointments, how set aside—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 141—Madras Civil Rules of Practice (Mofussil), r. 94, applicability of, to proceedings under s. 10 of Religious Endowments Act.

A District Judge, acting under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act, XX of 1863, is not bound to take evidence before appointing a person to the vacancy of a member of the Devasthanam Committee. [p. 504, col. 1; p. 507, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Rule 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice (Mofussil), in so far as it goes beyond section 141, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is ultra vires and in so far as it is in conformity with the said section is unnecessary. [p. 503, col. 2.]

The omission in rule 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice (Mofussil) of the qualifying words 'as far as it can be made applicable,' occurring in section 141, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, cannot make the procedure in regard to suits applicable in their entirety to all original petitions, if by the very nature of such petitions portions of the procedure relating to suits cannot be made applicable to such petitions. [p. 503, col. 2; p. 504, col. 1.]

The nature of an application under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act, invoking the District Judge's power of appointment to the vacancy of a member of the Devasthanam Committee, makes that part of the procedure in the trial of suits which relates to the taking of evidence not obligatory on the District Judge, though there is nothing to prevent his taking such evidence. [p. 504, col. 1.]

Neither appeal nor revision lies against an order passed by a District Judge under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act, as it is informal in its nature and is one passed outside the Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction of the District Court. [p. 504, col. 1.]

The qualifications contained in section 8 of the Religious Endowments Act, regarding Committee Members apply to vacancies filled up under section 10 of the said Act. [p. 505, col. 1.]

A person improperly appointed under section 10 can be removed either by proceedings by quo warranto or by injunction. [p. 505, col. 1.]

Per Napier, J.—Neither section 141, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, nor rule 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice (Mofussil), applies to proceedings under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act. [p. 506, col. 1; p. 507, col. 1.]

Proceedings under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act are not judicial proceedings, and they do not amount to a 'case' within the meaning of section 115, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 506, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether an order passed by a District Judge under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act, appointing a person to a vacancy in the Devasthanam Committee can be revised by the High Court? [p. 506, col. 1.]

A High Court will not under section 15 of the Charter Act interfere with a carefully considered order of a lower Court. [p. 507, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 115 and 141 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, praying the High Court to revise the proceedings of the District Court of Madura, in Original Petition No. 256 of 1913.

FACTS.—The petition was to revise the order of the District Judge of Madura filling up a vacancy in the Devasthanam Committee, on the ground that the order was vitiated by material irregularity inasmuch as the learned Judge failed to follow the procedure laid down in section 141, Civil Procedure Code, and rule 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice (Mofussil) and take evidence before making the appointment.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and T. R. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Petitioner:—The order of the District Judge has been vitiated by material irregularity. He ought to have followed the procedure laid down for suits and taken evidence. Vide section 141, Civil Procedure Code, and rule 94, Civil Rules of Practice (Mofussil). Such orders are revisable by the High Court. Vide also Somasundara Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Mudaliar (1), Amdas Miyan v. Muhammad Davul Khan Bahadur (2), Gopala Ayyar v. Arunachallam Chetty (3) and Vasudeva Aiyar v. Devasthanam Committee of Negapatam (4). If it is to be held that no revision lies to the High Court, the result will be disastrous. The District Judge may appoint a European or a Christian as a member of the Committee of a Hindu Devasthanam and such a procedure would lead to a revolt. See also Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (5).

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Iyengar and K. Rajah Iyer, for the Respondent:—Rule 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice (Mofussil), does not apply to proceedings under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act. The Civil Rules of Practice purport to have been framed by virtue of powers therein recited. The Religious Endowments Act is not a Special Act, nor does it empower the framing of rules. Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application either. The proceedings under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act are not a civil suit, vide Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (5).

The High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere. The cases in Somasundara Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Mudaliar (1); Gopala Ayyar v. Arunachallam Chetty (3) and Vasudeva Aiyar v. Devasthanam Committee of Negapatam (4) are wrongly decided. The cases in which the High Court has interfered, are cases under sections 14, 16 and 18 of the Religious Endowments Act. Proceedings under those sections stand on quite a different footing. The Privy Council has held that they are judicial proceedings, whereas proceedings under section 10 are not. Moreover, the interference has been confined to preliminary legal questions giving rise to the exercise of jurisdiction.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—This petition is instituted as a petition filed under both sections 115 and 141 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 141 corresponds to the first paragraph of the old section 647 and is as follows:—

"The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of Civil Jurisdiction."

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, who appeared for the petitioner, admitted during the course of the argument that this revision petition was not filed under both the sections 115 and 141 of the Civil Procedure Code, but only under section 115, corresponding to old section 622, and that section 141 ought to have appeared in the third ground of the memorandum of the Civil revision petition and not in the title of the petition. The memorandum contains another mistake. As corrected, or rather fully expanded, the third ground, according to the contention of Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, would be as follows:—

"The District Judge acted with material irregularity in not disposing of the original petition before him in accordance with the provisions of section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code, and according to rule 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice, framed by the High Court under paragraph 2 of section 652 of the old Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to section 122 of the new Civil Procedure Code."

I do not think it is necessary to consider rule 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice as that rule, if it goes beyond section 141, is ultra vires and so far as it is in conformity with it, it is unnecessary. While section 141 contains the qualifying words "as far as it can be made applicable," these words are omitted in rule 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice. But such omission cannot make the proce-ture in regard to suits applicable in their entirety to all original petitions if by the very nature of such petitions portions of the procedure relating to suits cannot be made applicable to such petitions. It was on this ground that in a foot-note case in Amdoo Miyan v. Muhammad Darul Khan Bahadur, (2), Subramania Aiyar and Davies, J.J., held that in respect of an application under section 18 of the Religious Endowments Act, the ordinary procedure in suits as to giving notice to the other side and to taking evidence before deciding the case had no application, notwithstanding the terms of section 647 of the old Civil Procedure Code (corresponding to present section 141). So in the foot-note case in Venkateswara, In re (6), a Full Bench of five Judges held that notwithstanding section 647, no appeal lay against an order passed under section 18 of the Religious Endowments Act. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that the nature of the application under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act invoking the District Judge's power of appointment to the vacancy of a member of the Devasthanam Committee makes that part of the procedure in the trial of suits which relates to the taking of evidence by the Court not obligatory on the District Judge, though there is nothing, of course, to prevent his taking such evidence. I am further of opinion, for the same reasons as were given in the foot-note case in Venkat-swara, In re (6), that not only are the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as to an appeal inapplicable to an order passed under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act, but the provisions by way of revision are also inapplicable. In the Privy Council case in Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (5), their Lordships treat sections 14 to 20 of the Act as standing on a somewhat different footing from section 10, and while the proceedings of the Court under sections 14 to 20 are treated as coming within the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the District Court, an order of appointment under section 10 is treated as outside the Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction. Hence the appointment order under section 10 is much more informal than the decision given under any of the sections 14 to 20. In the case in Somasundara

Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Mudaliar (1), the question whether the High Court could interfere under section 622 of the old Civil Procedure Code with an order under section 5 of the Act XX of 1863 appointing a temporary manager, seems not to have been argued and was not considered in the judgment. As the petition in revision was dismissed on the merits, that case cannot be treated as an authority for the proposition that the High Court had jurisdiction to interfere in revision under section 622 with an order passed under section 5.

As regards the case Gopala Ayyar v. Arunachalam Chetty (3), the preliminary objection seems to have been taken in that case that no revision lay, but that was overruled. It was the decision of a single Judge, and though entitled to the greatest respect, it is not binding on us, especially as even on the merits, interference in revision was refused in that case also.

Coming to the case in Vasudeva Aiyar v. Devasthanam Committee of Negapatam (4), apart from the fact that that decision is now under appeal to the Privy Council, the order revised in that case under section 115, corresponding to old section 622, was not an order of appointment by the District Judge under section 10 of the Act XX of 1863, but was an order passed by him accepting the result of an election held invalidly by the temple committee, such acceptance being treated as entitling the elected person to be a committee member. Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar however, argued that if the High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with an appointment under section 10, grave injustice might result as the District Judge might appoint a European or Christian gentleman as the member of a committee of a Hindu Devasthanam. He even went so far as to say that a popular religious rebellion might be the result of such an appointment and that hence a power of revision is necessary in the High Court. I do not intend to deny the right of the learned Vakil to put his case as strongly as possible, but one might venture to doubt whether, when there was not the slightest inclination on the part of the ordinary Hindu public to raise any objection to the control of the secular affairs and even festivals of Hindu Devasthanams by European gentlemen, who were members of Revenue Boards and Collectors, till Christian Missionary agitation brought about their withdrawal from such management (the Hindu public on the other hand being satisfied and even gratified with such official control), the appointment of one of several members of a temple committee by the District Judge (who has the best means of knowing the local opinions and feelings) of a European (official or even non-official), known for his tolerance and sympathy, could lead to such dire results as predicted by Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar, notwithstanding the existence of a very few persons here and there in all countries (whether religious persons or irreligious persons) who entertain an unreasoning hatred (as opposed to the common mild dislike) of everything and everybody foreign. But unless a District Judge was phenomenally ignorant of law or perverse, the question as to what is to be done if a Christian, actively hostile to the Hindu religion, is appointed, cannot arise, as section 8 of the Act XX of 1863 clearly provides that "the members of the said committee shall be appointed from among persons professing the religion for the purpose of which the mosque, temple, etc., was founded or is maintained," and though that section relates to the first appointment of committee members by the Local Government after the passing of the Act, the clear intention of the Act seems to be that when vacancies are filled up under section 10, the qualification for membership prescribed in section 8 will continue to apply. If against the clear intention of the Act as signified by section 8, the District Judge appoints a bigoted Christian gentleman to fill a vacancy, their Lordships suggest in Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (5) that it may be that the person so improperly appointed "could be removed by proceedings equivalent to proceedings by quo warranto in England." (It may be that an injunction suit might also lie.) But I might put another case which is far more likely to occur, namely, the District Judge might appoint a very bigoted Vaishnavite as a committee member for a Saivite Temple or a very bigoted Tengalai sectarian for a Valagalai Devasthanam. We know that sectarians of the same religion sometimes hate each other more than they hate an alien religionist. I was this danger that this High Court wanted to prevent by their attempt at interference in the case in Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (5). Turner, C. J., and Muthuswami Aiyar, J., say (see page 29) that the order appointing Minakshi Naidu as a committee member of the Madura Minakshi Sundareswarar Devasthanam (a Saivite institution) ought to be set aside "because he" (Minakshi Naidu) "has pronounced himself actively in favour of the cult of Vishnu." But their Lordships of the Privy Council did not accept Mr. Doyne's contention that a person, "very improper and unfit by reason of his religious qualifications or moral conduct, might be appointed by the District Judge and that there must be a right either by appeal against the Judge's order or by suit or in some other way to remove the person so appointed." In that case, no doubt, the question directly in point was whether there was a right of appeal against the order of appointment. But the reasons given by their Lordships to veto the right of appeal also apply in full force to the right of interference by way of revision. If I understand the report of the arguments in that case rightly, Mr. Doyne, who appeared against Minakshi Naidu before the Privy Council, seems to have referred to the powers of the High Court under section 622 (the revision section in the old Code) during the course of his arguments as justifying the High Court's interference with the District Judge's order of appointment (see page 31 of the report) and their Lordships do not refer to that section; they say generally that "there was an inherent incompetency in the High Court to deal with the question brought before it."

I would, therefore, dismiss the petition with costs.

NAPIER, J.—This is a petition under sections 115 and 141, Civil Procedure Code, to revise the proceedings of the District Judge of Madura making an appointment to fill a vacancy in a temple committee, the ground for revision being an alleged material irregularity in the procedure of the Judge in that he did not proceed with the case in accordance with rule 94 of the Civil Rules of Practice and also did not take evidence. It is common ground that it is not the practice to apply rule 94 and that this procedure followed by the District Judge is the usual one and has never been challenged before. In reply, it is urged by Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar that the High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere and that rule 94 does not apply to such proceedings as these. As to the right to revise, there are some reported cases of the exercise of this power, Somasundara Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Mudaliar (1), Amdon Mayan v. Muhammad Darul Khan Bahadur (2), Gopala Ayyar v. Arunachallam Chetty (3), Vasudeva Aiyar v. Devasthanam Committee of Negapatam (4), but Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar seeks to distinguish them on two sets of grounds, namely, (1) that proceedings under sections 5 and 10 of the Act stand on a different footing to those under sections 14, 16 and 18 and (2) that where the Court has interfered under the above sections, it has been on a preliminary legal question giving rise to the exercise of the jurisdiction. For reasons that will appear later I feel the force of the first distinction, but I am unable to accept the latter and think that if we are to uphold his contention that no revision lies, we must hold that Somasundara Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Mudaliar (1), Gopala Ayyar v. Arunachallam Chetty (3) and Vasudeva Aiyar v. Devasthanam Committee of Negapatam (4) are wrongly decided. Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar is quite prepared to argue that they are wrong, relying on the decision of the Privy Council in Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (5). I have to observe that in each of the three cases Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (5) was relied on and in one case this point was not taken and in the other two it was overruled by the Court. I desire to express no decided opinion on the point myself as I think the petition fails on the second point, but I have the gravest doubts whether these proceedings are a "case" within the meaning of section 115. In my view rule 94 is inapplicable in proceedings under section 10 of the Act. These rules are made under the Civil Procedure Code, under a number of special Acts, and under all other powers of the High Court. The Religious Endowments Act is not one of the Special Acts, for it contains no provision for the making of rules. It is sought, however, to find the power in section 141 of the present Code, but to invoke the aid of that section, we have to ascertain first whether the procedure in the Code can be made applicable. This must depend on the nature of the proceeding and the materials on which the order or decision is to be based. I do not think that rule 94, read with the definitions in rules 4 (8) and (9), carry us any further. It is urged that under the old rules, there were no such definitions as appear in rule 4, although both sets of rules were made under the same Code, which contains section 647 in the same terms as section 141 of this Code and though the rule-making power existed under section 652, and that, therefore, the necessity for an original petition could not have been insisted on prior to 1905; but this argument is hardly permissible, as the High Court may have intended to extend the scope of the rules in 1905. I think that what we have to decide is as stated above and that we must look at the Act in light of the decision of the Privy Council to decide whether section 141 makes the Code or any rules made under the Code applicable to these proceedings. Now Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (5) clearly decides one thing, namely, that there is no "Civil suit" in proceedings under section 10 and that the order is not a decree within the meaning of the Code of 1879, which first introduced the language now adopted, with slight modification. The Privy Council, dealing with the exercise of the powers under section 10, calls it "the right of appointing a member of the committee." This phrase seems to me indicative of its nature. It is not a right to apply nor a duty of the Court to appoint, and it is not a matter of "Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction." These phrases used by the Privy Council seem to me to be inapt for judicial proceedings. Again, the Privy Council clearly identify the Court with the Judge, saying so in so many words. Then how is the right to be exercised? It is "discretionary": that may not carry the matter very far; but it is to be exercised by "a person who has the best means of knowing the movements of local opinion and feeling." If the Privy Council meant that the selection is to be made on these considerations, the petition must obviously fail, for there can obviously be little or of sworn evidence when the Judge has to apply what he could not use in ordinary proceedings, his own knowledge by hearsay, repute or otherwise of local opinion and feeling. I venture very respectfully to say that this test is to be gathered from the terms of the section. The appointment is to be filled up primarily by election; failing that, by selection either by the Committee or by the Judge. Election and selection by the Committee are surely intended to procure the person most desirable according to the local opinion and feeling. Again, section 8 lays down that the committee members are to be appointed "as far as can be ascertained in accordance with the general wishes of those interested." It seems to me that these words are but reproduced in another form in the language of the Privy Council. No evidence is taken by the Committee in selecting. Why should evidence be taken by the Judge? No procedure is laid down for the Committee and none for the Judge and yet the Legislature was careful to provide the procedure when dealing with arbitration under section 17 and sanction to sue under section 13 (Vide also section 14, power to direct special performance). For the above reasons I am clear that no part of the procedure in a suit is applicable and that, therefore, section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code and the Rules of Practice do not affect these proceedings. We are asked to interfere under the Charter Act and obviously when the Judge has, as in this case, carefully considered the rival claims such an application could not be contemplated by the petitioner. I would dismiss this petition with costs.

Petition dismissed.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 25
OF 1915.

August 16, 1915.

Present:—Sir Basil Scott, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Batchelor.

MAHOMED HAJI ESSACK—CREDITOR—

versus

Shaikh ABDUL RAHMAN—INSOLVENT

—RESPONDENT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 8

—Protection order—Appeal—Aggrieved person—
Application for protection to be judged on merits.

An interim protection order made under the insolvency jurisdiction is a judicial order and appealable. [p. 508, col. 1.]

The Legislature does not appear to have put any limitation upon appeals made from original orders of a Judge except perhaps orders regulating procedure. [p. 508, col. 1.]

A creditor who has not obtained a decree may be an aggrieved person within the meaning of section 8 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), especially when the insolvent has himself prevented the creditor from attaining that position by opposing proceedings instituted by the creditor for the purpose. [p. 508, cols. 1 & 2.]

Each application for protection after refusal or suspension of discharge must be judged on its merits. If the insolvent has acted recklessly and dishonestly, the fact that he cannot pay is no reason for depriving the creditor of the power of punishing him by attachment and imprisonment to the extent the law allows. [p. 509, col. 1; p. 511, col. 1.]

Mr. Bahadurji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT ON PRELIMINARY POINTS.—Two preliminary objections have been taken to this appeal. First, it is said that this is an order which, under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, III of 1909, is not appealable. Section 8 deals with appeals. It is headed with the introductory title of appeals. Clause (1) provides that the Court may review, rescind or vary any order made by it under its Insolvency Jurisdiction. Clause (2) states that orders in insolvency matters shall, at the instance of any person aggrieved, be subject to appeal as follows: An appeal from an order made by an officer with delegated powers under section 6, which order under that section is to be treated as an order of the Court, lies to the Judge assigned under section 4 to dispose of insolvency matters, and no further appeal lies. The other orders, being orders made by the Judge himself as original orders, are appealable, and shall lie in the same way and be subject to the same provisions as appeals from orders made by a Judge in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. Now, it is to be observed that the first clause deals with any orders made under the Insolvency Jurisdiction. The second clause deals with orders in insolvency matters; and there does not appear to us to be any reason for limiting them so as to include something less than orders referred to in the first clause. Clause (a) does not indicate that the Legislature wished to put any limitation upon appeals from orders made by the delegated officer; and similarly it does not appear to us that it wished to put any limitation upon appeals made from original orders of a Judge except perhaps orders regulating procedure. Those appeals must be preferred in the same way and subject to the same provisions as Original Side Appeals. "In the same way" would refer inter alia to the filing of a memorandum of appeal in the Prothonotary's Office and so forth, as provided by the Original Side Rules.

"Subject to the same provisions" would be subject to the law of limitation and other Statutes enacting adjective law. We do not think it should be held that this order made as an original order by the Judge exercising jurisdiction under the Act, is not appealable. Of course, there may be orders which are merely orders regulating procedure for the convenience of the Court or for the convenience of the parties. Such orders, we take it, are not affected by these provisions. The orders made must be judicial orders intended to decide some point judicially. It cannot be contended that the present order is not a judicial order.

Then, it is said that an appeal only lies at the instance of any person aggrieved, and it is contended that the appellant, who filed this appeal, is not a person aggrieved. The order complained of is an order which granted protection, although refusing discharge, to the insolvent; and it is said that such an order only affects the interests of creditors who have obtained decrees and, therefore, would otherwise have the right of arresting the judgment-debtor. But the only reason why the appellant is not himself a judgment-creditor is that the insolvent, since the filing of the appeal, has prevented the creditor-appellant from attaining that position by opposing proceedings before the Original Side Judge, which were actually suggested by the Insolvency Court in order that the appellant might put himself in the position of an aggrieved person. The view that the appellant is not an aggrieved person is one which this Court is not disposed to regard with favour under the circumstances; but as Counsel for the appellant appears also on the instructions of the Alliance Bank, a judgment-creditor and opposing creditor, who would undoubtedly be an aggrieved person and consents to be added, and actually applies to be added, as a party appellant in this appeal, we, in pursuance of the powers vested in Courts under section 107 of the Civil Procedure Code and Order I, rule 10, clauses (2) and (3), and Order XLI, rule 33, direct that the Alliance Bank be joined as appellant in this appeal.

The appeal must proceed.

JUDGMENT ON MERITS.

SCOTT, C. J.—This case comes before us on appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Davar sitting as Judge in Insolvency dated the 16th of April 1915 whereby the insolvent after refusal of his discharge and notwithstanding opposition by a judgment-creditor was given an order protecting him from arrest till April 1916.

The order refusing the insolvent's application for discharge was passed on a judgment of the 8th of April, in which the reasons for refusing discharge were stated and it was shown that numerous facts falling within the categories (a), (b), (c), (d), (f) and (j) of section 39 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act had been proved against the insolvent. It was found inter alia that on the day preceding his petition in insolvency, the respondent to make good certain defalcations assigned a debt worth Rs. 9,000 and properties worth over two lacs to creditors whom he had defrauded by breaches of trust. The learned Judge stated that he would have tried the insolvent in respect of these assignments under the penal section 103, if it had not been for the decision of the House of Lords in Sharp v. Jackson (1), which seemed to render a trial on a charge of fraudulent preference hopeless. Nevertheless, the learned Judge, because he believed that in almost all cases where the discharge was suspended under the present law, the insolvent had, as a matter of course, been granted protection for the period of suspension, granted protection for 12 months out of the period of two years which would elapse between the order refusing discharge and a fresh application for discharge by the insolvent.

It is clear that the Court has a discretion in the matter. If an application for protection was necessary in April under section 25, the Court could have refused it for good cause. If ever there can be such good cause, it seems to me to exist in the present case. There is nothing to be said for the insolvent in face of the findings of the learned Judge. We are, moreover, informed by the Official Assignee that the learned Judge is mistaken in thinking the insolvent's assistance is required for the purpose of realizing assets. All known assets of value had been recorded before the application for discharge. It would, in my opinion, be dangerous as well as unnecessary to adopt any such rule of practice as the learned Judge believed to exist. Each application for protection after refusal or suspension of discharge must be judged on its merits. The Court has no longer power to permit the imprisonment of an insolvent for two years at the suit of a judgment-creditor as it had under section 51 of the Indian Insolvent Debtors Act: the period of six months is the maximum term of civil imprisonment under the Civil Procedure Code. But if the insolvent has acted as here recklessly and dishonestly, the fact that he cannot pay, is no reason for depriving the creditor of the power of punishing him by attachment and imprisonment to the extent the law allows: compare Morris v. Ingram (2) and In re Gent, Gent-Davis v. Harris (3), cases under the English Debtors' Act of 1849. In my opinion the order of protection now under appeal should be set aside.

BACHELOR, J. This is an appeal in insolvency proceedings from an order made by the learned Commissioner granting the insolvent protection from arrest under section 15 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909. The appellant before us is the Alliance Bank of Simla, a judgment-creditor in the sum of Rs. 50,000.

on 27th October 1913. On 10th February following, he filed his schedule, showing liabilities amounting to Rs. 2,20,499. The realisable assets are stated to come to Rs. 2,90,000, but the amount recovered up to the time of Official Assignee's report is only Rs. 1,37,000, and between that date and this the further sum realised is, we are told, the mere dribble of Rs. 4,000.

On 8th April 1915, the learned Commissioner refused the insolvent's discharge for reasons which he explained in an exhaustive judgment, in which he animadverted in severe terms on the insolvent's recklessness, extravagance and numerous malpractices. On the 16th April 1915, the same learned Commissioner made the order now under appeal granting the insolvent protection from arrest. The question is whether that order should be affirmed.

The order is, under the Act, a discretionary order; in this case it was made by my learned brother, Davar, J., whose experience in the administration of the law of insolvency is far greater than mine. It is, therefore, with sincere diffidence that I find myself compelled to take another view; and since we are differing from Davar, J., I desire to state my reasons in my own words. The conclusion which I reach is based entirely on Davar, J.'s judgment as to the character of this insolvency and on the consequences which seem to me to follow from that character. On this point I rely on the following passages in which the learned Commissioner has given his reasons for refusing the respondent's discharge:—

"The Official Assignee in his report says that the insolvent mixed up the moneys received by him as Receiver with his own moneys. The insolvent on 26th October 1913, a day before he filed his petition in insolvency, assigned over and transferred a good debt due by Maneklal Panachand to himself to the heirs of Esa Khalifa, of whose estate he was Receiver. And by this act, a sum of Rs. 29,000 was disposed of a day before his insolvency. It further appears that, during the time the insolvent was carrying on business, he was entrusted by various Arab merchants with their pearls for the purpose of sale. The insolvent pledged those pearls and used the moneys realised by such hypothecation for his own purposes. Again on 26th October, a day before his insolvency, he executed four writings, whereby he assigned over and transferred all his interest in certain properties at Basra to secure payment of about Rs. 2,10,000 to the Arab merchants whose pearls he had wrongfully and unjustifiably pledged. Denuded of all extraneous circumstances, the facts which cannot be denied are that the insolvent, during the time he was carrying on business as a merchant, committed offences of criminal breach of trust in respect of property entrusted to him as Receiver, and in respect of property entrusted to him for sale as a broker or commission agent. In order to save himself from criminal prosecutions which, he apprehended, would be started against him on its being known that he was insolvent or unable to meet his liabilities, he parted with properties worth approximately Rs. 2,40,000 on the day preceding his insolvency... I have to take into consideration certain facts admitted by the insolvent himself. In addition to doing the pearl business, he kept a racing stud. The Official Assignee in his report says that these racing expenses came to seven lacs of rupees spread over a period of six years. The statement as to seven lacs is correct, but the statement as to the period is not correct. To be exact, it appears that he spent a sum of Rs. 6,98,340 from November 1910 to October 1913 on his racing stud.... He was living in style and expending moneys (in a way) which I venture to think very few citizens of Bombay have done, even though they may be admitted millionaires... His books give no indication as to what his profits were, or whether there were profits at all, and in what year there were profits or losses. He has kept books, but he might well have omitted keeping books at all, because the books that he has kept are of no value whatever. The books are not balanced, balances are not drawn, nor are they carried forward, and quite light-heartedly the insolvent admits that entries in respect of all payments and receipts do not appear in his books. If they do not, the value of those books is absolutely nil... It seems to me that a man who is capable of regarding money in the light in which the insolvent has regarded it, and of dealing with his own and other people's moneys in the reckless manner in which he has done, that such a man as a merchant is a danger to the public. His assets are not equal to four annas in the rupee. The Official Assignee reports that in his opinion, the insolvent cannot be held liable for his assets not being equal to four annas in the rupee on his unsecured liabilities. I differ from that conclusion altogether. It seems to me there can be no question whatever that the insolvent is solely and wholly responsible for his present state of affairs... There can be no question that the insolvent continued to trade when he must have well known that he was in insolvent circumstances. A man does not incur debts to the extent of twenty-nine lacs of rupees without realising that he is insolvent, and a debt of this description is not incurred in a day or a month. His indebtedness and insolvency must have been growing and growing continuously as every month of his reckless life progressed, and he must have been conscious, long before he filed his petition, that he was living a riotous and extravagant life at the expense of his creditors. He continued his business right up to the end with the fullest knowledge that he was dissipating his creditors' money."

The learned Commissioner concluded by finding against the insolvent that there was complete proof of the facts mentioned in clauses (a), (b), (c), (d), (f) and (j) of subsection 2 of section 39 of the Act, and by expressing his regret that he could inflict on him no higher punishment than the refusal of his discharge. From this judgment there was no appeal, and this, therefore, is the state of facts in which we have now to decide whether this insolvent is entitled to a protection order.

It is, I think, certain from the judgment of Davar, J., that the only reason why he felt himself unable to enforce the penal provisions of the Act was that, in view of Sharp v. Jackson (1), he reluctantly concluded that criminal proceedings could not succeed as it would be open to the insolvent to plead that his immediate and direct motive in benefiting some creditors at the expense of others was to save himself from the criminal prosecution, to which his own acts had exposed him. I agree with Davar, J., that, under the law as it stands, such a plea would suffice to save the insolvent, and, since that is the law, we must give effect to it; whether it is a satisfactory condition of the law, must be left to the authorities whose province it is to consider such matters. What concerns us now is to decide whether the character of the insolvency has, or has not any bearing upon the question whether the insolvent is entitled to protection: if it has, then, I think, it follows without further argument that this insolvent is disentitled. The contention for the insolvent goes, and must necessarily go, to this extent, that when once the Court finds itself for whatever reason, technical or substantial, unable to enforce the penal provisions, it must shut its eyes altogether to the character of the insolvency, and must consider exclusively the financial interests of the general body of the creditors. I can find nothing in the Act to countenance this view, though of course the interests of the creditors must receive some consideration. As I understand section 25, a protection order, though prima facie the insolvent is entitled to it, is still a privilege, to be granted or withheld as the Court in its discretion may determine, and the proposition on which I found my judgment is merely this, that, in exercising that discretion, it is relevant and proper for the Court to have regard to the character and circumstances of the insolvency. Here the insolvency was, as I have shown, of a flagrantly culpable kind, being the result of gross extravagance accompanied by grave malpractices and a total disregard of the creditors whose money was squandered. That protection should ordinarily be granted, does not signify here, for this is an extraordinarily bad case; and if it is not refused here, it must follow that it could never be refused, a consequence which, in my opinion, would conflict with the provisions of the section. I must add that the recent commercial history of Bombay is not such as to encourage the Courts to interpret the Act in a manner calculated to favour reckless speculation with other people's money; and that, I think, would be the effect of allowing insolvents to suppose that, to whatever lengths they may go in misconduct or dishonesty, they may count on immunity from the one fear that might act as a deterrent, the fear of the stigma of imprisonment. It is, in my opinion, no answer to say that the creditors would be better off if the insolvent were at large, for I can see no very appreciable difference to the creditors whether he is at large or in jail; nor does it appear that there is any concealed property which the insolvent could produce. Moreover, I think that even if his freedom could be shown to be of some advantage in the collection of assets, that advantage might well be sacrificed for the more obvious need of showing the Court's disapproval of the insolvent's conduct. Lastly, I do not feel embarrassed by the contention that the refusal of protection would merely confer a special advantage on the appellant Bank to the possible disadvantage of the general creditors. It seems to me that a creditor who has put himself in a position to invoke and to deserve the exercise of certain powers conferred on the Court, is entitled to the Court's order in his favour. In fine, all these possible disadvantages, more or less remote, must be taken to have been within the contemplation of the Legislature, which yet has seen fit to empower the Court to refuse protection in suitable cases; and I can scarcely imagine a more suitable case than this. As to In re Meghraj Gangabai (4), that being the decision of a single Judge is not binding on this Bench, and there the only point decided was as to the grant of protection pending the inquiry into the insolvent's conduct prior to the Court's decision on his application for discharge. It is true that certain general observations are to be found in the judgment, but they must, I think, be read as limited by the facts then before the Court, and the case cannot, in my opinion, be properly cited as an authority for any hard and fast rule.

For these reasons, I agree that the protection order granted in this case should be set aside.

Order set aside.

Burmese Buddhist Law—Joint property—Partition—Pre-emption—Right of pre-emption, whether exists after partition—Trees attached to land, effect on.

Per Curiam (Hartnoll, J. dissenting).—Under the Burmese Buddhist Law the co-heirs who take part in the partition of immoveable ancestral property have not a right of pre-emption as regards such property after the partition has been effected. [p. 515, col. 1; p. 521, col. 1; p. 526, col. 2.]

Per Sir Charles Fox, C. J., Ormond J. and Twomey J.—The right of pre-emption amongst co-heirs must be recognised only to the extent laid down in section 97 of part 2 of Spark's Code which professes to be a Code of Burmese Law and of the Lex Loci, viz., if a person wishes to sell his share in an undivided ancestral estate he should first offer it to all the co-heirs. They may buy the share jointly or each his separate portion of the share, or one may buy it in trust for the whole according as the heirs may decide among themselves; the seller shall have no voice in the decision and shall not be at liberty to sell his share otherwise than they or a majority of them shall decide. [p. 514, col. 2; p. 523, col. 1.]

Nga Mying v. Mi Baw, (1874) S. J. 39; Ma Ngwe v. Lu Bu, (1877) S. J. 76; Ibrahim Saib v. Muni Mir Udin Saib, 6 M. H. C. R. 26, referred to.

Per Hartnoll, J.—In the case of inherited land inclusive of trees permanently attached to the land, a joint inheritor of such property has a right of pre-emption in respect of such inherited property in the event of one of the joint inheritors desiring to sell his share of such property or such part of the inherited property as he has obtained possession of, in whole or in part, and whether it is joint, undivided or partitioned estate, but in the event of a sale having taken place such right must be asserted promptly and within a reasonable time or it is lost for ever. In asserting such right against a buyer the sum offered must be the sum which the land has cost him. [p. 517, col. 2.]

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

PALETT, J.—(May 19th, 1913.) The second plaintiff Ma Nyein E and the 1st defendant Mg. Tha E are first cousins, being the grand-children of Po Da Lu and Ma Nyein. Upon the death of Po Da Lu and Ma Nyein, certain trees devolved in equal shares upon their son Di Lan and their two grand-children Tha E and Ma Nyein E. The property was first divided five or six years before the suit. Di Lan sold his share to Tha E, who thus became possessed of 2/3rds of the property. Tha E sold his 2/3rds share to the 3rd defendant, who is a stranger. The plaintiffs, Ma Nyein E and her husband, claimed the right of pre-emption. The Township Court held that they had the right but upon appeal by the 3rd defendant the District Court reversed this decision, and the plaintiffs now prefer this second appeal.

The District Court based its decision upon the case of Shwe Eik Ke v. Tha Hla Aung (1), where it was held that upon the division of property amongst children, each child took the particular lot or lots which fell to him or her, free from all obligations as regards pre-emption. It is now contended that that case is distinguishable from the present in that there the litigants were not, as here, the co-heirs who divided the joint property among them, but their descendants, and that the decision was merely that there is no authority for holding that before a Burman Buddhist can sell his property to others, he is bound to offer it first to every one of his relations including those of remote degree. This appears to be the case, but at the same time the expression of opinion referred to above by which the District Judge held himself bound, cannot be regarded as an obiter dictum inasmuch as it formed the basis of the decision that the descendants of the co-heirs who divided the property were free of all obligations as regards pre-emption.

The previous case of Ma Ngwe v. Lu Bu (2) was not referred to in the judgment and was certainly not expressly dissented from. In that case the learned Judicial Commissioner held that after division of ancestral estate the holder thereof being a member of the family wishing to sell the land falling to his share must offer it first to his co-heirs and a sale to a stranger, without such offer being made, is invalid. A similar decision had also been come to in Upper Burma in Maung Shwe Nyan v. Ma So (3), which has been affirmed in the later case of Nga Tin v. Shwe On (4), where it was held that a widow has the right of pre-emption if her co-heirs to her deceased husband's estate wished to sell. The actual decision in Shwe Eik Ke v. Tha Hla Aung (1) has not, so far as I am aware, ever been challenged, but the ground on which it was based, namely, that the right of pre-emption is extinguished by partition of property, appears to me to conflict with the earlier decision in Ma Ngwe v. Lu Bu (2) and with the Upper Burma decisions. I therefore refer for the decision of a Bench of this Court the question:

Have the co-heirs who take part in the partition of immoveable ancestral property, a right of pre-emption as regards such property after the partition has been effected?

Maung Kin, Maung May Oung, and Maung Pu, for the Appellants.

Mr. Rahman, Maung Gyi and Maung Chit Hlaing, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Fox, C. J.—We have had the advantage of having had the question referred, argued by six learned Advocates.

Those who argued in favour of a negative answer contended that there was no right of pre-emption among Burman Buddhists either before or after partition, in that the rulings which recognised such right, were based on a misunderstanding of the texts on which they were based, and they were not justified by the texts. They contended further that their right of pre-emption was not a matter of inheritance, and that it was not a right which should be enforced in the exercise of justice, equity and good conscience.

It is clear that no text of any Dhammathat explicitly provides for such a right, whether it is called a right of a co-heir as such to demand that another co-heir shall sell to him in preference to a stranger to the family, or a right of a co-heir to enforce against one who is not a co-heir a re-sale to him of jointly inherited land sold to him by another co-heir.

The 1st reported ruling of a Court affirming the right, namely Nga Myaing v. Mi Bar, (5) on the face of it professed to be the learned Judge's conclusion from certain passages in the Manugye Dhammathat which do not directly deal with the matter. The 1st text quoted in the judgment enjoins one who has bought land to sell it, if he has to sell it, to the sons and grandsons of the original owner (meaning, I take it, the person from whom he bought) and not to sell to others unless these do not wish to buy it.

This was the Customary Law of the land in 1756 when the Manugye was compiled or issued, but no instance has been cited of any son or grandson of a seller having claimed to exercise, at any time within living memory or since the annexation of any part of Burma by the British Sovereign, a right such as the text would appear to involve. Such a right has nothing to do with inheritance or rights of co-heirs or inherited property.

It applied to all property which had been sold and bought, whether the seller acquired it by his own exertions, or whether he inherited it either solely or jointly with others. In the case of inherited lands sold by a co-heir, the injunction in the text would apply not to the 1st seller, the co-heir, but to the 2nd, the buyer, from him. It seems to me difficult to see how this text could form the basis or even part of the basis of the conclusion that a co-heir as such had a right to demand that a co-heir shall sell to him in preference to a stranger. It was admitted by the learned Advocates arguing for an affirmative answer to the question referred, that the law or custom embodied in this text was not an enforceable law or custom at the present time.

Whatever meaning the author of the passage in the 1st section of the 8th book of the Manugye intended to convey, it is clear that he did not in any part of this section state that a co-heir was not at liberty to sell land he had inherited with others to a stranger without first offering it to his co-heirs and giving them the refusal of it.

This text again does not purport to be confined to the inherited property; it embraces all property which a person may have obtained in any way whatever. The second paragraph deals with the case of a sale to the seller's relations and to a sale to "persons interested" (whatever the expression may mean), and imposes on the would-be seller the duty of first offering it to all these respectively. The law in 1756 was that an owner of land, however he may have obtained it, was obliged, in case he proposed to sell it to any of his relations or to persons interested, to offer it to every one of these respectively.

From these texts, which did not deal directly with the questions before him, Mr. Sandford concluded that in 1874 the possessor of land bought or obtained from a person who had inherited it, was obliged, if he wished to sell it, to offer it first to those who had a right of inheritance in the land. What he exactly meant by "a right of inheritance in the land" is not explained. He went on to draw the further conclusion that a co-heir of undivided ancestral property was bound, under the law contained in the passages he cited, to first offer any such property he wished to sell to those who had a joint right of inheritance with himself. Three years later in Ma Ngwe v. Lu Bu (2), he drew the further conclusion that even after division of ancestral estate the holder of land who obtained portion of it, was bound, if he wished to sell it, to offer it, first, to his co-heirs. The question before him was whether a right of pre-emption existed amongst Burmese Buddhists at the time the case was before him. It could only exist by reason of it being part of their Customary Law. He had no evidence before him proving such a custom, nor had he before him any other materials, recognized by the Evidence Act or by rulings of Courts as materials on which a decision as to the existence of a custom can be based, except two texts which dealt with the rights of alienating property in the Burmese Kingdom more than a century before. He assumed that this part of the Customary Law had continued under both the Burmese and British rules and that it was still prevalent. From this unsound premise, he drew the conclusion that co-heirs had a right, which later on one of his successors confidently asserted, was a right of inheritance.

If the question of the right of pre-emption among co-heirs depended solely on the reasons given in favour of it in Mr. Sandford's judgments, I should be prepared to hold that these were decisions which should not be followed, because they are not founded on materials recognized by law as the basis for a decision that a binding custom prevailed at the time the question as to its existence had to be decided.

There was, however, at the time material upon which he might have legitimately held that our Courts must recognize a right of pre-emption amongst Burmese Buddhist co-heirs to a limited extent. After the annexation of the province of Pegu to the British dominions, the British Authorities instituted enquiries as to the prevailing customs of the people of the country with a view to affording some guide to the Courts in the administration of justice among them. The result appears in what is known as Spark's Code, the correct title of which is "Civil Code of the Province of Pegu sanctioned by resolutions of His Honour the President in Council recorded on the 4th November 1859 and 17th January 1860." The rules embodied in it were at the time equivalent to legislation. It may be taken as certain that they were followed by the Courts. In clause or section 97 of Part II, which professed to be a code of Burmese Law and of the lex loci, it is laid down that if a person wished to sell his share in an undivided ancestral estate, he should first offer it to all the co-heirs. They may buy the share jointly or each buy his separate portion of the share, or one may buy in trust for the whole according as the heirs may decide among themselves; the seller shall have no voice in the decision and shall not be at liberty to sell his share otherwise than they or a majority of them shall decide.

In view of the British authorities, having at an early stage recognized and adopted these rules as being parts of the Customary Law of the land, I am of opinion that to the extent laid down in this section of Spark's Code, but to this extent only, the right of pre-emption amongst co-heirs must be recognized by our Courts. If any one claims to have it farther extended, he must prove in one or more of the recognized modes of proving a custom that the right is now greater than what it was declared to be in that Code. I may remark that in the case in which this reference has been made, the Burmese District Judge who dealt with the case was, at the time, one of the oldest of the Burmese officials. His view was that the right of pre-emption among co-heirs ceased after partition of the inherited or ancestral property.

It appears to me unnecessary to enter into the question of whether the matter is one of inheritance. Even if it is not, it is one in which the Customary Law must be applied.

In regard to the contention that the right is not one which should be enforced in the exercise of justice, equity and good conscience, the case is not on all fours with the case which the Madras High Court had to deal with in Ibrahim Saib v. Muni Mir Udin Saib (6). In that case, the learned Judges entered into the question of whether the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption was consistent with equity and good conscience, only because they stated that the Muhammadan Law had not been received in that province as one of the sources of law in regard to the rights of alienating land. In this province the Customary Law as regards pre-emption has been received and adopted, and it is not open to this Court to disregard it on the ground that it is opposed to justice, equity and good conscience.

For the reason I have previously given, I answer the question referred in the negative.

HARTNOLL, J.—The question which has been referred to us for decision is:—

Have the co-heirs who take part in the partition of immoveable ancestral property a right of pre-emption as regards such property after the partition has been effected?

The facts as set out in the reference show that the question refers to the case of Burman Buddhists, and that the reference has been considered necessary in that the learned Judge considered that there is a conflict of authority between the cases of Shwe Eik Ke v. Tha Hla Aung (1) and Ma Ngwe v. Lu Bu (2). He has also pointed out that the decision in the case of Ma Ngwe v. Lu Bu (2) has been followed in the cases of Maung Shwe Nyun v. Ma So (3) and Nga Tin v. Shwe On (4). It has been urged that the matter is not one for decision according to the rule of Buddhist Law, but that it should be decided according to the ordinary Civil Law. Having regard to the provisions of section 13, clause 1, of the Burma Laws Act, 1898, the point arises as to whether the matter is one of inheritance or not. If it is, by the provisions of that section, the Buddhist Law must form the rule of decision, and the general considerations put forward by Holloway, C. J., in the case of Ibrahim Saib v. Muni Mir Udin Saib (6) cannot, in my opinion, be allowed to prevail. If the rule of Buddhist Law is applicable and the present conditions of society in Burma are unsuited to such rule of law, it is open to the Government to legislate and alter the law: but where the rule of Buddhist Law is to be followed as laid down in the Burma Laws Act, this Court has no option but to follow such rule. The question of whether the right of pre-emption as claimed by Burman Buddhists is one concerning inheritance has been pronounced on in several cases, namely, Ibrahim v. Arasi (7), Apana Charan Chowdhry v. Shwe Nu (8), Maung Shwe Nyun v. Ma So (3) and Nga Tin v. Shwe On (4). The second case quoted is one of my own. The right of pre-emption need not necessarily be one concerning inheritance at all. For instance, in Muhammadan Law according to the definition of it given by Petheram, C. J., in the case of Gobind Dayal v. Inayat Ullah (9), the matter cannot be said to be one of inheritance; but the right as claimed by Burman Buddhists as co-heirs seems to me to be beyond doubt one that concerns inheritance. It is not claimed by co-heirs on the ground that they possess neighbouring lands, but on the ground that they are co-heirs and it relates to inherited property—property that has descended from a common ancestor or that has come from a common relative. It is by virtue of relationship to such a person and co-heirship that such a right is claimed and, therefore, the right seems to me to be an incident of the law of inheritance. I, therefore, consider that the Buddhist Law should form the rule of decision in deciding the question asked us.

It was then urged that the property to be dealt with in the reference is trees and the rule of Buddhist Law only applied to land and not to trees. The property in dispute is not the produce of the trees but the trees themselves, which are immoveable property being permanently attached to the earth.

The text on which the Burman Buddhists' right of pre-emption is based, may be said to be as follows:—

1. Manukye—the 36th section of the 7th Book and the 1st section of the 8th Book.

2. A passage from the Manu Wannana.

3. A passage from the Manu Thara Shwe Myin.

4. A passage from the Winicchaya Pakasani.

5. The texts collected under section 309 of the Kinwin Mingyi's Digest, Volume I.

As regards the Manukye, I have had translations made of the two sections from Mr. Richardson's text of the Manukye and from the copy that belonged to the Kinwin Mingyi that is kept in the Bernard Free Library. They have been made and checked by Maung Tan Nyein, Government Translator, and Maung Tha Zan Aung, Assistant Registrar of this Court. They are attached to this judgment.

Translations of the passages from the Manu Wannana and Manu Thara Shwe Nyin will be found in the case of Ng Myaing v. Mi Baw (5). A translation has been made of section 93 of the Winicchaya Pakasani Dhammathat and is attached to this judgment. As has been laid down recently by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ma Nhin Bwin v. U Shwe Gone (10), most weight has to be attached to the Manukye Dhammathat.

too clear in its meaning. In section 1 of the 8th Book, the important passage is that beginning with the words "Excellent King, as regards the lands called 'Myethe' and 'Myeshin.'" They are explained and amplified by the passages from the other Dhammathats. According to Dr. Forchhammer's essay on the sources and development of Burmese Law from the era of the first introduction of the Indian Law to the time of the British occupation of Pegu, the Manukye was compiled about the year 1756, A. D., by Mahasiri Uttamagoya, minister of military works, and the Manu Thara Shwe Myin in 1771, A. D., by the nobleman Kyaw Din, the same author compiling the Wunnana a few years later and also the Winicchaya Pakasani. The latter three books were therefore compiled not long after the Manukye. Taking the texts together, the general principle apparent is that the land is to be kept in the same family, if possible. Even an original purchaser or his children are to sell the land back to the family of the original vendor. It is not claimed that so wide a custom as this last one now exists—indeed learned Counsel Maung May Oung and Maung Kin, who appear to support the right, state that it has fallen into desuetude: but it is claimed that if a man wishes to sell inherited property, the custom that he must give his co-heirs the option of purchasing it first, whether the property is joint undivided property or partitioned estate, still exists, and it is urged that such a custom has not fallen into desuetude. The passage in the 1st section of the 8th Book of the Manukye beginning with the words I have set out above, as explained by the passages in the different Dhammathats but especially that of the Winicchaya Pakasani, seems to me to support the contention that the Buddhist Law in the Dhammathats is as claimed. It should be noted that the 1st section of the 8th Book of the Manukye makes "Myethe" and "Myeshin" lands include all sorts of inherited lands. The words of the section are no doubt involved, but the passage I have referred to above seems to me to give co-heirs a right of pre-emption and this is the more apparent when the words are compared with the passages from the other Dhammathats. There is no indication that I can see that the right is confined to undivided estate, indeed the indications are the other way. Each and every relative is to be asked and the right is extended to a purchase by the heirs of the original seller from the heirs of the original buyer. As regards the custom having fallen into desuetude, the case of Ma Ngwe v. Lu Bu (2) is one relating to partitioned estate. It is not quite clear whether the case of Manug Shwe Nyun v. Ma So (3) applied to partitioned estate. But in all probability it did. That of Nga Tin v. Shwe On (4) clearly refers to partitioned estate. As far as my knowledge of the custom goes (and I have been in the province since 1853, being an administrative officer up to 1906), I have heard of the custom from time to time and though I cannot give specific instances where it has been applied to partitioned estate other than judicial decisions, I have certainly had the impression that it is not confined to the case of undivided ancestral property, and the desire to keep the property in the family is widespread and acted on by the Burman Buddhists. I would, therefore, hold that the fact that inherited property has been the subject of partition, should not operate to prevent it being subject to the right claimed.

The word "ancestral" used in connection with the right seems to be a misnomer; for the word "ancestral" should be substituted the word "inherited". It was also allowed at the hearing that the head-note to the case of Ma Ngwe v. Lu u (2) is too wide in declaring that a sale to a stranger without the offer first being made to co-heirs is invalid. This appears to be the case. The sale is only voidable at the option of co-heirs as long as they object to the sale within a reasonable time and offer to pay and pay the price for which the property has changed hands. Otherwise, the sale is valid and cannot be impugned. The provision that the right must be claimed promptly and without unreasonable delay, is the great safeguard against injustice and the abuse of it. The question of what persons should be included under the term "co-heirs" as possessing the right, remains for consideration and is not an easy one to decide generally, but for the purpose of this reference, it is not a difficult one. In the present case, we are only concerned with persons who have jointly divided ancestral property.

As regards the point whether the right should be extended to trees as well as land, considering that trees are permanently attached to the land I think it reasonable and convenient to hold that if the right exists at all, it should also extend to trees.

I would, therefore, answer the reference as follows:—

In the case of inherited land inclusive of trees permanently attached to the land, a joint inheritor of such property has a right of pre-emption in respect of such inherited property in the event of one of the joint inheritors desiring to sell his share of such property or such part of the inherited property as he has obtained possession of, in whole or in part and whether it is joint, undivided or partitioned estate, but in the event of a sale having taken place, such right must be asserted promptly and within a reasonable time or it is lost for ever. In asserting such a right against a buyer, the sum offered must be the sum which the land has cost him.

ORMOND, J.—The question referred is:—Have the co heirs who take part in the partition of immoveable inherited property, a right of pre-emption as regards such property after the partition has been effected? From the case submitted, it is clear that the question refers to the right of pre-emption in respect of a sale by a co-heir and does not refer to a sale by a purchaser from a co-heir. It is admitted that in respect of a sale by a purchaser from a co-heir, any right of pre-emption would not now be recognised.

In 1877 Mr. Sandford, the Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma, in Ma Ngwe v. Lu Bu (2) held that ancestral immoveable property that had been partitioned, was liable to the right of pre-emption in the same manner as if it had not been partitioned.

In 1901 Mr. Justice Fox in Shwe Eik Ke v. Tha Hla Aung (1) held that there was no right of pre-emption after partition. Ma Ngwe's case (2) was not cited, but the case upon which it was based viz., Nga Myaing v. Mi Baw (5), was cited.

In 1901 Mr. Justice Hartnoll in Mo Thi v. Tha Kwe (11) followed the decision in Ma (11) 4 L. B. R. 128; 14 Bur. L. R. 205.

Ngwe's case (2) and held that where a widow after partition sold her share to a stranger, her son had the right of pre-emption as to the whole.

Ma Ngwe's case (2) has been referred to apparently with approval in (obiter dicta), in other cases, but Ma Thi's case (11) is the only reported case that I can find in Lower Burma [besides Ma Ngwe's case (2)] in which it has been actually held that there is a right of pre-emption in respect of partitioned inherited property.

In Upper Burma, Ma Ngwe's case (2) has been followed by Mr. White, Judicial Commissioner, in Maung Shwe Ngun v. Ma So (3) and by Mr. Shaw in 1906 in Nga Tin v. Shwe On (4), who disregarded the decision in Shwe Eik Ke's case (1) because Ma Ngwe's case (2) had not been considered. In Nga Tin's case (4), it was held that where three sons inherited property which was partitioned and two of them sold their portions to a stranger, the widow of the other son had a right of pre-emption. The fact that the widow had a son who was a grandson of the father of the three sons is mentioned, but it does not affect the principle of the decision. In the case of Maung La Dok v. Ma Po (12) (which related to the sale of an undivided share), Mr. White held that the fact that portions of the estate had been previously sold to strangers without protest, did not affect the right of pre-emption in respect of subsequent sales. From these decisions, it would seem that if, say, three sons inherited property, one of whom died leaving only a widow who married again and then died, this second husband would have the right of pre-emption in the case of a sale by either of the other two sons, although he is in no way connected with the family and although he or his deceased wife or her former husband may have sold to a stranger the whole or part of the former husband's partitioned share in the ancestral property; and this clog is put upon the free transfer of land because of the principle enunciated by Mr. Sandford in Ma Ngwe's case (2) of maintaining intact the family estate. And if a Burman who has inherited land wishes after partition to sell his land, he must either obtain the consent of all those who inherited other lands from the same previous owner and their successors by inheritance and the prospective heirs of these persons, or the purchaser takes the land subject to the right of pre-emption in any of these persons. Mr. Sandford at page 77 says, "Although I am unwilling to extend this doctrine of pre-emption beyond its strict limits, yet I cannot see my way to disallow the appellant's argument." His reasoning is confused, for he speaks of land sold by an original owner as "once ancestral and separated from the family estate by the sale to the purchaser from the original owner." If property once ancestral had become separated from the family estate by a sale to a stranger, the vendor must have been, not the original owner, but an heir, and the property sold must have been partitioned. But if co-heirs have a right of pre-emption after partition, they had the right at the time of the sale to the stranger.

The 'ratio decidendi' in Ma Ngwe's case (2) is as follows: a purchaser, if he wishes to sell, must offer the land to the heirs of the original owner; an heir after partition is in the position of a purchaser; therefore, if he wishes to sell, he must offer it to the heirs of the last owner, i. e., to his co-heirs.

But it is only the purchaser from an original owner that has to offer the land to the 'successor' or 'descendants' of his vendor, if he wishes to sell. The purchaser from a derivative owner, takes the land outright and free from any right of redemption which would show, I think, that he takes it free from any right of pre-emption. It cannot be held, therefore, by analogy that an heir, if he wishes to sell his partitioned share of inherited land, is under a duty to offer it first to his co-heirs.

The texts upon which Mr. Sandford bases his decision have not been discussed in later decisions, but in my opinion they show, as regards 'Myeshin' land, with which alone we have to deal, that it is only the purchaser from an original owner that has to offer the land (if he wishes to sell) to the successor or descendants of the original owner: and that in all other cases (which would include a sale by an heir after partitions) the purchaser has a full right to the land. The texts relied on by Mr. Sandford are the 36th section of the 7th Book of the Manukye Dhammathat, the 1st section of the 8th Book and passages from the Manu Wunnana and Manu Thara Shwe Myin Dhammathats. They are set out in Nga Myaing v. Mi Baw (5).

MAUNG YE NAN O U. AUNG MYAT SAN.

I have had the first section of the 8th Book translated as literally as possible and the following is an epitome, so far as the section affects the question before us, which I have arranged in paragraphs for the sake of convenience.

1. It specifies what are 'Myethe' lands and what are 'Myeshin' lands. 'Myethe' lands are redeemable at any time by the true sons or descendants or partner of the former owner; though the original grantee sell the land outright or mortgage it, they have the right to do so.

2. 'Myeshin' lands are of six kinds:—(i) inherited lands which are not 'Myethe'; (ii) lands purchased; (iii) lands obtained on another's going away and abandoning them; (iv) lands obtained by open occupation without interruption for 10 years; (v) lands obtained by clearing the forest and cultivating them and (vi) lands obtained by allotment from a public authority, e. g., a Thugy or land measurer, etc.

3. If the original owner of 'Myeshin' lands of the last four descriptions sells them, the seller or, if he is dead and has left a successor, his 'successor' may redeem them at the buyer's death, but not during the life time of the buyer.

4. As to 'Myethe' and 'Myeshin' lands generally (subject presumably to what has been stated above) if lands are sold outright, the buyer has a full right to them, according to the terms of his contract of sale—they are not redeemable by the relations or descendants of the original owner.

5. If any of the aforesaid lands are to be sold even among relations, let the vendor offer the land to every one of his relations who is a heir. If it is sold to one relative, and another relative, having previously refused to buy, comes in within a year and wishes to buy, he may join in the purchase, "as they are relatives and the sale must be effected as among relatives."

6. If a sale of land is to be made to one having an interest, the vendor should offer it to all who have an interest: they shall decide which of them is to buy and the vendor shall not sell to any one else.

7. If 'this paddy land' has been mortgaged to one, all those interested may take over the mortgage in equal shares, provided they come in within a year if the mortgage was made openly.

8. If 'this land', after having been mortgaged for a long time with one, is sold, let all those that have an interest buy it outright.

The rules relating to 'Myethe' land are different to those relating to 'Myeshin' land. And a sale by an original owner is on a different footing to a sale by a person who has acquired the land by inheritance or by purchase. Thus in the case of a sale of 'Myethe' land, it is redeemable at any time by the descendants or by the partner of a former owner unless it was sold by the original grantee. In the case of a sale of 'Myeshin' land by a person who had obtained it as an original owner in any of the following ways, viz., on another's going away and abandoning it, by open occupation without interruption for 10 years, by clearing the forest and cultivating it, or by allotment from a public authority—the land is redeemable by the vendor or by his 'successor' at the buyer's death. And in all other cases (paragraph 4 above) the buyer has a full right to them.

In the present case we are dealing with a sale of 'Myeshin' land which the vendor obtained by inheritance.

The first part of the above section (represented by the first 4 paragraphs above) deals with the right of redemption and not with the right of pre-emption. The right of redemption is, of course, different to the right of pre-emption—it is a right to buy back the land at the original price though the owner may not wish to sell it. But this part of the section throws some light on the law of pre-emption; for the original owner or his successor, having the right of redemption at the purchaser's death, would naturally have the right of pre-emption in respect of a sale by the purchaser in his life-time. The latter right would be merely a corollary of the first. And the passage from the Manu Wunnana reads as if the right of pre-emption during the purchaser's life-time is dependent upon or is derived from the right of redemption after his death. Both this passage and the 36th section of the 7th Book of the Manukye clearly refer to a contemplated sale by a purchaser from an original owner only. The passage from Manu Thara Shwe Myin expressly states that it refers to the law on the sale and purchase of 'Myethe' land with which we are not concerned.

MAUNG YE NAN O v. AUNG MYAT SAN.

There is, therefore, nothing in these passages to show that a purchaser of a 'Myeshin' land from a derivative (i. e., not an original), owner, cannot sell to whom he chooses.

It is stated in section 1 that the purchaser of 'Myeshin' land takes it free from any right of redemption during his life-time, if he bought from an original owner; and takes it absolutely free from any right of redemption in all other cases. At the time that he buys it, therefore, whether from an original owner or from a derivative owner, (e. g., an heir after partition), there can be no right of pre-emption in any one, for that would be in effect a right of redemption as against the purchaser at the time of his purchase. If this view is correct, the first portion of the section shows that there was no right of pre-emption as contended for in this case.

The matter dealt with in paragraph 5 above is quite distinct, I think, from the matter dealt with in paragraph 6:—the first deals with a sale (presumably by a sole owner) to a relation; the seller is directed to offer the land to every one of his relations who is an heir, if the land is sold to a relation, any other relation of the seller (who is an heir) may come within a year and join in the purchase, but there is nothing to prohibit the seller from selling to a stranger instead of a relation, if he wishes. The object of this provision is apparently to prevent family disputes and jealousies which might arise if the seller was allowed to sell to one relation (who is an heir) in preference to another.

The second case (paragraph 6) deals with the sale of a partial interest in land; the seller is directed to offer it to all the others who are interested in the land, and they are to decide who is to buy; if the seller refuses to sell to their nominee, he is expressly precluded from selling to another. This provision would apply to joint owners, i. e., co-heirs before partition; and it is, I think, the ground for the rule of pre-emption in respect of a sale by an heir before partition. After partition the former co-heirs cannot be said to be interested in the shares of the other former co-heirs, and, therefore, this passage would not apply to a sale of partitioned inherited property. An heir after partition is virtually in the position of a stranger who has purchased part of the inherited lands with the consent of all those interested in the inheritance. Ordinarily in a partition, one co-sharer, in consideration of giving up his rights over the whole, is allotted by the other co-sharers a portion which he is to enjoy separately and without interference by them;—and I see no reason why this should not be the case in a partition of inherited property.

The passage from the Vinicchaya Pakasani Dhammathat cited by Mr. May Oung does not, I think, throw any light on the question before us. It merely shows that where co-heirs have a right of pre-emption, their right of pre-emption takes precedence of a right of pre-emption in adjoining or neighbouring owners.

The case in support of the right of pre-emption as contended for in this reference is based upon the passage referred to in paragraph 5 above:—the passage is taken as referring only to the case of a sale by an heir of inherited property; and because an heir wishing to sell 'even' to a relation is directed to offer the land to every one and all of his relations who are heirs (the word "heirs" is taken to mean "heirs of the previous owner"), a general right of pre-emption is taken to be implied in co-heirs when an heir is about to sell to a stranger. If this is correct, the right of pre-emption would not be in the co-heirs generally, but in such of the co-heirs only as were related to the seller.

But the passage expressly applies to a sale of 'any of the aforesaid lands' and in my opinion it applies equally to a sale by a purchaser as to a sale by an heir. If so, it is clear that the word "amwezaing" must mean the heirs of the seller. The word 'relations' clearly means the relations of the seller and grammatically the word 'heirs' would also mean heirs of the seller:—and it has been so construed, I think, both by Mr. Sandford in Nga Mying v. Mi Ban (5) and also by Mr. Richardson in his translation of the Manukye. It is clear also that neither Major Spark in 1860 nor Mr. Sandford deduced from this passage any right of pre-emption in co-heirs. If there had been a recognised right of pre-emption in co-heirs after partition, it is almost impossible to suppose that the compiler of section 1. Chapter VIII, when laying down directions in the case of a seller to a relation, should not have enunciated the rule in a direct manner; or that Major Spark in his Code of Burmese Law should not have stated the rule of pre-emption as applying to all sales of inherited property. The effect of the word 'even', is, I think, to show that the rule there laid down is a special rule which is applicable only in the case of a sale to a relation. There is nothing in this passage to show that a seller (including an heir) may not sell to a stranger in preference to a relation or heir, if he wishes to do so.

For the reasons stated above, I do not think there is any right of pre-emption in respect of a sale of inherited land after partition and I would answer the question referred to us in the negative.

TWOMEY, J.—It is only if the right of pre-emption by co-heirs is a matter relating to inheritance that the Buddhist Law forms the rule of decision under section 13, Burma Laws Act. Such a right was first authoritatively recognized by our Courts in the rulings of Mr. Sandford, Judicial Commissioner, and he seems to have taken for granted that it was a matter of inheritance. In all subsequent rulings also, the applicability of the Buddhist Law has been regarded as beyond dispute. Mr. Hosking, Judicial Commissioner, in Ebrahim v. Arasi (7) said definitely "the right of pre-emption among Buddhists is an incident of the law of inheritance and succession and cannot be separated from it." At the hearing of the present reference, some arguments were brought forward in opposition to this assumption. It was contended that a sale of land by a co-heir is a matter relating not to inheritance, but to the transfer of immoveable property. The same might be said with nearly as much force of a sale of land by a Burmese Buddhist widow. Yet if she sells without the consent of her eldest son, he has a right under the law of inheritance to avoid the same as regards his $\frac{1}{4}$ th share. In both cases, the matter is primarily one of transferring immoveable property, but in the one case as much as the other it may be said that the matter also relates to inheritance inasmuch as the transfer can be impugned by a co-heir other than the transferor. Then, it is pointed out that the rules as to pre-emption are not found in Book X of the Manukye which deals specially with inheritance, but in Book VIII, and that the Kinwun Mingyi in compiling his Digests of the Dhammathats omitted to include any text on the subject of pre-emption (except in section 309 of the Digest to which I will refer later on). No inference can be drawn from the fact that the rules in question are in one book rather than another. Colonel Horace Browne, Commissioner of Pegu, pointed out that the Manukye is destitute of all attempt at arrangement, resembling other Dhammathats in this defect: "The provisions relating to adoption, for example, are found in four or five different parts of the work, those on divorce in a dozen different places in juxtaposition with some other uncongenial subjects such as debts or bailments, as if the book were simply a collection of placita of different judgments in chronological sequence, and not according to the subject-matter of the judgments".* Professor Forchammer in the Jardine Prize Essay also commented on the "variegated appearance" of the Manukye and pointed out that "it does not attempt to arrange the subject-matter or to explain or reconcile contradictory passages".† As a matter of fact Book X is clearly not exhaustive, for there are further rules for the partition of property after the owner's death in Book XI. To explain the omission from the Inheritance Digest of the rules about pre-emption in Manukye, Book VIII, and the cognate rules in other Dhammathats, it may be conjectured that the Kinwun Mingyi regarded them as matters relating to inheritance only in a secondary sense and wished to confine his compilation to the texts dealing with the partition of property on the owner's death. The same remark applies to the Kinwun Mingyi's Attathankepa Wunnana, the latest of all the Dhammathats which contains no reference at all to the subject of pre-emption. In my opinion the view hitherto taken by this Court and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Upper Burma is correct. The right of a co-heir as such to demand that another co-heir shall sell to him in preference to a stranger, is part of his inherited right and may properly be classed as a matter of inheritance.

The law to be applied is the Buddhist Law. As to what that law is, the following passage from Col. Horace Browne's preface to the Manu Wunnana (U Tet To's Edition printed in 1878) is of interest:—

The Buddhist Law, properly so-called, is contained in the "Pie-ta-gat-thoon-boon" (the three baskets) divided into the Thoot-tan, Wie-nee and Abhid-hamma (or discourses on discipline and pre-eminent truth). Of this, Wie-nee contains many passages that are law with regard to the religious usages of the people but the rules that govern inheritance, marriage, divorce, etc., among the laity are contained in totally distinct works known generally as "the Dhammathat" or "the Dhammathat of Manu", which form no part of the Buddhist Law. These works in fact, as stated before, are more Brahminical than Buddhist and the term "Buddhist Law" when applied to them is a misnomer.

Mr. Justice Irwin also dealt with the matter in Thein Pe v. U Pet (13) and remarked that the Buddhist Law to be administered under section 13, Burma Laws Act, is "not the Dhammathats pure and simple but on the contrary that it is a Customary Law or, in other words it is the body of customs observed by the Burmese Buddhists, and that the Dhammathats form one of the most important sources of information about that body of customs. Further, customs have a tendency to change and the texts of a Dhammathat cannot be assumed to be a perfectly correct exposition of existing customs."

In his preface to the Inheritance Digest, the Kinwan Mingyi defines a Dhammathat as "a collection of rules which are in accordance with custom and usage and which are referred to in the settlement of disputes relating to persons and property." This is in accordance with Professor Forchammer's description of the Manukye as a careful record of the laws, usages, customs and habits actually existing in the dominions of *Alompra.

It is not necessary to consider how far the Dhammathats are of Buddhistic origin. The Burmese certainly regard them as the chief repository of their personal law as Buddhists and they will no doubt continue to be the main guide of the Courts in deciding matters covered by section 13, Burma Laws Act, with the reservation, however, that a rule or a practice which is shown to have fallen into desuetude will not be enforced.

It has also been argued that the right of pre-emption hitherto recognized by the Codes has no real basis in the Buddhist Law and it is necessary to deal with this point at some length. Mr. Sandford's two chief rulings on the subject are Nga Myaing v. Mi Baw (5) and Ma Ngwe v. Lu Bu (2). In the former, the learned Judicial Commissioner held (a) that when ancestral land has passed into the hands of third persons, the heirs of the original owner have a right to the first offer, should the possessor wish to sell and (b) that one of the co-heirs of an ancestral undivided estate, should he wish to sell his share, is bound to offer it first to his co-heirs. In the second decision, the application of the rule was extended to land which has been actually partitioned amongst the co-heirs. The Judicial Commissioner relied on section 36 of Book VII and section 1 of Book VIII, Manukye section 458, Manu Wunnana, and section 211, *Manu Thara Shwe Myin. These Dhammathats do not lay down explicitly that a man wishing to sell inherited land to an outsider must first offer it to his co-heirs. But section 36, Book VII, Manukye, certainly provides that when a man who has bought land wishes to re-sell it, he is bound to give the first refusal to the sons and grandsons of the original owner. Mr. Sandford considered that it would be illogical to hold that a member of the family is less bound to regard the family interest in severing the family estates than a stranger. Hence his ruling in Ma Ngwe's case (2). Though the rule requiring a stranger to give the first refusal to the descendants of the original owner is mentioned, in the above cases, the question of validity of the rule did not actually arise as they were cases in which the seller was a co-heir. The rule has never been authoritatively recognized by our Courts as having validity at the present day and it is admitted by the learned Counsel in the present case to be no longer part of the custom of the country. However explicitly a particular rule may be laid down in the Dhammathats, it is clear, I think, that our Courts will not adopt it if it is admitted on all hands to have fallen into desuetude. The rule binding strangers being, therefore, no longer enforceable, it becomes a question whether the rule which Mr. Sandford deduced from it so as to restrict a co-heir alienating his share, should not also be abrogated. There might be good grounds for abrogating it if it depended only on section 36 of Chapter VII. But the effect of Chapter VIII, section 1, has also to be considered. It is true that this section provides no more than section 36 of Chapter VII for the case of a co-heir selling to a stranger, but it clearly curtails a co-heir's power of alienating to another co-heir, by requiring him to offer the land first to the general body of co-heirs and to let them decide which of them is to buy or whether more than one should buy in equal shares.

It is noteworthy that the law of pre-emption based on Chapter VIII, section 1, was officially recognised by the British Government in 1860, when Major Spark's Code was issued in a Government publication called "Civil Code of the Province of Pegu". It is described in the preface as "an attempt to combine into one harmonious Code the written law (i.e., as contained in the Manukye Dhammathat) with the lex loci or local custom". The preface goes on to say that "experienced natives have been consulted, former judicial proceedings and precedents have been considered and every endeavour has been made to prepare such a Code of law as will be welcomed by the people and become the standard law of the Province".

Section 97 of Major Spark's Code is as follows:—

SALE AND RIGHT OF PRE-EMPTION.

"If a person wish to sell his share in an undivided ancestral estate, he should first offer it to all the co-heirs. They may buy the share jointly or each buy his separate portion of the share, or one may buy in trust for the whole, according as the co-heirs shall decide among themselves; the seller shall have no voice in the decision, and shall not be at liberty to sell his share otherwise than they, or a majority of them, shall decide".

There is a reference to Manukye, Book VIII, section 1, in the margin as the authority on which section 97 is based. It will be noticed that Major Spark's Code applies the rule only to undivided ancestral estate. Also it may be noted that section 97 is not included in Major Spark's chapter on Inheritance (Chapter VI) but in a chapter headed "Of immoveable property" (chapter VII). I mention this matter only as showing that shortly after the annexation of Pegu, the law of pre-emption was regarded by the British Authority as part of the existing Customary Law.

Section 1 of Chapter 8, Manukye, begins with a classification of lands into Myethe (literally dead land), and Myeshin (literally live land). Myethe lands are those which were held as an appanage or emolument of some office (e.g., lands attached to the office of village headmen) or by some feudal tenure (e.g., lands assigned to a company of soldiers for their subsistence). Myeshin lands are all kinds of private land. The Myethe lands were impartible, descending lineally whether in the male line or the female line with the office or service in respect of which they were allotted and they were not liable to partition among the heirs of a deceased holder. The distinction between Myethe and Myeshin is now of merely historical interest. There are still Thugyis' lands (headmen's allotments), but such lands are altogether inalienable. In Upper Burma they are a species of State land, while in Lower Burma they are held by the headmen as lessees from Government on special conditions. In the present case as in all cases where a right of pre-emption is claimed, we are concerned only with private land which in former times would have fallen in the category of Myeshin.

The section deals with two cases in which a right of pre-emption is given. The first is a case of sale amongst blood relations (* * * * ). In such a case the land has to be offered to all those of kindred ( * * Amyo) with the seller who have an interest in the inheritance (* * * Amwezain) i.e., the inheritance to which the land appertains. I think the seller's co-heirs are clearly indicated by the term Amyo Amwezain. If one of them has bought while another has refused, the latter can still come in within a year and claim an equal share () in the purchase. From the concluding words ( * * * *)

MAUNG YE NAN O V. AUNG MYAT SAN.

* * ) as well as the opening words cited above, it is clear that the seller and the purchaser all belong to the same family. The second case relates to transactions between "persons interested" ( * *).

The seller cannot sell to one of the persons interested without first offering to all of them and they are to decide amongst themselves which of them is to purchase. In this case also, it seems that the transaction contemplated, is between consanguineous relations, for it is provided that if the seller refuses to abide by the decision of the "persons interested" as to who should buy, he must bear all the expenses of the resulting litigation and "may not plead as an excuse descent from a common great-grandfather."

The passage "he may not sell to another" (* * ) appears to be merely an amplification of what precedes. By "another" ( * ) in this context, I understand the writer to mean another of the "persons interested." It is not equivalent here to ( * *) a stranger. I cannot understand the writer's object in stating the second of the two cases, for it seems to be already covered by the first. "Relations interested" are all included in "relations interested in the inheritance."

It is necessary to note that according to the Kinwun Mingyi's palm-leaf text in the Bernard Free Library, the case which I have referred to as the second case does not relate exclusively to land but to animate or inanimate property.

Richardson's translation of section 1, Book VIII, is incorrect and the translation given in Nga Myaing v. Ma Baw (5) also contains mistakes. I have prepared a fresh translation of the relevant parts of the section and append it to this judgment.

It is remarkable that while a co-heir is expressly restricted if he proposes to sell to another co-heir, there should be no express rule curtailing his power of alienation to strangers. The explanation is probably that the case of a sale among relations is to be taken as an extreme case and this conjecture is to some extent supported by the occurrence of the word (* * even) in the introductory clause. The clause (* * *) means "even amongst blood relations" and Mr. Sandford was, I think, justified in inferring that if such a restriction is imposed on a co-heir selling even to another co-heir, the same principle should apply with added force where he proposes to sell it to a stranger. This seems to be a reasonable and equitable construction having regard to the want of precision in the Dhammathats and the elliptical language of this and many other passages.

The extracts given in Nga Myaing's case (5) from the Manu Wunnana and the Manu Thara Shwe Myin are hardly relevant, for the actual texts show that they relate only to Myethe land. It may well have been the policy of the ministers and others who compiled the Dhammathats to give special facilities for pre-emption in the case of Myethe lands which formed the means of subsistence of large classes of State servants. Moreover, these texts do not touch the case with which we are immediately concerned, namely, that of a co-heir selling his property to an outsider. The Wunnana text relates to the case of an outside purchaser's children who desire to re-sell the land. The Thara Shwe Myin deals with the right of redemption from the outside purchaser by the children of the original owner, a right which admittedly does not exist at the present day.

Section 93* of the Winichaya Pakasani is relied upon by Mr. May Oung as supporting the view taken in Mr. Sandford's rulings. But no great weight can be attached to it. It provides in general terms that if land is to be sold, the co-heirs (* * *) should be preferred as purchasers to neighbouring house-holders and land-owners. But it lays down no procedure for pre-emption like the procedure in the Manukye, Book VIII, section 1, and it reads more like a moral precept than a positive rule of law.

The only other authority cited at the hearing is section 309 of the Inheritance Digest, which gives an abstract of Manukye, Book X, section 56, and of the cognate texts in other Dhammathats. The texts in section 309 provide that when a childless husband and wife die one after the other i. e., at a considerable interval, certain distant relatives of the last to die shall inherit the whole of the joint estate, but the relatives of the first to die are given a right of pre-emption as regards his or her hereditary property. The words "hereditary property" in the English translation of the Manukye, section 56, corresponds to the expression (* * ) in the Burmese and the same expression occurs in the Dhamma and Amweban extracts, while the Dayajja uses the form ( * ). From the use of the word ( *) (meaning in the context "line of succession"), I think, that the hereditary property referred to here is the impartible property which descends from father to son as an appanage or emolument of office, cf. texts in section 30 of the Digest. In the case of land this would, of course, be Myethe. It may, therefore, be inferred that the right of pre-emption spoken of in section 309 applies only to Myethe and as already remarked, we are not now concerned with rights of pre-emption which existed in respect of such land.

*or "Common Ancestor",

MAUNG YE NAN O U. AUNG MYAT SAN.

It may be said, therefore, to sum up this branch of the matter, that the Manukye Book VIII, section 1, is the only text which furnishes substantial basis for Mr. Sandford's rulings about pre-emption so far as Myeshin lands, i. e., ordinary heritable and transferable lands are concerned. But looking to the pre-eminent authority of the Manukye, I think the Courts should continue to recognize the right as an integral part of the Buddhist Law of inheritance.

It has been urged that the custom is archaic and that it is unsuited to the present order of society. It is archaic in the sense that it is of ancient origin, but there is no reason to hold that it has become obsolete. With reasonable limitations, the custom should not operate as a serious clog on transfers of land, and in any case we cannot reject it merely on this ground if it is found to be an integral part of the Buddhist Law.

Touching the origin of the right I doubt whether it is derived from the alleged desire to keep the family estate in the possession of the family (except perhaps in the case of Myethe lands). The ordinary rules of inheritance in the Dhammathats do not specially favour the concentration of land in the same family. They provide for the partition of the estate among sons and daughters on the death of their parents. Each son who marries, starts a new household of his own and the married daughters leave their original family altogether and become merged in the families of their husbands, taking their shares of the land with them. And so the family estate in the ordinary course is broken up. It seems more likely, therefore, that the rules as to pre-emption and the rules (now admittedly obsolete) relating to re-purchase by relatives of the original seller were founded on a general equitable notion that members of the original owner's family ought to be preferred to mere strangers. The wording of section 93, Winicchaya Pakasani, gives colour to this view: "This man is our kith and kin; this land is the land of our family. If he desires to sell he should sell to us (rather than to strangers)." Or it may be that the law of pre-emption was taken bodily from the Hindus and incorporated in the Dhammathats without any distinct perception of its object or effect.

Turning now to the particular question raised in Mr. Justice Parlett's order of reference, I think the decision must depend on the construction of the Manukye, Book VIII, section 1. Mr. Sandford's ruling in Nga Myaing's case (5) admittedly goes too far in recognizing the archaic rule in Book VII, section 36, as existing law and we have to decide whether he went too far also in Ma Ngwe's case (2), in recognizing a right of pre-emption as regards family property after it has been partitioned among the co-heirs. Mr. Sandford cited no express authority for this decision. He appears to have thought that the right of a member of the family to re-purchase land that was formerly part of the family estate was a necessary corollary of the now obsolete rule requiring a stranger who wishes to re-sell to give the first refusal to members of the former owner's family. In Shwe Eik Ke v. Tha Hla Aung (1), Mr. Justice Fox refers only to Nga Myaing's case (5) and does not mention Mr. Sandford's ruling in Ma Nague's case (2) at all. He held that "upon the division of the property amongst the children of the plaintiff's grand-parents each child took the particular lot or lots which fell to him or her free from all obligations as regards pre-emption, and a fortiori the descendants of each child also took the lot or lots which devolved on each of them respectively free from such obligation." But it was not necessary to go to this length in Shwe Eik Ke's case (1), for the plaintiff was not a co-heir with the defendants and had no right of pre-emption even according to the principles deduced by Mr. Sandford.

The subject was again discussed in the Upper Burma Judicial Commissioner's judgment in Nga Tin v. Shwe On (4). Mr. Shaw dissented from the decision in Shwe Eik Ke's case (1) and decided that the Dhammathats contain provisions which give a right of pre-emption to co-heirs in respect of divided as well as undivided property. The learned Judicial Commissioner did not mention the portions of the Dhammathats on which he relied as establishing this proposition. The only texts referred to in the judgment are those abstracted in section 309 of the Digest and as remarked above, these texts contain internal evidence that the right of pre-emption which they give, relates only to impartible property falling under the heading of Myethe. For pre-emption as regards Myeshin land, we have to fall back on the Manukye, Book VIII, section 1. The persons who are given the right in that section are all those of the same family "interested (or concerned) in the inheritance." (* * * * *). I would translate these words compendiously by the English term "co-heirs." It would include all the relations of the seller who have inherited the property jointly with him from a common ancestor. Ordinarily each co-heir has an interest in the common inheritance until the separate shares are ascertained and distributed, but once he has acquired his individual share, his interest in the rest of the inheritance is at an end. It might possibly be held that the words of the Dhammathat are not inconsistent with the survival after partition of a contingent interest in the other co-heirs' shares limited to the exercise of the right of pre-emption in case of sale. But this would certainly be a strained interpretation, and I am not prepared to say that we should be justified in acting upon such a very slender basis. As noted above, the rule as embodied in Major Spark's Code, applies only to undivided property. In Ma Nague's case (2) Mr. Sandford extended the rule to partitioned property, because under the Dhammathats a stranger who has obtained possession of land by purchase was bound when re-selling it, to offer it first to the original owner's heirs, and because it seemed illogical to apply a different rule to a co-heir selling land which he had acquired by partition. He thought that the principle of the rule, namely, the maintenance intact of a family estate applied equally to both cases. But the rule requiring a purchaser of land who re-sells to offer it first to the original owner's heirs, is admittedly obsolete and was probably obsolete at the time of Mr. Sandford's judgment. Also I have mentioned some reasons for thinking that the supposed principle—the maintenance intact of the family estate—has no real existence. In the absence of any clear authority to the contrary in the Dhammathats, I think it should be held that a co-heir on partition acquires his individual share free from any obligation as regards pre-emption.

I would, therefore, answer Mr. Justice Parlett's reference in the negative.

As the existence of any right of pre-emption has been questioned in this case, it appears desirable to lay down explicitly the extent to which the Courts can recognize such a right. Premising that it applies only to undivided inherited lands, I would deduce from the Manukye that it is exercisable by the co-heirs collectively. The following remarks of the Judicial Commissioner, Upper Burma, (Mr. Thirkell White) on this point appear to me to express the intention of the Manukye correctly:—"The law does not expressly allow one of several co-heirs to require a proposed sale of land to be made to him individually. The offer has to be made to the co-heirs and they must decide among themselves whether they or any of them will exercise the right; if they cannot agree, apparently the owner would be free to sell as he thinks fit. But no doubt one of several co-heirs can sue to set aside a sale to a stranger and to enforce the right to pre-empt, making all the other co-heirs parties to the suit'. Maung Shwe Nyun v. Ma So (3).

I would deduce further that the right can be enforced only against the person who inherited the land jointly with the claimants, that it lapses on his death and that his heirs take the land free from all obligation as regards pre-emption. The persons who can claim pre-emption are the surviving joint inheritors and the heirs of any who have died. The right must be asserted promptly and the full price paid by the purchaser must be tendered. A sale to an outsider is not invalid ab initio; it is valid and holds good unless avoided by the co-heirs in the exercise of their right of pre-emption as above.

Reference answered in the negative.

(TRANSLATION OF RELEVANT PASSAGES FROM MANUKYE, BOOK VIII, SECTION 1.)

Excellent ruler, lands are of two kinds as regards rights of ownership in them: Myethe (i.e. dead lands) and Myeshin (i.e. live lands). Myethe lands are soldiers' lands, lands given to companies of soldiers, lands allotted with definite boundaries by the monarch for the subsistence of headmen, governors, land measurers, forest officers, clerks and other officials, lands worked and enjoyed by superior officials and descending lineally from father to son for many generations. Myeshin lands are lands other than the aforesaid Myethe lands. They comprise ancestral lands obtained by inheritance, lands obtained on the former occupier running away, land which has been worked openly and without interference for ten years, (waste) land obtained by clearing the jungle, land allotted (lit. given) by revenue officials, land measurers or superior officials. Thus it is said as regards land allotted by revenue officials, land measurers or superior officials, land worked without the former owner's interference, land worked after clearing the jungle, if the owner of any such land sell it outright, let the buyer have the right to work and enjoy it. During the seller's life-time he shall not redeem. If, however, the buyer dies in the seller's life-time, the seller may redeem. If the seller has died (i.e., before the buyer) and there is an office-bearer

(* * *) let him redeem if he wants to (i.e., after the buyers's death.)

Excellent ruler, as regards the aforesaid Myethe and Myeshin lands, even if (the claimants are) parents, grand-parents, relations, children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, brothers or sisters, they shall not redeem any such land. If the land has been sold outright, let it be owned (by the buyer.) Although (the claimants are) truly within the seven degrees of kindred or sons or grandsons, they shall not redeem the land. As it has been sold, so let it be owned.

If there be a sale of (any of) the aforesaid lands even among relations (* * ) let every one of the related co-heirs ( * *) be asked. Whichever says he will not buy, let him remain. Whichever says he will buy, let him buy. If any of the relations who, on being asked, said he would not buy, says, after another (of the related co-heirs) has bought, "let me share equally in the purchase"—if a year has elapsed since the time of buying and working (the land), let only the person who originally bought own (the land). Owing to the delay let the person who said he would not buy, have no claim to share in the purchase. If only a day or a month has elapsed since the buying and selling and one of the related co-heir says "I said formerly that I would not buy. Now I will buy," the person who has bought shall not refuse to sell on the ground that there was formerly a public refusal to buy. (The two parties) are relations; let those concerned buy and sell as becomes relations.

A person interested (* * ) is about to sell animate or inanimate property and he says to all those who are interested:—"Please buy. I am in debt and have to pay up." If there is to be a purchase (in such circumstances) let all who are interested purchase in equal shares. Otherwise, if one should say "It is well to sell to me alone, I alone should buy", let the purchasers decide among themselves who should buy and who should not buy. He (i.e. such an individual claimant) shall not address himself to the seller. Otherwise if there is a sale to one only (of those interested) without the knowledge of the others, the seller is at fault. (In such a case) the buyer having been ejected, let them (i.e., all those interested) decide whether he should buy or not, and let the seller take back his own. Let (those interested) decide who should buy and let there be a sale according to their decision. If the seller then says he will not sell (i.e. to the person so selected) and a law suit follows, let him bear the costs. Let him not sell to another. As to the costs, he shall not plead descent from a common ancestor, let him pay them.

The words "animate or inanimate property" (* *) do not occur in Richardson's text. These words, however, are in the Kinwun Mingyi's palm leaf copy of Manukye, which is probably authentic.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 2373 OF 1914.

September 24, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Bakewell.

MUTHU GOUNDAN—DEPENDANT NO. 1—

versus

ANANTHA GOUNDAN—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 15, scope of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 26—Prescriptive easement, acquisition of—Peaceable and open enjoyment, meaning of—Verbal dispute by servient owner, whether prevents enjoyment by dominant owner from being peaceable.

Mere verbal disputes by a servient owner, which do not cause interruption or obstruction to the enjoyment of an easement by the dominant owner, do not prevent its enjoyment from being peaceable so as to bar the acquisition of a prescriptive title thereto. [p. 530, col. 2.]

Knowledge and acquiescence on the part of a servient owner are not necessary for the acquisition of a prescriptive easement under the Limitation Act. [p. 531, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The expression 'peaceable enjoyment' means that the dominant owner has neither been obliged to resort to physical force himself at any time to exercise his right within the 20 years expiring within two years of the suit, nor had he been prevented by the use of physical force by the servient owner in his enjoyment. [p. 532, col. 1.]

Dalton v. Angus, 6 App. Cas. 740; 50 L. J. Q. B. 689; 44 L. T. 844; 30 W. R. 141; 46 J. P. 132, referred to.

Sections 26 and 27 of the Limitation Act do not apply to cases arising in territories to which the Indian Easements Act, 1882, applies. [p. 532, col. 1.]

Section 15 of the Indian Easements Act, is only remedial in nature and is neither prohibitory nor exhaustive. It does not exclude or interfere with other titles and modes of acquiring easements. Where open enjoyment has taken place for a long series of years, title by prescription is acquired independently of the Statute and a suit to establish the right can be brought within 12 years after the obstruction. [p. 532, col. 2.]

An easement by statutory prescription cannot be acquired under section 15, paragraph 5, of the Indian Easements Act unless and until the claim thereto has been contested in a suit. [p. 533, col. 1.]

Sultan Ahmad v. Walliullah, 17 Ind. Cas. 22; 10 A. L. J. 227; Rajenp Kuer v. Abul Hossain, 7 C. L. R. 529; 7 I. A. 249, 6 C. 394; 4 Shome L. R. 7; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 199; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 816; 4 Ind. Jur. 530 and Hyman v. Van Den Bergh, (1908) 1 Ch. 167; 77 L. J. Ch. 154; 98 L. T. 478, followed.

Per Bakewell, J.—The words 'peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person' occurring in the third paragraph of section 15 of the Indian Easements Act, mean that the person who claims a right over the property of another must not have deprived him of that right by the use of force or secretly, or in other words, the use must be 'pace vi nec clam'. The words 'peaceably' and 'openly' indicate the manner in which the dominant owner must conduct himself in his use or enjoyment of the servient tenement. The conduct of the servient owner is immaterial, except so far as it goes to show the nature of the user by the dominant owner. [p. 533, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 471 of 1912, on the file of the District Court of Trichinopoly, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Karur, in Original Suit No. 670 of 1911.

FACTS.—The suit was for the establishment of a right of way over the defendants' land and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's right of way. Both the lower Courts upheld the plaintiff's right. The 1st defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. K. S. Ganesa Iyer, for the Appellant:—The right claimed being a prescriptive easement, the suit is clearly barred by section 15 of the Easements Act and section 26 of the Indian Limitation Act. The enjoyment relied upon has not been peaceable but contentious. Oral protests and criminal proceedings, though subsequently compromised, are sufficient to prevent the acquisition of a statutory easement [Dalton v. Angus (1), Eaton v. The Swansea Waterworks Co. (2), Muhammad Maroof v. Sultan Ahmad (3), Kedar Nath v. Sohan Lall (4), Goddard on Easements, page 261, and the cases therein cited. Vide also the definition of 'peaceable' in Stroud's Judicial Dictionary]. Such protests and criminal proceedings evidence the want of acquiescence, which forms the basis of the theory of lost grant under the English Law. Vide Dalton v. Angus (1) and Peacock on Easements, page 148. Again, the suit is not in time, as it has not been brought within two years of such peaceable enjoyment. Further, a prescriptive right such as the present can only be acquired and perfected by a suit and decree and in the absence of any such, the present suit for injunction does not lie. Sultan Ahmad v. Waliullah (5), Haji Umarani Kachi v. Ganeshbhat Purshatambhat (6), Hymen v. Van Den Bergh (7).

Mr. V. Rameswaramaiah, for the Respondent, argue: contra and contended that what was set up was a mamul or customary right and not statutory prescription and that on the facts found by the Courts below, the decision in plaintiff's favour was quite correct.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The 1st defendant is the appellant. The suit was brought claiming the following reliefs:—

(1) The establishment of the plaintiff's right of way, marked A-B in the plaint plan, through the land of the defendant on to the plaintiff's land;

(2) For an injunction to the defendants to remove the fence which they put up across the path about 10 months before the suit;

(1) 6 App. Cas. 740; 50 L. J. Q. B. 689; 44 L. T. 844; 30 W. R. 191; 46 J. P. 132.

(2) 117 E. R. 1282; 20 L. J. Q. B. 482; 15 Jur. 675; 17 Q. B. 267; 85 R. R. 455.

(3) 24 Ind. Cas. 126; 12 A. L. J. 415.

(4) 25 Ind. Cas. 406; 12 A. L. J. 693.

(5) 17 Ind. Cas. 22; 10 A. L. J. 227.

(3) For the issuing of a permanent injunction against the defendants' obstructing the path.

The lower Appellate Court (as I read its judgment) came to the following conclusions:

(a) The plaintiff and his predecessors-in-title to the dominant tenement, were using the plaintiff path for much longer than 20 years before the interruption took place in September 1910 by the act of the defendants putting up the fence. (The suit was brought in July 1911 and the evidence of the plaintiff's 2nd witness speaks to the enjoyment for 40 years).

(b) Though the 1st defendant objected to the plaintiff using the way in 1907 or 1908, the plaintiff did actually continue to enjoy the right of way till the fence was put up in September 1910. The plaintiff says in his evidence "the path was not closed" till 1910; "the pathway was closed only five or six days prior to the filing of the suit." I think the word "suit" in this sentence is a mistake for the criminal complaint which was filed in August or September 1910. "Before that the defendants were objecting orally."

(c) The suit was not barred by the two years' period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act as the cause of action arose only in 1910 within a year before the suit and not in 1908 or 1907, the plaintiff not having had any interruption or restriction in the enjoyment of his rights.

On these findings, the decree of the District Munsif in plaintiff's favour was confirmed by the lower Appellate Court. Mr. K. S. Ganesa Aiyar, Vakil for the appellant, argued

(a) that the oral objections and disputes admittedly raised by the 1st defendant (see Exhibit III) in 1907 and 1908 prevented the plaintiff from acquiring a right of easement by prescription under section 26, clause 1, of Act IX of 1908;

(b) that section 26, clause 1, of Act IX of 1908, means (if I understood his contention aright), that a suit brought more than two years after such oral objection and dispute raised by the defendant entailed the dismissal of such a suit as barred by limitation.

It must be pointed out that sections 26 and 27 of the Limitation Act are not applicable to cases arising in territories to which the Indian Easements Act, V of 1882, applies. (See section 29, clause 3, of the Limitation Act.) The question even as regards an easement right claimed under the statutory prescription is, therefore, strictly not one of limitation as was supposed by the lower Courts and as seems to have been contended by the learned Vakil. The question when what might be called an easement by statutory prescription is claimed by a plaintiff, is whether under section 15 of the Easements Act (which applies to the Madras Presidency), the prescriptive right by enjoyment for 20 years has been acquired by the plaintiff. As pointed out by Chamier, J., in Sultan Ahmad v. Waliullah (5): "The fifth paragraph of section 15 of the Easements Act seems to render it impossible to acquire a statutory prescriptive title to an easement unless and until the claim thereto has been contested in a suit." See also Rajrup Koer v. Abdul Hossein (8) and the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Hyman v. Van Den Bergh (7) construing similar provisions of the English Prescription Act. As Peacock says in his book on Easements at page 435: "The right is created upon the bringing of the first action in which, by reason of the claim having been brought into question, it becomes necessary for the person claiming such right to possess it for the purpose of his action or defence."

Hence the question is not one of limitation as I said before, but is one as to whether the enjoyment which is necessary to acquire the prescriptive right, has been peaceable enjoyment and enjoyment as an easement without interruption for 20 years or more and all these to end within two years before suit.

Mr. Ganesa Aiyar next contended resourcefully that the enjoyment in the present case could not be considered peaceable (see the first paragraph of section 15 of the Easements Act) up to within two years before suit, as there were wordy (8) 6 C. 394 (P. O.); 7 C. L. R. 529; 7 I. A. 249; 4 Shome. L. R. 7; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 199; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 816; 4 Ind. Jur. 530.

quarrels from the end of April 1907, when the 1st defendant purchased the servient tenement, till July 1909, when the period of two years before the institution of the suit began. The short question, therefore, remaining for consideration (assuming that the plaintiff claims his easement right by reason of the statutory prescription) is whether the verbal disputes which caused no interruption to the enjoyment of the easement right claimed by the plaintiff prevented the enjoyment being "peaceable" so as to prevent the acquisition of such prescriptive right.

It is rather curious that there seems to be no clear and sufficient authority on the question, whether verbal disputes which do not cause interruption or obstruction to the enjoyment of the easement prevent the enjoyment from being peaceable, so that the plaintiff is precluded from relying on such enjoyment as forming part of the 20 years' peaceable enjoyment necessary to give him a prescriptive title.

Mr. Ganesa Aiyar based several of his arguments upon the history of the origin of prescriptive rights in English Law. I shall say a few words on that question, as they seem to be required to clear the ground of irrelevant matters. There was, in the first place, the fiction in England that easement rights, where they do not really arise from an express grant, must be supposed to have originated in some lost grant from the owner of the servient tenement. The very widely differing opinions (about eighteen were received) given by the learned English Judges in the three stages through which the case of Angus v. Dalton (1) passed [See Angus v. Dalton (9), Angus v. Dalton (10) and Dalton v. Angus (1)] show the subtleties and hair-splitting which even the most powerful intellects have to resort to, when rights are based upon patently false fictions instead of natural rights. The presumption of a lost grant made in the old English cases is said by Thesiger, L.J., in the Court of Appeal to be "not a presumptio juris et de jure, that is, not an absolute and conclusive bar, and that the correct view on this point is that the presumption of acquiescence and the fiction of an agreement deduced therefrom in a case, where enjoyment of an easement has been for a sufficient period uninterrupted, is in the nature of an estoppel by conduct, which, while it is not conclusive so far as to prevent denial or explanation of the conduct, presents a bar to any simple denial of the fact, which is merely the legal inference drawn from the conduct." See Peacock on Easements at page 148. Then there are old English cases in which it was said that a legal incompetence as regards the owner of the servient tenement to grant an easement, or a physical incapacity of being obstructed as regards the easement itself, will prevent the presumption of an easement by lost grant. Cotton, L. J., said in Angus v. Dalton (10) that "Twenty years' enjoyment does not confer an absolute right, but raises a presumption of a modern lost grant which is not capable of being rebutted by an admission of evidence that there was in fact no grant, unless supported by additional evidence that the adjoining owner was incapable of making a grant, or by any other rebuttable evidence."

(9) 3 Q. B. D. 85.

(10) 4 Q. B. D. 162.

MUTHU GOUNDAN v. ANANTHA GOUNDAN.

In the 6 House of Lords case not only did the five Law Lords including Lord Chancellor Selbourne take part at the second hearing, but the opinions of seven Judges of the High Court had been invited and forwarded to the House of Lords. Bowen, J., in the course of his opinion [See Dalton v. Angus (1)], says that enjoyment which is capable of interruption is, therefore, capable of ripening into a right of easement where such interruption does not occur. Then he adds: "It might, perhaps, be added with some show of reason that the user ought, to be neither violent nor contentious. The neighbour, without actual interruption of the user, ought perhaps, on principle, to be enabled by continuous and unmistakable protests to destroy its peaceable character, and so to annul one of the conditions upon which the presumption of right is raised." And then he refers to Eaton v. Swansea Waterworks Company (2), though in that case what took place was not a mere verbal protest by the servient owner but actual physical obstruction added to the prosecution and conviction of the servant of the dominant owner for trespass. [See the Eaton v. Swansea Waterworks Co. (2).] The House of Lords in Dalton v. Angus (1) held among other things that de facto enjoyment of the easement of support for 20 years raised an absolute presumption in favour of the dominant owner which cannot be rebutted by proof that a grant had not been made. To use the language of Peacock in his book on Easements, page 413: "In the early part of the nineteenth century, when war was made on all legal fictions and that of a lost grant fell into disfavour, the Legislature determined to remove the blot on the administration of justice which arose from thus forcing the consciences of juries, and to substitute a direct for an indirect method of lessening the period of prescription." Then it was that Acts 2 and 3 of William IV, known as the English Prescription Act and Lord Tenterden's Act, were passed. In Arzan v. Rakhal Chunder Roy Chowdhry (11) decided in 1883, Garth, C.J., refused to follow the view put forward in some English cases as to the necessity of knowledge and acquiescence on the part of the servient owner for the acquisition of a prescriptive easement under the Limitation Act of 1877. If I may say so with respect, I entirely agree with him. As regards the question when a statutory prescriptive right has been acquired under the Easements Act, it seems to me neither necessary nor proper to go into the questions of lost grants, acquiescence, consent and so on, which occupy so much space in the English Reports. I think it cannot be argued that when a man has been openly and adversely and yet peaceably enjoying the easement as of right without interruption for 20 years till two years before date of suit, the fact that the servient owner was a lunatic or was in jail, could prevent the acquisition of the title by prescription under the Easements Act.

As regards the meaning of the word 'peaceable', I am inclined to hold that it means that the plaintiff who claims to be the dominant owner has neither been obliged to resort to physical force himself at any time to exercise his right within the 20 years expiring within two years of the suit, nor had he been prevented by the use of physical force by the defendant in his enjoyment of such right. I do not think that oral oppositions and oral expressions of dissent by the defendant can prevent the enjoyment being peaceable. The word "contentious" used in some English cases is of very ambiguous significance. Though I have not been able to find any English case where mere verbal contentions (without resort to litigation) have been held to prevent the enjoyment from being peaceable, it seems that in Roman Law, the acquisition of prescriptive right will be interrupted even by verbal contentions (See Gale on Easements, page 231). Assuming, however, that I am wrong in my above view and that even verbal contentions will prevent the acquisition of a prescriptive right under the Statute Law, that is Act V of 1882, I am quite clear that in this case, the lower Courts were not justified in reading the plaint as if it claimed the prescriptive right of easement only or even mainly under the Statute Law. There is not a word said about the Easements Act or the Limitation Act in the plaint. The 5th paragraph mentions the use of the path by the plaintiffs and their ancestors for 30 years. The path is called "a mamul" path in paragraph 13 of the plaint.

It has been held by the Privy Council in Rajrup Koer v. Atul Hossein (8) that a plaintiff need not rely upon the statutory prescriptive right given to him under the Limitation Act of 1871, section 27 (which corresponds to section 26 of the later Limitation Acts, and to section 15 of the Easements Act). As their Lordships state at page 403: "The object of the Statute was to make more easy the establishment of rights of this description, by allowing an enjoyment of 20 years, if exercised under the conditions prescribed by the Act, to give, without more, a title to easements. But the Statute is remedial, and is neither prohibitory nor exhaustive. A man may acquire a title under it who has no other right at all, but it does not exclude or interfere with other titles and modes of acquiring easements. Their Lordships think that, in this case, there is abundant evidence upon the facts found by the Courts for presuming the existence of a grant at some distant period of time."

That being so, the plaintiff does not require the aid of the Statute and his right, therefore, is not in any degree interfered with by the provisions of section 27 (that is, as to the period ending within the two years before suit upon which the District Munsif relied). Hence it has been held in numerous cases that where open enjoyment has taken place for a long series of years, title by prescription was acquired independently of the Statute and a suit to establish that right can be brought within 12 years after the obstruction. In a case in Karupan Zemindar v. Merangi Zemindar (12) an enjoyment for 18 years which ceased seven years before suit was held to give a prescriptive right. I think I am bound by the decision in Karupan Zemindar v. Merangi Zemindar (12), which has never been dissented from. See also Arvi Jagirdar v. Secretary of State for India (13), Punja Kuarji v. Bai Kuar (14), Achul Mahta v. Rajan Mahta (15), Koylash Chunder Ghose v. Smatun Chunder Barooie (16), Charu Surnokar v. Dukouri Chunder Thokoor (17), Arzan v. Rakhal Chunder Roy Chowdhry (11), Hargovandas Lakhmidas v. Bajibhai Sijibhai (18) and Eshan Chandra Samanta v. Ni Moni Singh (19).

As in this case more than 20 years' enjoyment before 1907 has been proved, even assuming the validity of the defendant's contention that the obstruction by word of mouth which took place in 1907 will prevent the acquisition of the statutory right of prescription, an easement by prescription not depending upon the Statute had been acquired by the plaintiff before 1907 and the limitation for a suit for the possession of such right is 12 years. If the suit is treated as a suit for declaration and injunction, even then the period of limitation would be six years. Hence this suit was not barred by limitation. I would, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with costs.

BAKEWELL, J.—The question in this case is as to the meaning of the words "peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person" in the third paragraph of section 15 of the Indian Easements Act, 1882. The adverbs peaceably and openly qualify the verb enjoyed and indicate the manner in which the dominant owner must conduct himself in his use or enjoyment of the servient tenement; the conduct of the servient owner is immaterial, except so far as it goes to show the nature of the user by the dominant owner. If it be desired to amplify the expression, which seems to me to be scarcely necessary, I would paraphrase it as follows:—"the person who claims a right over the property of another must not have deprived him of that right by the use of force or secretly": in other words, the user must be "nec vi, nec clam."

The noise and clamour on the part of the servient owner only go to show to my mind that the user was not secret.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Custom—Succession—Sials of Jhang District—Ancestral property—Daughter's preference to collaterals in 10th degree—Power of daughter to alienate by Will—Sister, status of.

Among Sials of the Jhang District, a daughter is entitled to succeed in preference to collaterals in the 10th degree and can alienate ancestral property by Will, the collaterals having no right to contest such alienation. [p. 534, col. 2.]

A sister, though intended to inherit, does not take a full estate and cannot alienate [p. 535, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Shahpur Division at Sargodha, dated the 4th June 1912.

Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Santanam, Marghub Ahmad and Ghulam Yasin, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The pedigree-table in the paper-book and the judgment of the first Court show what the nature of the dispute is; but it should be noted here that in the pedigree-table there are some mistakes and omissions which we have made good in our copies of the paper-book. In the judgment there is also this small error that plaintiffs are really ten degrees from the deceased last male-holder, Nur Ahmad, and Muhammad Bakhsr is eleven degrees away, not nine and ten respectively, as the first Court puts it.

The first Court framed seven issues, found it unnecessary to decide the two which were concerned with Nur Ahmad's sister, Allah Jawai, and held—

(1) that plaintiffs had locus standi, as being collaterals of Nur Ahmad, to contest the alienation by Musammal Daulat Bibi in favour of defendant, her husband;

(2) that plaintiffs had a right of succession to so much of the property as was ancestral or which reached Musammal Daulat Bibi from Musammal Fateh through Nur Ahmad;

(3) that Muhammed, also a reversioner, like plaintiffs, had validly relinquished his claims in favour of plaintiffs;

(4) that Musammal Daulat Bibi could only alienate to her husband the property she herself purchased in Mauza Bagh, and that plaintiffs have failed to prove that she made the purchase out of the income of ancestral property;

(5) that plaintiffs are not entitled to produce claimed nor to moveables claimed,

MUHAMMAD BAKSH V. MUHAMMAD.

Decree was passed on these findings and both parties appealed. The lower Appellate Court dismissed each appeal on its own way and found the first Court's decree correct. In his appeal the defendant urged that plaintiffs were too distant to contest the case; that Musammāt Allah Jawai aforesaid excluded plaintiffs and had made a Will in favour of defendant; that at least the house was not proved to be ancestral; that the property which reached Musammāt Daulat Bibi from her father Ahmad and her "aunt" (really her mother-in-law) Musammāt Fateh was not ancestral and was Musammāt Daulat Bibi's absolutely and she had full power over it. The Court found against all the contentions.

The plaintiffs' several contentions as to produce and moveables and investment of income of ancestral property were likewise overruled; and now defendant has filed a second appeal here, while plaintiffs rest content with what they have got.

The question for decision is mainly one of custom, namely, what are the rights of women in the position of Musammāt Daulat Bibi and Musammāt Allah Jawai in the presence of collaterals so remote as the plaintiffs; and our inclination is to find on the whole against the plaintiffs. The officer presiding in the first Court at time of judgment had not heard the case himself, and this probably accounts for the fact that he has apparently entirely overlooked the riwaj-i-am, and the instances in support of it. Some of these instances were actually mentioned in the edition of 1880 of the riwaj-i-am, though the later edition of 1905, which states the rules in the same way as the earlier edition, omits the instances. One has only to read questions and answers Nos. 15, 18 and 25 to see how strong is the position of Sial females in this district. Then, several instances of females succeeding in preference to collaterals have occurred even within this not very large family—Muhammad, son of Nasrat (see pedigree), was succeeded by his three daughters; Ahmad, son of Nazi, by his two daughters, of whom one at least (Aisha) was married; Musammāt Fateh, married to Sher, father of one Nur Ahmad, certainly succeeded to her brother Nur; another Musammāt Daulat Bibi, daughter of Chaugkata, succeeded to her father and married one Nur, but kept the property and alienated it here and there without opposition from any one. Again, though this is only indirectly in point, Azam's widow, Musammāt Nurai, so long ago as 2nd November 1875, willed some of her late husband's property, and left two other properties by similar instruments, no one apparently raising any objection. All this, coupled with the statements in the riwaj-i-am in which daughters are so much favoured that, unmarried, they are preferred even to uncles and first cousins, and, married, they are preferred to collaterals not descended from deceased's great-grandfather, shows that it might even be contended that collaterals in the tenth degree are in this tribe really not in an effective way heirs at all, and at all events shows that any right claimed by them to control the acts of daughters would never be recognised. It was certainly for plaintiffs to prove this alleged power of control and preferential right of succession by positive instances, and herein they have wholly failed.

Here we may note what the landed property in suit is and where it came from. Ahmad, Musammāt Daulat Bibi's father, got 165 kanals in Mauza Khurara and 19 kanals in Mauza Bagh by Will from Musammāt Nurai aforesaid. Ahmad died in 1899 and the Khurara land was mutated to his two daughters Daulat Bibi and Fatima as such, while the little plot of land in Mauza Bagh was mutated to the widows of Nur Ahmad, his nephew, i. e., to the same Daulat Bibi, and to Musammāt Ghulam Bibi. There is no specific explanation of this distinctive treatment, but it may be readily believed that the land in Mauza Bagh being of trifling value and extent and the mutation going through in the absence of interested persons, a mistake was made as to it. The Khurara land on the death of Musammāt Fatima in 1904 was mutated to her husband, Muhammad, plaintiff, so that this may almost be taken by itself as a further instance of daughters taking as full heirs and passing on property to their husbands. No doubt, Muhammad, plaintiff, subsequently shared the land with is brothers, but this does not substantially reduce the value of the precedent.

The lands coming to Musammāt Daulat Bibi through her husband came in three ways—(a) gift to her husband by her father; (b) purchase by her husband in Mauza Maghiana from her father; (c) by succession of her husband to his mother Fateh, who, as already stated, inherited the estate of her brother Nur.

It is strongly urged that the Khurara property (and in reality the 19 kauals in Bagh, though the aforesaid mistake as to it was made) came to Musammāt Daulat Bibi as a daughter pure and simple and that by custom she was entitled to keep it, though married, as against 10th degree collaterals; that the gift (a) must either be looked upon as meant for the benefit of the donor's daughter, or if it be taken as an ordinary gift to Nur Ahmad for himself and issue, then on the extinction of donee's line, the land reverts to donor's line, in which Musammāt Daulat Bibi, the daughter, was undoubtedly the first heir and (not so conclusively) that the land (b) was a self-acquisition and so a daughter, though not of the acquirer yet of the acquirer's nearest agnate, has, even apart from the peculiar customs of this tribe, a superior right to distant collaterals: Bholi v. Kahna (1) and that the land (c) taken by right of custom by Musammāt Fateh as a sister descended to her son Nur Ahmad and all rights of collaterals ceased to exist.

As regards all this Mr. Santanam quotes first Musammāt Sahban v. Ghazi (2) and Bakhu v. Amir (3) of same tribe, in which it was held that daughters do not succeed as against collaterals generally. Examination of those rulings shows that they cannot stand as authorities for us in this case in which we have so much positive evidence of custom. The earlier ruling loses much, if not all, of its value by the fact that, while the remand order mentions the riwaj-i-am of 1880 as a valuable document and evidently contemplates taking it as a starting point, the final order lays the onus on the daughters, overlooks the riwaj-i-am, and finds for the collaterals solely on the ground of variations found to exist in the custom. Bakhu v. Amir (3) blindly follows Musammāt Sahban v. Ghazi (2).

The next ruling quoted, Allah Ditta v. Beg (4), seems to us negligible, being concerned with a different tribe, the Dhab Jats of Jhang.

Mr. Santanam then goes into a good many details into which we need not follow him; and he also successfully shows that the house in suit really belonged to Ahmad and Nur Ahmad in equal shares, that Ahmad in 1892 sold his one-half to Nur Ahmad, and that Musammāt Daulat Bibi got it as his widow. No deed of sale is forthcoming, only an entry in a petition-writer's register, but there seems no doubt that Ahmad and Nur Ahmad were joint owners. Musammāt Daulat Bibi may have taken her father's half as a daughter, though it is more likely that Nur Ahmad being a very near collateral indeed would take it before her. We think, therefore, that the lady did take the house as a widow pure and simple, and, therefore, plaintiffs should have it, for we do not go so far as to say definitely that the plaintiffs are not heirs at all, or that a widow's estate ceases to be such in this tribe when the nearest collaterals are of the 10th degree.

We have so far said nothing of the effect of the existence of Musammāt Allah Jawai, sister of Nur Ahmad, who on 10th July 1909, 18 days before her death, willed certain properties, as having come to her from Nur Ahmad, to defendant. We feel that on the authorities the position of a sister is by no means so strong as that of a daughter; and though we have accepted as a correct statement of custom certain entries as to daughters in the riwaj-i-am in view of the support lent to those entries by what must in the circumstances be deemed a considerable and sufficient number of instances, we are not prepared to allow that the very unusual custom is established that a sister not only inherits but takes a full estate and can alienate. No doubt we have the one nstance of the succession of Musammatt Fatch to her brother Nur; but that land is on a different footing from (b) and (c) here. That land came to Nur from his and Musammatt Fatch's father, whereas (b) and (c) were never owned by Nur Alimad's father. There is nothing to show, further, that Musammatt Allah Jawai ever had possession of any of her deceased brother's estate, and the Will was simply a device. The fact of the lady making it, is not the smallest indication that she had any right to do so.

The net result, then, seems to be that plaintiffs should have the house and (b) and (c), while defendant takes the Khurara (165 kanals) and Bagh (19 kanals) lands and (a).

We accept the appeal and pass a decree accordingly, the plaintiffs to pay one-half of defendant's costs in this Court.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Act. 158—Award—Objections filed in time—Refusal by Court to hear as being filed out of time—Revision, competency of—Jurisdiction.

Where a District Munsif declined to hear certain objections to an award filed by the petitioner on the ground that they had been filed out of time, while as a matter of fact they had been filed in time:

Held, that the decision amounted to a declination of a jurisdiction by the lower Court and that the same could be revised under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. [p 536, col. 2]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V 1908, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Dharmapuri, in Original Suit No. 1004 of 1912.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Respondent, raised a preliminary objection that the revision was incompetent and relied on Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Bakhsh Singh (1), Kojira Becriammall v. Fathma Biviammal (2), Karmam Sama Row v. Roddam Vencoba Row (3) and Venkata Subbia v. Seshachalam (4).

Mr. S. Ranganatha Iyer, for the Petitioners:—The question is not one of an erroneous decision on a point of law. The objections having been filed in time, the lower Court was bound to hear the same and has improperly declined to exercise its undoubted jurisdiction.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, certain matters in the suit were referred to arbitrators who duly returned their award into Court. The petitioners filed objections to this award and the Judge declined to hear them on the ground that they were out of time. A glance at his diary, and at the section of the Limitation Act, shows that they were not out of time.

Now it is said that my discretion in this matter is restricted by rules of law, and that in obedience to the principle laid down in the decided cases I must decline to interfere. What that principle exactly is, has not been made very clear to me either by Mr. V. C. Seshachariar's researches or my own. But it seems to me formulated in some such way as this: you must not interfere with errors of fact or errors of law or wrong decisions as to limitation. You must only interfere where the lower Court has either purported to exercise a jurisdiction which it does not possess, or declined to exercise a jurisdiction which it does possess. The difficulty to my mind in applying such a rule is that it appears to make the erroneous assumption that every case will fall exclusively into one or other of these categories. This very case is certainly an instance of error either of fact or law, possibly of both: it is a decision on a question of limitation; and it is a clear declination of a jurisdiction which the lower Court possessed and was bound to exercise. In my opinion, the latter feature is the most predominant, and I think the petitioners have been deprived of a hearing to which they were entitled. I, therefore, allow the petition and remit the case to the District Munsif's Court to hear and to determine the objections according to law. I may say in conclusion that I view with alarm and distrust judicial limitations of a discretion imposed in general terms upon the Courts by the express words of Statutes. In this instance, I do not think that any decided case precludes me from doing what I think right. The petition is allowed with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17, sub-s. (2), cl. (i)—Petition embodying terms of compromise incorporated into judicial record—Registration, whether compulsory—Evidence, admissibility in.

A widow applied for Letters of Administration as being the person solely entitled to the estate of her deceased husband, but the application was opposed by the relations of the deceased and she filed a suit for a declaration that she was in possession of the estate and entitled to the whole of it. The parties, however, came to terms and drew up a draft agreement. A petition was then presented to the Court embodying verbatim the terms agreed upon and praying for a decree in terms of the compromise. Subsequently the plaintiff withdrew from the suit on the basis of the compromise and the suit was dismissed. The defendants then sued the widow for rendition of accounts of the estate and it was conceded that their claim must fail unless they could put in evidence the terms of the agreement entered into between the parties in the previous suit.

Held, that the petition embodying the terms of the compromise formed part of the pleadings of the parties in the case and being incorporated as such into the judicial record, did not need registration in order to make it admissible in evidence for the purpose of this suit. Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 19th February 1912.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kirkpatrick and Ralli, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Upon the death of the late Mr. James Skinner of Delhi, who appears to have left a large estate, both real and personal, there was a contest between various persons who claim to succeed. The widow, Mrs. James Skinner, applied for Letters of Administration as being the person solely entitled to the estate, but her application was opposed by a number of relatives of the deceased and she thereupon instituted a suit praying for declaration to the effect that she was in possession of the said estate and entitled to the whole of it. In that suit, the defendants were the persons who objected to the grant of Letters of Administration and they contested the widow's claim for a declaratory decree. Before issues were framed, however, the parties came to terms, and on the 10th December 1904, a document was drawn up embodying all the terms of the agreement which had been arrived at. This document which is written on ordinary paper and bears no stamp, was signed by the various parties to the suit and also by Mr. Arthur Grey, "Counsel for the objectors," and by Mr. Clarence Kirkpatrick, who was Counsel for Mrs. James Skinner. Before proceeding we may at once clear the ground by stating that we have no hesitation in holding that this document was a mere draft and was intended as a basis for the petition which was to be drawn up and presented to the Court.

On the 19th December 1904, a petition embodying verbatim the terms of what we have described as the draft agreement, was drawn up and presented to the District Judge. This petition bears an eight-anna Court-fee and is headed "In the District Court, Delhi—Mrs. James Skinner, plaintiff, versus Mrs. Orde and another, defendants—claim for declaratory decree that plaintiff is entitled to the whole estate of the late Mr. James Skinner of Delhi."

ROBERT SKINNER V. JAMES SKINNER.

"The parties in the above case have effected the following compromise, namely" (Here follow the terms of the compromise). The petition concludes as follows:—"Therefore pray that this Court will order this petition to be filed with the record, that a date be fixed for further hearing of the case, and that a decree in terms of the compromise be passed." The petition is signed by Mr. Kirkpatrick as Counsel for the plaintiff and by certain defendants on behalf of themselves and for others.

On the petition itself the District Judge passed the following orders:—

(1) "File with the record, 8th February fixed.

(Sd.) H. HARCOURT,
District Judge.

19th December 1904."

(2) "Adjourned to 8th March.

H. HARCOURT.

8th February 1905."

(3) "For 10th, parties not ready.

H. HARCOURT.

8th March 1905."

(4) "For 28th April.

H. HARCOURT.

10th March 1905."

On the 28th of April 1905, there is the following order of the Court:—

"Mr. Kirkpatrick for plaintiff announces to-day that his client withdraws from the suit on the basis of the compromise filed in the case on 19th December 1904. Each party to pay its own costs. Suit dismissed.

H. HARCOURT,
District Judge."

Plaintiffs (who were the defendants in the declaratory suit) have now sued Mrs. James Skinner for rendition of accounts of the estate, and it is conceded that their claim must fail unless they can put in evidence the terms of the agreement entered into between the parties in the previous suit. The Courts below have held that neither the document of the 10th December 1904, (described by us as the draft) nor the petition presented to the Court on the 19th December 1904, can be admitted in evidence, inasmuch as they are both unregistered and relate to property which is admittedly above the value of Rs. 100.

The question whether both or either of these documents is admissible in evidence has been argued at some considerable length before us and authorities pro et con have been cited by the learned Counsel who appeared for the appellant and the respondents respectively. After giving the question our best consideration, and a careful examination of the authorities cited, we are of opinion that the petition of the 19th December, did not require registration. It is clear from its very terms that it was intended to be a petition upon which the Court should take action, and the parties expressly asked the Court to grant a decree in accordance with the terms of the compromise, all the said terms being set forth in full in the petition. As a matter of fact, it would have been difficult for the Court, in a suit such as that before it where the plaintiff prayed for a declaratory decree to the effect that she was the sole owner of the property, to grant a decree which would be declaratory not only of her rights but of the rights of the defendants as against plaintiff and also inter se. This difficulty appears to have been recognized, and as a result of it, Mr. Kirkpatrick eventually asked the Court to allow plaintiff to "withdraw her suit on the basis of the terms of the compromise," and as we read the order of the District Judge, this is what the Court intended to do. The suit was dismissed, but dismissed with express reference to the agreement between the parties.

In these circumstances and having regard to the fact that the petition was actually brought on the record and that the District Judge wrote several orders relating to the case upon the back of the petition, we are of opinion that the case falls within the purview of the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pranal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (1) [see also Khair-ul-nisa v. Bahadur Ali (2)]. But even if it cannot be held that the Court in dismissing the suit on the basis of the compromise, impliedly incorporated the terms of the petition into its decree, we are still of opinion that the petition formed part of the pleadings of the parties in the case and being incorporated as such into the judicial record did not need registration in order to make it admissible in evidence for the purposes of the present case. In support of this view we would refer to the dicta of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (3), and to *Sellappa Koundan v. We accordingly hold that the petition was admissible in evidence, and accepting this appeal, we remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, for decision on the merits and with reference to the foregoing remarks.

Second appeals presented respectively against the decrees of the District Court of Ramnad, in Appeal Suits Nos. 37, 58, 62, 82, 88, 105, 112, 116, 306, 309 and 311 of 1912, 628, 632, 647, 655, 660, 653 and 667 of 1911 and 130 of 1913, preferred, respectively, against the decrees of the Court of the Sub-Collector of Ramnad, in Summary Suits Nos. 797, 2832, 2836, 2856, 2862, 2881, 2888, 2892, 1422, 1425 and 1427 of 1911, and the decrees of the Court of the Special Deputy Collector of Ramnad, in Summary Suits Nos. 406, 410, 432, 443, 448, 453 and 459 of 1911, and the decree of the Court of the Sub-Collector of Ramnad, in Summary Suit No. 2906 of 1911.

Mr. S. Sundaraja Iyengar, for the Appellant:—The extra charge for vanpayir has been paid for very many years prior to the enforcement of the Estates Land Act. A contract to pay the rate claimed must, therefore, be inferred from the long-continued course of conduct. Venkata Perumal Raju v. Ramudu (1).

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer and T. Arumainatham Pillai, for the Respondents:—The charge is clearly illegal. Vide section 13 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act, I of 1908. The case relied upon for the decision in Venkata Perumal Raju v. Ramudu (1), viz., Arumugam Chetty v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (2), does not really support it. See also Arumugam Chetty v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (3) and Devi Bhuknoji Kasidoss Subbaraya v. Allamadugu Narayana Reddi (4). The appellant must not be allowed to raise a new point in second appeal, as that would necessitate evidence being gone into.

JUDGMENT.—The first point argued before us, relates to the landlord's claim to an extra charge for "vanpayir," (i. e.,

garden crops raised on dry lands by means of wells dug at the tenants' expense. Both the lower Courts have held that this charge is illegal.

There is no dispute that the wells in question were dug at the tenants' expense; nor, on the other hand, that in spite of this fact, the extra charge has been levied for many years—the Sub-Collector says, "from time immemorial," which we must take to mean 'ever since the wells were dug, and their water used for raising the garden crops.' But there does not appear to be any finding as to the length of time during which payment has been made in any particular case.

The respondents rely on section 13 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act to support the decision of the lower Courts. The appellant contends that the charge is made in pursuance of a contract prior to the introduction of the Act: and that, as held in Venkata Perumal Raju v. Ramudu (1), such a contract is enforceable in spite of the section.

This theory of a contract validating the charge, has been set up for the first time in the hearing of these second appeals. In both the lower Courts, and even in the memorandum of second appeals, it was sought to support the charge on the basis, not of contract, but of custom: and the respondents' Vakil, in our opinion reasonably, objects to the appellant being allowed to alter his case at this stage. The admission of the contention, now raised, would necessitate the remand of the suits for findings on fresh issues and evidence; and such a course seems to us not justifiable. The appellant's Vakil has endeavoured to convince us that the required contract must be inferred from the long-continued course of payment, for which proposition he refers us to the judgments in the case above quoted. It is no doubt true that in that case Napier, J., presumed not only an agreement to pay the higher rates, but also consideration for the agreement from 60 years' payment, (i.e.,) a complete and enforceable contract. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., agreed that the same presumption could be drawn: though in his view of the case, that did not affect the result. Neither learned Judge, as far as we can gather, seems to have intended to lay down a general proposition that such a presumption must always be drawn and would be irrebuttable; and it is only if this were the case that we could deny the respondents an opportunity of adducing evidence to contest it. Apart from this, if we may say so with all respect, we doubt whether the decision in Arumugam Chetty v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (2), on which the learned Judges rely, affords any support whatever for the presumption of consideration for the agreement from long-continued payment. On the contrary, as it seems to us, Subramania Aiyar, J., is at pains to emphasize the contrary, (i.e.,) "that though payment for a number of years at the rate of 8 fanams, may imply an agreement to pay in future at that rate, yet that will not imply a contract between the parties, for the obvious reason that there was no consideration to support such an agreement so as to make it a binding one."

And the same view was taken at a subsequent stage of the same litigation by a Bench to which one of us was a party [Arumugam Chetty v. Raja Jagaveera Rama Venkateswara Ettappa (3)]. The existence of an agreement was allowed to be inferred from long payment: but independent proof of consideration for the agreement was insisted on as necessary. We may also refer to a later, case Devi Bhuknoji Kasidoss Subbaraya v. Allamalingu Narayana Reddi (4), for the same distinctions.

We must decline to allow a contract for the payment of the higher rates to be set up at this stage; and we confirm the finding of the lower Courts as to the illegality of the vanpayir charge.

The other points in dispute may be more briefly dealt with. We agree with the lower Courts in holding that the disallowance of the claim for extra rent for a second dry crop is a necessary corollary of the decision that the rent for the dry land can be claimed independently of whether a crop was raised or not, and we see no reason to differ from their interpretation of the word 'palanthur' in relation to the charge leviable on palmyra trees.

There remains only the question raised on issue No. 17 of the rent claimed on land No. 337 in Summary Suit No. 2881 (Second Appeal No. 1087 of 1913). It is classed as "Mandaikollai or Veetadikollai" and the CHANDAN MAL v. Musammât Wasindi Bai.

District Judge, differing from the Sub-Collector, has held that rent claimed as due on it, cannot be recoverable by a suit under section 77 of the Madras Estates Land Act. In our opinion, he is right in his conclusion. Of course if it were shown that the "Kollai" had been carved by the tenant out of ryoti land, without the landlord's consent, the latter would be entitled to recover rent due on it under the Act. But that is not the case here.

We dismiss the second appeals with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family Widow of predeceased son holding a share of ancestral property as maintenance, whether can alienate.

Where in a suit for a declaration that an alienation by a widow shall not affect plaintiff's reversionary rights after the widow's death, it appeared that on the death of the last male owner, the mutation in respect of his estate took place in favour of (1) the plaintiff, (2) the father of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4, and (3) defendant No. 1, the widow of the predeceased son of the last male owner, who alienated her share in favour of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

Held, that the plaintiff could not have been separate in estate from his father and as the parties were Aroras and admittedly governed by Hindu Law, the widow received a third share obviously for the purpose of maintenance and had no right to alienate that share to the prejudice of the plaintiff.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Multan, dated the 19th July 1912.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din, for the Appellant.

Mr. Baidri Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The family tree of the parties and the facts of the case are set forth in the judgment of the Additional District Judge and need not be repeated. The plaintiff Chandan Mal sues for declaration to the effect that an alienation by Musammât Wasindi Bai, effected by a registered deed dated the 7th April 1910, in favour of defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, the sons of Chandu Mal, shall not affect his reversionary rights on the death of the widow. The suit has been dismissed by both the lower Courts on the ground that Musammât Wasindi Bai was holding the property on a life-interest, but that the alienation was for necessary purposes inasmuch as the estate held by her, was not sufficient for her maintenance. The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court and in our opinion his appeal must succeed.

On the death of Wiru Mal in 1886, mutation in respect of his estate took place in favour of (1) Chandan Mal, plaintiff, (2) Chandu Mal, father of defendants, and (3) Musammât Wasindi Bai, widow of Sewa Mal, a son of Wiru Mal who had predeceased his father. It is obvious from this that Chandan Mal could not have been separate in estate from his father Wiru Mal and as the parties are Aroras and admittedly governed by Hindu Law, Musammât Wasindi Bai who received a third share of the property, obviously for the purpose of maintenance, would have no right to alienate that share to the prejudice of Chandan Mal, plaintiff. The first Court has found that plaintiff separated from Wiru Mal some years before the latter's death, but this finding is more or less conjectural and based on very slight evidence. The Divisional Judge merely states that Chandan Mal lived separately from his father and both the Courts appear to have overlooked the importance of the question whether plaintiff was joint with or separate from his father in 1886, when the latter died. As we have remarked above, the division of the estate on that occasion proves conclusively that plaintiff could not have been separate in estate from the other members of his family.

We accordingly accept the appeal and grant plaintiff the decree prayed for. Defendants must pay costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

An injunction granted by a decree in respect of an easement does not cease to be executable by the decree-holder merely because, subsequent to the decree, he has transferred the dominant tenement to a third party. A decree-holder is prima facie entitled to execute the decree and it is no answer to his application for execution that he has transferred the decree to a third party, so long as the transferee has neither appeared nor applied for permission to execute the decree. [p. 542, col. 2.]

It is not competent to the executing Court to take into consideration the fact that by a transfer of the dominant tenement the decree-holder is not entitled to enjoy the easement right granted by a decree. [p. 542, col. 2.]

FACTS of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthy, for the Appellant:—The order of the lower Court is contrary to law. Prima facie, a decree-holder is the person entitled to execute the decree. The transferee has not come forward and applied for permission to execute the decree. The decree-holder is the only person on the record and there is nothing in law to prevent him from proceeding with the execution. The executing Court has no jurisdiction to consider as to the competency of the decree-holder to enjoy the easement. Vide Ram Sahai v. Gaya (1); Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Rakhal Chandra Tewary (2); Jasoda Deye v. Kirtibash Das (3) and Hansraj Pal v. Mukhraj Kunwar (4).

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Iyengar and D. Appa Rao, for the Respondents, argued contra.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the lower Appellate Court setting aside a portion of the order of the Court of the first instance. The lower Appellate Court disallowed execution of the decree so far as injunction against the judgment-debtor was concerned, on the ground that the property to which the right of easement was attached had been subsequently transferred by the decree-holder to a third person. The transferee has not appeared and is not on the record of the case nor has he applied for permission to execute the decree. So far as the record goes, the judgment-creditor is the decree-holder and is, therefore, prima facie entitled to execute the decree. It may be that the land having been sold, the decree-holder is not entitled to enjoyment of the easement, but that is a question which it is not competent for a Court executing the decree to deal with in the circumstances of this case. It was bound to allow execution at the instance of the decree-holder as there was no other person who had the right to execute the decree.

The ruling reported as Ram Sahai v. Gaya (1) is very much to the point. There the decree-holder had sold the property which gave rise to a right of pre-emption, and the contention was raised that the property having been sold, the decree could not be executed at the instance of the decree-holder. That contention was disallowed on the ground that the executing Court was bound to recognise the decree-holder on record. There are a number of other decisions which follow the principle laid down there. [See Jagat Tarini Dasi

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Ramanatha Shenai, K. Naraina Rao and K. Yegnanarayana Adiga, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The principal question in this case relates to the construction of the document Exhibit A in the case. It was executed by one Mainda Hegade in favour of his wife, Ummakke, in 1864. It purported to be a deed of sale. But both the Courts have found that it was in reality a deed of gift, and that finding is binding upon us. In fact the finding has not been impeached by either party in this Court. In 1903 Ummakke executed a deed of gift (Exhibit B) of the properties comprised in Exhibit A in favour of the plaintiff. This suit by the plaintiff is to recover the property leased to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on chalgani lease by Ummakke. The contention of the tenants, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, is that they surrendered possession to the 3rd defendant, a son of Ummakke, and that the rent sued for was also paid to him. The plaintiff's answer to this contention is that the property in question belongs to herself alone under Exhibit B, and that she is entitled to recover it from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with the arrears of rent, and that any payment made to the 3rd defendant could not be set up in answer to her claim. The other children of Ummakke including the 3rd defendant were made parties to this suit, and they pleaded that the deed of gift, Exhibit B, was obtained by the plaintiff from Ummakke by undue influence and that in any event, the deed was invalid because under the deed Exhibit A, the right to the property vested not in Ummakke alone, but in herself and in her children subject to the incidents of Alyasantana Law. The District Munsif found that the defendants had failed to prove that Exhibit B was brought about by any undue influence; but he was of opinion that Ummakke was not the sole owner of the property under Exhibit A. The Appellate Court agreed with the Court of first instance with regard to the construction of Exhibit A, and held further that undue influence was exerted on Ummakke to make her execute Exhibit B. In second appeal it is contended that there is absolutely no legal evidence in support of the Appellate Court's finding on the question of undue influence, and that with respect to the construction of Exhibit A, both Courts are wrong. We may first deal with the question of undue influence inasmuch as, if we are able to confirm the finding on that point, it would be unnecessary to go into the construction of Exhibit A. We feel constrained to uphold the contention of the appellant that there is no legal evidence to support the finding. The evidence referred to by the Appellate Court consists of the statements of the plaintiff's 2nd witness and of the 2nd defendant. Both of them speak to statements made by Ummakke, that she did not know the nature of the contents of Exhibit B when she executed it. No pressure is spoken to by either of them. All that is stated is that Ummakke said that she was asked to execute the document and that she did so. This fact, assuming the evidence to be relevant, is no evidence of undue influence at all. There was nothing wrong in the plaintiff asking her mother to make a gift of the property to herself alone, and, if the mother was willing to do so, there would be nothing improper in her taking it. We are, however, of opinion that the evidence of the 3rd defendant and of the plaintiff's 2nd witness, of statements made to them by Ummakke is not in the circumstances of this case admissible at all to prove the facts alleged to have been stated by Ummakke. Her statement was admittedly made after her return from the house of the plaintiff's husband, where she had gone on a visit. According to the evidence of the witnesses mentioned above, she stayed two or three months in that house. Ummakke's statements did not accompany any conduct on her part, nor were they made at the time when the document Exhibit B was executed. Evidence regarding the statements made by her would not come within the purview of either section 8 or section 21 of the Evidence Act. A statement made by a person as to the circumstances under which he executes a document a considerable time after the execution, cannot be admitted to prove the facts stated by him. If we reject the statements, as we hold we are bound to do, there is absolutely no evidence in support of the plea of undue influence. We must, therefore, set aside the finding of the lower Appellate Court on that question.

It is then necessary to decide what right Ummakke obtained under Exhibit A. The terms of the document seem to us to be quite unambiguous. Mainda Hegade delivers the property absolutely to his wife and says that she is to enjoy the property from generation to generation. These are words appropriate for the creation of an absolute interest, and they are not consistent with any limitation of the right of the donee. It may be, as urged by the learned Vakil for the respondent, that the donor wished by the gift to benefit not only his wife but also his children. But the question is, what is the correct interpretation to be placed upon the words of the document. On that matter, we have no doubt that it creates an absolute interest in favour of the wife. The donor may have hoped that his wife would transmit his estate to all his children and was content to rely on her doing so, but whatever his idea may have been, the document is perfectly clear and we cannot hold that it confers on Ummakke any other than an absolute estate. The case is not similar to Kunhacha Umma v. Katti Mammi Hajee (1) where the gift was to a woman and her children. The lower Appellate Court refers in support of its construction to two documents, Exhibits XIV and XV, which came into existence two years before the date of Exhibit A. They were apparently prepared by Mainda Hegade for the purpose of being executed. These documents are of no use in construing Exhibit A, which is in our opinion unambiguous. It may be that the donor changed his mind. He certainly did so as to the language in which he should express his wishes. But whether he had any different intentions at the time of Exhibit A from those he had at the time when Exhibits XIV and XV were prepared, or not, the construction of Exhibit A cannot be controlled by anything to be found in Exhibits XIV and XV. For the same reason we must also hold that the subsequent documents which were put in to show the conduct of Ummakke as to what she thought was the correct construction of Exhibit A, are also useless. It is settled law that except in the case of ancient documents, the construction of a document whose terms are clear cannot be controlled by the subsequent conduct of the parties. In reality those subsequent documents do not afford much help in the construction of Exhibit A. In 1882 it appears that Ummakke sued a tenant for rent in conjunction with one of her sons. This was 18 years after Exhibit A was executed; but it appears also that in 1892 she instituted another suit against a tenant by herself. The only other document relied on as evidence of her conduct is a petition by her son, Chandayya, for pattah for a land adjoining one of the items included in Exhibit A. The petition stated that Muli No. 18 included in Exhibit A was in the possession of the applicant Chandayya; but the Revenue Authorities in their order recognised the possession only of Ummakke and granted a cowl in favour of Chandayya on the ground that Ummakke consented to it. These detached documents, even if admissible, would afford no safe guide in the construction of Exhibit A, especially when we find that Ummakke did not always act in conjunction with her sons in matters connected with the administration of the property. Mr. Naraina Row has tried to support the judgment of the lower Appellate Court on two grounds, neither of which was raised till now. The first ground is that there was a secret trust at the time of the execution of Exhibit A in favour of the children of Ummakke. No such trust was pleaded by the defendants. The question whether there was a secret trust or not is one of fact. We cannot allow it to be raised in second appeal. The District Munsif, no doubt, says that "whatever the outward form which the transaction eventually took, the real nature of the transaction is disclosed by Exhibits XV and XIV and Ummakke took the property burdened with the trust in favour of herself and her children contained in Exhibits XV and XIV." We do not think that the District Munsif in this passage is really speaking of any secret trust accepted by Ummakke. The documents are apparently referred to by him as throwing light on the intention both of the donor and of Ummakke. There is absolutely no evidence that Exhibits XIV and XV were brought to the knowledge of Ummakke and that she consented to accept the property on any trust.

(1) 16 M. 201; 2 M. L. J. 226.

The second contention is that, whatever the original character of the gift under Exhibit A may be, Ummakke threw the properties comprised in it into the common stock by incorporating it with other properties belonging to the family. Here again no issue was raised to try the question; and the question being one of fact, we must decline to allow it to be raised here. It would have to be shown that the property was continuously enjoyed by Ummakke and her children together. The documents referred to by the lower Courts do not bear out any such theory of continuous enjoyment by the whole family. We must disallow this contention also. The result is that the decrees of the lower Courts must be reversed, and the plaintiff must be given a decree for the possession of the property.

Decree reversed.

Appeal from the decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wallis, dated the 19th November 1912, in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court and made in Civil Suit No. 50 of 1911,

RAHMAN BI V. MAHOMED FATIMA BIBI.

JUDGMENT of Sir Arnold White, Kt., C. J., and Mr. Justice Tyabji referring back the case for findings on the questions of fact is printed in 23 Ind. Cas. 651.

FINDINGS.—Their Lordships the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Tyabji in dealing with Original Side Appeal No. 7 of 1913 have called for findings on the following points:—

1. Whether possession of the subject of the gifts in question was in any way purported to be actually transferred by the donor to the donee?

2. If so, in what way possession was purported to be transferred? and

3. Whether, after the alleged gifts, acts of ownership were exercised over the subject of gift by the donor or the donee or by some person acting on behalf of the donee.

Evidence has been let in on both sides. The subject of the gift is two houses, 76, Angappa Naick Street, and 107, Thambu Chetty Street. I shall first deal with 107, Thambu Chetty Street. So far as this house is concerned, it appears from Exhibit H, dated 14th November 1904, that the donor was carrying on business in the house and sold the stock in trade to Mahomed Mohidin by a sale-deed, dated 14th November 1904. Prima facie, therefore, he was in possession before that date and was carrying on business in that house and there is no satisfactory evidence to show that prior to Exhibit H, anybody else was in possession. At the date of the gift which was 5th October 1904, the donor, therefore, must be taken to be in the possession of the house. Subsequent to that date, he took a rental agreement, Exhibit E, from Mahomed Mohidin, dated 3rd December 1904. That rental agreement was taken in donor's name without reference to his having been the guardian of his minor sons. I have no reason to suppose that the rental agreement is not genuine. Subsequent to this rental agreement and on the 15th June 1906, the donor Chinnavappu got a rental agreement, Exhibit I, wherein he is described as the guardian of his minor sons who were the donees and, so far as Exhibit I is concerned, there can be little doubt that Chinnavappu treated the donees as the owners of the house and himself as the guardian. The clear inference to be drawn from Exhibit I is that his object was to confirm the gift and to transfer possession to the donees. It is argued by Mr. Venkata Subba Row that Shah-ul-Ameer, one of the donees, was a major at the time, because he described himself as about 22 years old in his statement, Exhibit O, made by him before the Registrar in 1907. Having regard to the age as given in the deed of gift and the fact that there was no motive why the father should in Exhibit I have described Shah-ul-Ameer as a minor, when in fact he was a major, I do not think I can accept the statement in Exhibit O, probably made for his own purpose, and hold that at the date of Exhibit I, the donee was a major and consequently Exhibit I was inoperative. At any rate, Exhibit I clearly shows that the donor wanted to transfer possession to the donees and did everything that was possible for him to do to give effect to that transfer. Certain rent receipts are produced by the plaintiff's Vakil to show that the receipts for No. 107 for rent were granted by the donor not as guardian but in his own name. These receipts are not in the affidavit of documents and were produced for the first time in the enquiry before me. It is doubtful whether these documents could be admitted at this stage; but, as my attention has been called to the fact that both Justices Bakewell and Wallis held that no document need be disclosed in the list which parties are not bound to disclose in the affidavit of documents, I admitted them. I, however, think that it would be unsafe to act upon these receipts and base any conclusion thereon which would be opposed to the plain tenor of Exhibit I. So far as No. 107 is concerned, the position is that there was no mutation of names either in the Collector's certificate or in the Municipal Assessment Registers, but that the donor recognised the deed of gift and transferred possession of the property to the donees so far as it lay in his power to do so.

As regards No. 76, Angappa Naick Street, the position is different. In this case, there is admittedly no mutation of names either in the Collector's books or in the assessment registers, and so far as it appears from the record, there is nothing to show that the possession was delivered to the donees or the donor did anything in his power to indicate that he divested himself of possession or recognised the donees as the owners. An attempt has been made to show that just as in the case of

RAHMAN BI V. MAHOMED FATIMA BIBI.

No. 107, a rental agreement was taken from one Chinnathambi wherein the donor was described as the guardian of the donees. The evidence as to this is that of Shah-ul-Ameer, Chinnathambi, and Jalaluddin who were examined by the defendants. I must say at once that I do not believe their evidence. I find that there was no rental agreement executed in respect of No. 76 as alleged. In the first place it seems to me that, if, as in the case of No. 107, a rental agreement was executed, describing the father as the guardian, it would certainly have been registered as Exhibit I was. Chinnathambi wants to make out that he was in possession of No. 76 from four months before the date of gift to 11 months subsequently, i.e., from June 1904 to September 1905 and that while in possession he executed this deed of gift. He admits that he was during that period living in house No. 247, Thambu Chetty Street, belonging to the donor. But says that, as he had two wives, one of his wives was occupying No. 76. There is no documentary evidence to show that she ever occupied No. 76, but, on the contrary, such documents as there are, distinctly point to Ummer Sahib and Alli Sahib having been in possession of this property till 1906 and Sikkandar Rowther having come into possession subsequently. Ratnavelu Chetty, who was examined by the plaintiff, deposed that Chinnathambi never occupied No. 76, but that Alli and Ummer were in possession of the property. I find it difficult to believe that Chinnathambi was occupying two houses instead of only one and his explanation for leasing No. 76 is, in my opinion, worthless. I find that so far as No. 76 is concerned there is no evidence of any act having been done by the donor which will indicate any transfer of possession on his part of the property. It has been argued by the plaintiffs' Vakil that possession ought to have been given immediately after the gift and possession given by Exhibit I is not sufficient. These are, however, matters for the Appellate Court to consider and all that I have to submit is findings on the points required.

As regards No. 76, my finding is that possession of the subject of the gift was not actually transferred by the donor to the donee and that, after the gift and until the death of the donor, no act of ownership was exercised over the subject of gift either by the donee or by any person on behalf of the donee but that the donor continued to receive rents from the property.

As regards No. 107, my finding is that possession of the house was delivered to the donee by Exhibit I and that subsequently the donor's position was only that of a guardian.

This appeal coming on for final hearing on the 22nd and 23rd March 1915 after the return of the above findings by the Honourable Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri sitting in the original side upon the issues referred by the Court (Sir Charles Arnold White, C. J., and Tyabji, J.) for trial, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—I have no hesitation in accepting the findings of the learned Judge on the issues referred to him.

As regards the house assigned by Exhibit B, No. 107 in Thambu Chetty Street, it is found that at any rate after the date of Exhibit I, possession was held by Chinnavapu Sahib (the donor) only as the guardian of the donee and it may be inferred that his possession between the date of gift and that date was in the same capacity. I should, therefore, hold that the gift is valid.

The case of the other house, No. 76 in Angappa Naick Street, transferred by Exhibit A is different. The learned Judge finds "that possession of the subject of the gift was not actually transferred by the donor to the donee and that, after the gift and until the death of the donor, no act of ownership was exercised over the subject of gift either by the donee or by any person on behalf of the donee but that the donor continued to receive rents from the property."

There is in fact nothing apart from the recital in Exhibit A (the deed of gift itself) to indicate or suggest any transfer of possession or change of ownership. To this must be added the fact that the income of the property is by Exhibit A secured to the donor for his life; and that the donor omitted to take the simple and common place step of securing mutation of names in the registers of the Collector's Office or Municipality.

I express no opinion as to the question of whether in a case like this a declaration of gift can itself be sufficient or whether something over and above it must always be required, and I do not understand my learned brother to have intended to decide this point in his judgment delivered at the first hearing of this appeal. But I think the facts in this case justify the inference that the gift of this house was not intended to be effective: and should not be given effect to.

It is argued that the two gift-deeds were executed on the same day and are identically worded while the inference from the failure to secure mutation of names is the same in each. But in the one case there is something to rebut this inference: in the other there is not. And the fact that the donor went to the entirely unnecessary trouble and expense of executing and registering separate sale-deeds for the two houses, certainly suggests a possibility of different intentions regarding them.

I would, therefore, hold the gift by Exhibit A to be invalid.

TYABJI J.—I have arrived at the same conclusion. I agree with Kumaraswami Sastri, J.'s appreciation of the evidence and in his findings of fact. The result is that as regards one of the gifts (Exhibit B) we find the father dealing with the property after the declaration of gift on the basis that the son was its owner. This conduct of the father indicating that the son was the owner of the property, strongly supports the conclusion that there was "on the part of the father.....a real and bona fide intention to make a gift," Ameer-oonnissa Khatoon v. Abeldounnisa Khatoon (1), and that he had completely transferred the ownership of the property to the donee. I come to the conclusion, therefore, that the gift under Exhibit B was valid and complete.

With reference to the other gift, Exhibit A, all we have is a bare declaration of gift by the father. In the circumstances of the case (including the fact that the father reserved to his own use the rents and profits of the property during his life-time) no aid can be had from the application of the (1) 2 I. A. 87 at p. 104; 15 B.L.R. 67; 23 W. R. 208.

profits of the gift, though ordinarily, as Sir Barnes Peacock pointed out in the case already cited at page 98, "the mode in which the father dealt with the profits would be important as regards the bona fides and completeness of the gift as throwing light upon the intention." There are circumstances on the other hand showing that there was no intention to make a complete transfer by way of gift. These circumstances are, in my opinion, sufficient to turn the scale in a case where the father reserves the rents and profits to his own use and where, therefore, their application cannot be referred to for discovering where the ownership lies. For there is no mutation of names in the Collector's books or in the Municipal records, no tenants are asked to attorn to the donee, or informed that in future the donee is their landlord nor public acknowledgment of the ownership of the donee. In such a case it would be quite unsafe to hold that there was any intention to transfer the property because a declaration of gift was made and the donor was the father and guardian of the minor donee. For the reasons I have already given, it seems to me that the presumption of law that the gift is completed on the declaration cannot be made the basis for holding that the gift must be necessarily considered in every case to be proved to have been intended to be made and to be completed, when all that is proved is that there was a declaration of gift by the father or grandfather in favour of his minor son or grandson. The surrounding circumstances may show, as they do here, that the alleged gift was not intended to operate as a transfer to the donee.

BY THE COURT:—In the result there will be a declaration that the gift under Exhibit A was invalid, but that the gift under Exhibit B was valid and complete, and the properties referred to in Exhibit A formed part of the estate of the deceased Mahomed Ibrahim alias Chinnavapu, but that the properties referred to in Exhibit B, did not so form part.

The suit does not expressly purport to be one for administration and has not been tried as such, but we find ourselves unable to accede to the plaintiff's request to ignore the contentions raised in the written statement of the defendants which are to the effect that the deceased Mahomed Ibrahim died possessed of other properties movable (and perhaps also immovable) which ought to be administered. We do not think that in the circumstances of this case we ought to pass a preliminary decree for the partition amongst the heirs of the deceased of the properties referred to in Exhibit A alone without any enquiry of the nature required in an administration suit. For we find that on the pleadings the most proper course would be to proceed on the basis of this suit being for the administration of the estate of the deceased.

We remand the suit to the original side, therefore, for trial of the other questions raised on the pleadings. The parties may be required, if necessary, to put in fresh statements so that the issues necessary to be raised and considered in a suit for the administration of the estate of Mahomed Ibrahim may be raised and decided.

The costs will be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Held, further, that assuming that the way came into existence only after the partition, the fact that the tenant in possession of one tenement had been using the path over the other for about 60 years, would lead to the inference that the user had its origin in a grant not as a matter of legal presumption, but a grant which may be found as an inference of fact. JUDGMENT—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of a right of way, for restoration of the path to its former condition and for perpetual injunction. The Courts below have concurred in decreeing the suit, and the defendants have appealed to this Court.

The first contention raised on behalf of the appellants is that the suit ought to fail, as the owners of all the servient tenements over which the way is claimed, have not been made parties to the suit, and the case of Madan Mohan Chattopadhyaya v. Akshoy Kumar Barui (1) is relied on in support of the contention. It is not alleged that the owner of any land other than bhadrar kola over which the way passes, has obstructed the plaintiffs or ever has denied the plaintiffs' right. The owners of the land bhadrar kola alone have caused the obstruction, and all the owners of that land have been made parties to the suit. In the case cited above, all the servient owners were not made parties and the learned Judges observed that it was difficult to see how a decree based on an easement in that state of the record could be passed. But "all the servient owners", I think, mean all the servient owners who had raised objections to the plaintiffs' right of way and against whom there was a cause of action and do not refer to the owners of all the tenements over which the way passed. If a way passes over 50 different parcels of land owned by 50 different persons, and the owner of the fiftieth parcel obstructs the way on his own land and the owners of the remaining parcels do not raise any obstruction nor even deny plaintiff's right, I do not think the latter are necessary parties or can be joined in a suit against the person who obstructs the way. The plaintiffs in the present case complain of the obstruction at the site of the bhadrar kola, and all the owners of that tenement have been made parties. They no doubt pray for a declaration of their right of way which is described as passing over the lands of other persons but that is merely descriptive of the way, and they have no cause of action against the owners of the other tenements. One Siva Prasanna, the owner of a tenement over which the way passes, was made a party defendant and he pleaded that there was no cause of action against him. The obstruction being confined to bhadrar kola alone, there was no cause of action against the owners of the other tenements over which the way passes. I am accordingly of opinion that this contention has no force.

(1) 5 Ind. Cas. 23; 14 C. W. N. 15.

MADAN MOHAN V. SASHI BHUSAN.

Secondly, it has been argued that the user by the plaintiffs' tenants cannot inure to the benefit of the plaintiffs. But the enjoyment by the tenant in possession of the dominant tenement under a claim of right in respect of the dominant heritage may give the owner a prescriptive right. The easement is acquired for the benefit of the dominant tenement, and becomes appurtenant to it into whatsoever hands it passes. See Goddard on Easements, 7th Edition, page 223, Gale on Easements, 6th Edition, page 202. Section 12 of the Easements Act (V of 1882) lays down that an easement may be acquired on behalf of the owner of immoveable property by any person in possession of the same. Although the Act does not apply to Bengal, it shows that the principle is a well-recognised one. It was contended that the servient owner may allow successive tenants in temporary occupation (say for 2 or 5 years each) of the dominant tenement to use a way, but that such user cannot confer a right upon the landlord. But this question does not arise in the present case, as one of the tenants alone is found to have used the way for 25 years. The lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiffs themselves have been in possession of the dominant tenement for 20 years and that before that their tenants were in possession of the same from 1258 (1851) and that it was clearly established by the evidence that the way had been in existence from beyond that time. The user by the plaintiffs themselves is sufficient, in so far as the suit is based upon section 26 of the Limitation Act.

The third contention is that the Court below has misconstrued the word "adhin" in the road cess return and that it ought to have held that the plaintiffs were subordinate tenure-holders under the defendants. I am of opinion, however, that the Courts below have rightly construed the word "adhin" as meaning "appertaining to" and not "subordinate" to the howla, and that they have arrived at a right conclusion in holding that they were not subordinate tenure-holders.

The fourth point taken is that as both the plaintiffs and the defendants hold tenures within the same howla, the plaintiffs are co-owners with the defendants and cannot acquire a right of easement against the defendants. They are not co-owners of the same piece of land and the lands held by them respectively are separate. It is found that the howla was partitioned among the co-sharers long ago and the dominant tenement fell to the share of the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-title, while the servient tenement fell to the share of the defendants on partition. The defendants do not admit that the plaintiffs have any right to the servient tenement. But although the parties hold separate tenures and the tenures are permanent, they hold under the same landlord and the question, therefore, arises, whether one permanent tenure-holder can acquire an easement by prescription against another permanent tenure-holder under the same landlord. The ordinary rule no doubt is that a prescriptive right cannot be acquired by one tenant against another tenant of the same landlord. In the case of Kilgour v. Gaddes (2), Collins, M. R., referring to section 2 of the English Prescription Act said: "It appears to me clear that under the section, the right cannot be acquired merely by a tenant as against a tenant, but must be acquired by the owner of fee in one of the tenements as against the owner of the fee in the other. Here the respective tenants of the so-called dominant and servient tenements hold under the same landlord; and, if the proposition be correct that a prescriptive right of way under section 2 of the Act must be acquired by the owner of the fee in one of the tenements as against the owner of the fee in the other, then in this case the defendant's contention would involve the result that the tenant of one of the tenements has acquired for his landlord a right of way over the landlord's own land; which is impossible and inconsistent with the essential notion of a right by prescription, namely, that the right is acquired by the owner of land over land belonging to another owner. I limit what I am saying to such an easement as a right of way, because questions with regard to the easement of light stand on a different footing, and depend on the provisions of section 3 of the Act. The present case depends on section 2, which deals with prescriptive rights of way and other similar easements," and it was also pointed out that the reason why a prescriptive right of way cannot be acquired by user by one tenant over land in occupation of another tenant of the same owner is that the enjoyment of the easement in that case would not be as of right.

In that case the question arose between two termors. A permanent tenure-holder like a mokuridar in this country does not stand in the same position as a termor. As pointed out by Pontifex, J., in Kasumunnissa v. Nilratan Bose (3), in this country putnis, surpeshgis, leases and interests of that nature are very considerable interests in the land and cannot be looked upon as a mere lease for a term of years and are in fact substantial proprietary interests, and it was held by the Privy Council in Sonet Koer v. Himmat Bahadoor (4) that a mokurari tenure is an absolute interest which does not revert to the zemindar on failure of heir of the grantee, and that it goes to the Crown by escheat.

But it was held in the case of Kally Das Ahiri v. Monmohini Dassee (5) that though there may be some correspondence between a conveyance in fee simple and a mokurari manrusi lease, in its practical results the legal effect is not the same, and that an owner by granting a lease in perpetuity carves a subordinate interest out of his own and does not annihilate his own interest, and that the word "lease" implies an interest still remaining in the lessor. The observations of the learned Judge in that case were quoted with approval by the Privy Council in the case of Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan Nandi (6). In the case of Mani Chander Chakerbutty v. Baikanta Nath Biswas (7), it was held that an osat talukdar cannot acquire an easement by prescription in respect of the water of a tank of his lessor. The learned Judges in that case observed that although tenants with permanent rights have very extensive rights, still a tenant is always a tenant and never an owner of the land and as he always derives his rights from the lessor, and as the latter cannot have the right of enjoyment of an easement as of right against himself, so neither can his tenant against him.

MADAN MOHAN V. SASHI BEUSAN.

The tenement over which the right was claimed in that case was not in the possession of another permanent tenure-holder but appears to have been in the khas possession of the landlord himself.

Having regard, however, to the present state of the authorities, it seems very doubtful whether a tenant although he is a permanent tenure-holder, can acquire a prescriptive right of way against another permanent tenure-holder under the same landlord.

The question is one of importance and requires careful consideration; but it is not absolutely necessary to decide it in the present case.

Although the plaintiffs may not claim a prescriptive right because both they and the defendants are tenants under the same landlord, I think the Courts below are right in presuming an implied grant upon the facts proved in the case. The two tenements at one time belonged to the same persons, i.e., before the partition. The presumption in favour of the grant of an easement upon the severance of a heritage by its owner into two or more parts, arises primarily with reference only to continuous and apparent easements, and a way is evidently not a continuous nor always an apparent easement [see Ram Narain Shaha v. Kamala Kanta Shah (8)], and it is accordingly contended on behalf of the appellant that in the absence of an express grant, no right of way could be claimed.

The distinction between continuous and discontinuous easements has, however, recently been considerably modified, although the decisions in the recent cases, as observed in Goddard on Easements, 7th Edition, page 196, have "unfortunately not tended to simplify, define or render the rule of law clear as to implied grants and reservations of continuous and discontinuous easements on severance of property and the effect has tended rather to indecision than to settlement of the principles of law." In this state of the authorities, I do not think it will serve any useful purpose by discussing the English cases on the point. The result of the authorities is stated in Goddard on Easements (7th Edition, at page 197) thus:—

"The net result is that the distinction which was made in Pearson v. Spencer (9), Worthington v. Gim on (10) and Pollen v. Bastard (11) between continuous and discontinuous easements, though not altogether abrogated, has been very much modified: for Brown v. Alabaster (12) and Thomas v. Owen (13) are decisions that if ways are made in a defined direction and between fixed bounds and are evidently intended to be permanently attached to one part of a property for the sole use thereof, no distinction can be made between a right of way which is a discontinuous easement and a continuous easement, though probably it would still be held that no grant could be implied on division of a property if the way were an ill-defined track, unmetalled and unpaved, over unenclosed ground of the vendor of the would-be dominant estate."

The fact that a path is metalled and paved would no doubt indicate permanence in the adaptation of the tenement, but I do not think the learned author means to say that it is absolutely necessary that the path should be paved and metalled even if it otherwise appeared that there was permanence in the adaptation.

The plaintiffs purchased the dominant tenement so far back as 1851, i.e., about 60 years ago, after partition between their vendors and their co-sharers. The lower Appellate Court has found that it was clearly established by evidence that the way had been in existence from beyond that time and in fact it has been found upon the evidence on both sides that the way has been in existence from time immemorial. The Court of first instance says, "moreover the right to use the path in question was practically a right inseparably attached to the bari by immemorial user and cannot be detached from it, and so whoever becomes the owner of the bari must have a right to use the path for all purposes. The existence of this path from a very remote past, and its enjoyment down to the time of the obstruction complained of by the plaintiffs and the previous occupiers of the bari, lead me to refer this long enjoyment to a legal origin and to presume a grant or an agreement between the owners of the howlas creating this right."

The facts found, therefore, show that the path was evidently intended to be permanently attached to, and for the use of, the would-be dominant tenement now occupied by the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge finds that there could be no question as to the fixity of the path. So it was not an ill-defined track but a formed road. It may not be paved or metalled: very few private paths in villages are metalled or paved in this country, but the facts found show that there was a permanence in the adaptation of the tenement from which continuity could be inferred.

In these circumstances, I think the Courts below are right in presuming an implied grant on severance of the two tenements. But even if there was no formed road or a way of the nature stated in the passage in Goddard on Easements cited above during the unity of possession of the two tenements and the way as it is came into existence only after the partition, the fact that the tenant in possession of one tenement has been using the path over the other for about 60 years would lead to the inference that the user had its origin in a grant not as a matter of legal presumption, but a grant which may be found as an inference of fact. And I think it is open to a Court dealing with facts to draw such an inference of fact from an unbroken user for about 60 years. The Court of first instance expressly drew such an inference and the Court of Appeal below confirmed it. The user is found to have been as of right.

The Court of Appeal below has further found that the disputed way is one of absolute necessity and the only way for ingress and egress to and from the plaintiffs' dwelling houses. It is true every right of way of necessity is founded upon presumed grant, and unless a grant can be presumed, no way of necessity can be claimed. But on a severance of a property, a grant by the owner of one of the severed portions to the owner of the other can be presumed, and has been presumed in this case.

It was pointed out, on behalf of the appellants, that according to the finding of the Court below, the path cuts the kola diagonally from north-west to south-east, whereas the Commissioner's map shows a different direction of the path, and that this shows that there was no definite pathway. But the apparent discrepancy is explained by the fact that the plan attached to the plaint is a rough sketch and what is shown as an oblong figure in the plan is shown in the Commissioner's map in a different shape. The question does not appear to have been raised in the Courts below and I do not think that there is any force in this objection.

I am accordingly of opinion that the plaintiffs have established their right of way, and that the decree of the Court below is correct. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 6th June 1914.

Messrs. C. C. Dillon and Damodar Das, for the Appellants.

ABDUL RAHMAN v. AHMADAR RAHMAN.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was brought to realise the amount of a mortgage, dated the 7th of February 1910. The mortgage was made by one Musammat Thakuri, the widow of Pat Ram. The defendants to the suit were Qabza, Dalla, Rasalu and Musammat Parsanni. Musammat Parsanni and Rasalu were pro forma defendants, vendors of the defendants Qabza and Dalla. The defence was that there was no legal necessity. The plaintiffs replied that there was legal necessity and that even if there was no legal necessity, the defendants claiming under Rasalu had no locus standi to contest the legality of the mortgage, in that Rasalu had no right of inheritance to the estate of Pat Ram, the husband of Musammat Thakuri. The Court below has decreed the suit in part. It has held that there was legal necessity to the extent of Rs. 498-8-0, principal and interest. Two appeals have been preferred. The plaintiffs have appealed in regard to so much of their suit as was dismissed, whilst the defendant Qabza contends that legal necessity for no part of the mortgage-money was proved.

We shall first deal with the question of necessity. The evidence consisted of the proof that there had been a previous debt incurred by Musammat Thakuri, but there is no evidence to show that there was any necessity for the incurring of this previous debt. In our opinion under these circumstances legal necessity was not proved.

The second question, namely, whether the defendants had any locus standi to contest the validity of the mortgage, depends upon whether or not Rasalu was a reversioner or otherwise entitled to succeed to the property. Rasalu according to the findings of the Court below was the daughter's daughter's son of the grandfather of Pat Ram. According to Sarbadhikary's Tagore Law Lectures for 1882, page 701, a grandfather's daughter's daughter's son is a bandhu ex parte paterna, and we think that he is a bandhu. Under these circumstances, the defendant Qabza is entitled to contest the validity of the mortgage.

It was contended that Qabza who claimed under Rasalu could not contest the validity of the mortgage on one other ground, namely, that Rasalu took a sale-deed from Musammat Thakuri of a portion of the estate of Pat Ram and, therefore, was estopped from denying that she was not entitled to all Pat Ram's estate. We do not agree with this contention. The property purchased by Rasalu from Musammat Thakuri was not the same as is now in dispute. Under these circumstances, it seems to us that the appeal fails and must be dismissed. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 161—Putni tenure, unregistered purchaser of, right of—Incumbrance.

Per Jenkins, C. J., and N. R. Chatterjea, J., (Mullick J., dissenting).—An interest of an unregistered purchaser of a portion of a putni tenure is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 558, col 1; p. 561, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 29th April 1910, confirming that of the Additional Munsif, Fatikchhari, dated the 27th May 1909.

The appeal came up for hearing at the first instance before N. R. Chatterjea and Mullick, JJ., who passed the following

JUDGMENT.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—The plaintiff-appellant purchased a putni taluk at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, and sued to recover possession of the lands in suit which were included in the taluk, from the defendants who were in possession thereof by purchase from the former putnidar. The Courts below dismissed the suit on the ground that the purchases made by the defendants of portions of the putni were "incumbrances" within the meaning of section 161, Bengal Tenancy Act, which had not been annulled according to the provisions of section 167 of that Act. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

Before dealing with the above question, I will notice a point raised on behalf of the respondents, viz., that the landlord was bound to recognise the transfers of portions of a permanent tenure, and the transferees not having been made parties to the rent suit, the sale held in execution of the decree for rent passed only the interest of the person who was a party to the decree. But the tenure in the present case is a putni tenure, and under the Putni Regulation, transfers of fractional portions of a putni taluk are not binding upon the zemindar, although the transferee acquires a valid title to the portion purchased. This is clear from sections 5 and 6 of the Regulation, and if any authority were needed, I may refer to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Watson & Co. v. Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (1). The cases relied upon on behalf of the respondent do not support his contention. In Sourendra Mohan Tazore v. Surnomoyi (2), it was held that although the transferee of a fractional share of a putni cannot enforce registration of his name on payment of the necessary fee and tender of the requisite security, yet the transfer is not altogether void, and he is liable for rent severally and jointly with the registered tenant, if the landlord chooses to recognise him as one of the joint holders of the putni and he is also liable for the entire rent of the putni estate. The other case, Aosub Ali Pramanik v. Biseshuri (3), also is to the same effect. These cases are no authorities for the proposition that the transfer of a share in putni, without the express consent of the zemindar is binding upon him. They only lay down that the transferee is liable jointly with the registered putnidar if the landlord chooses to recognise him as one of the joint holders of the putni. In the present case, the zemindar did not recognise the transferees and he was not bound to do so. This contention must, therefore, be overruled.

The zemindar sued the registered putnidar for rent, and in execution of the decree for rent brought the tenure to sale, and the plaintiff purchased it with power to annul all incumbrances. The defendants were unregistered transferees of the putni, and the question is whether their interests were incumbrances within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Now the defendants being transferees of portions of the putni, their position was that of co-sharers of the former putnidar though not recognised by the landlord. The sale held in execution of the decree for arrears of rent against the recorded putnidar passed the tenure itself, and not merely the right, title and interest of the recorded putnidar. The recorded putnidar represented the ownership of the putni, and so far as the putni interest itself was concerned, the sale passed the interest of the transferees of the portions of the putni as much as it did that of the recorded putnidar.

Section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act lays down that for the purposes of Chapter XIV of that Act, the term "incumbrance" used with reference to a tenancy "means any lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding, or in limitation of his own interest therein, and not being a protected interest as defined in the last foregoing section (section 160)." Now the right or interest created by the sale of a portion of the tenure itself is not a right or interest created by the tenant on the tenure, nor, do I think, is it a right or interest "in limitation of his own interest therein." The words "his own interest therein" in the case of a tenure mean the interest of a tenure-holder; and the right or interest created must be in limitation of such interest, and not a transfer of the tenure holder's interest itself. By the sale of a portion of the tenure, the interest of the tenant in the tenure itself to the extent of the portion sold is transferred, and not an interest created in limitation of his own interest in the tenure. It is said that when a tenant transfers a part of his tenure, he does so in limitation of his interest, meaning thereby his entire interest, in it. But the words "in limitation of his own interest therein" would seem to indicate that it is not limitation in respect of the quantity or extent of interest which is contemplated and which could have been sufficiently expressed by saying "his interest therein," but has reference to limitation in respect of the particular interest held by the tenant.

The purchaser of a portion of the tenure professes to purchase and does purchase the ownership of the tenure itself to the extent of the portion purchased, and becomes a co-sharer of the original tenant. He is as much bound by the decree for rent as his vendor. He can maintain a suit for his share of the surplus proceeds of the sale held in execution of a decree for rent against the recorded tenant [see Matangini Choudhuran v. Sreenath Dass (1)]. It is true a mortgagee can also do so, but a mortgagee can do so only as an incumbrancer and to the extent of his lien, whereas the purchaser of a portion of the tenure has right as a tenure-holder to the surplus sale-proceeds representing the portion purchased by him, because the sale is of the tenure including the portion purchased by him.

I think, therefore, that the words "in limitation of his own interest therein" do not refer to a sale of the tenure-holder's interest. As pointed out in Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (5), the right created by a sale of a portion of the tenure itself is to that extent not in 'limitation,' but in "extinction," of the rights of the tenure-holder. If the sale of a portion of a tenure is an incumbrance, the sale of the whole tenure would also be an incumbrance, and the purchaser at a sale for arrears of rent would get nothing unless he takes steps within a year from the date of the sale to annul the interest of the private purchaser under section 167, Bengal Tenancy Act. I do not think such a result was contemplated by the section.

I may in this connection refer to certain observations of Mookerjee, J., in Bhawani Kuer v. Mathura Prasad (6), where one of the questions to be considered was, whether the interest of a person who has acquired by purchase the rights of the owner constitutes an "incumbrance" within the meaning of section 54 of Act XI of 1859. The learned Judge observed: "It was not disputed, and in my opinion, it could not be reasonably disputed, that if a person acquires the interest of the original owner of the estate before the default is made, his interest cannot be said to be an incumbrance and passes by the sale to the purchaser, because what is sold is in essence his share in the estate," and again—"a purchaser of the interest of the proprietor, after default and before the revenue sale, is quite as much bound by the revenue sale as the proprietor himself, because in substance, he occupies the position of the proprietor." The observations were no doubt made in connection with the provisions of section 54 of the Revenue Sale Law, which does not contain a definition of the word "incumbrance" and I have referred to them only to show that the purchaser of the interest of the proprietor stands in the same position as the proprietor himself in relation to the sale.

We were referred to several cases, but none of them holds that a purchase of the tenure-holder's interest is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the case of Chandra Sakai v. Kali Prasanno Chuckerbutty (7), it was held by Norris and Gordon, JJ., that an exchange of land is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Gordon, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court observed—"It seems to us that the exchange by which this land was acquired by the defendants was in limitation, if not in fact in destruction, of the original tenant's right in the holding."

The case of an exchange may perhaps be distinguished from that of a sale, although the two stand on the same footing generally so far as the rights of the parties are concerned. A person who takes the land of a tenure by exchange, does not take it as a part of the tenure nor as a tenant. The tenant does not create an interest in the tenure itself as in the case of a sale, and in that view, it may possibly be said that he creates an interest in "limitation" of his own interest in the tenure.

But if there is no distinction between an "exchange" and a "sale" so far as the present question is concerned, the view that an "exchange" is in "limitation" of the tenant's interest is opposed to that taken in Tamizuddin v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (5), and if an exchange is in "destruction" of the tenant's right it cannot be an "incumbrance" within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I have doubts about the correctness of the decision in the case of Chandra Sakai v. Kali Prasanna Chuckerbutty (7) referred to above, and in any case, I think, it ought not to be extended further. In Jogeshwar Mazumdar v. Abed Mahomed (8), there is an observation that a "lease just as much as a sale, gift or mortgage must come within the word 'incumbrance.'" In that case the learned Judges had only to deal with the question whether a "lease" is an "incumbrance" within the meaning of section 11, clause (3) of the Putni Regulation. It is true that under that Regulation, sales and gifts as well as mortgages and leases are treated as "incumbrances." But the word "incumbrance" appears to have been used in that Regulation in a different sense, as it includes a sale of the entire putni itself. Besides, the purchaser, under section 15 of that Regulation, is entitled on applying to the Civil Court to obtain possession against the assignees of the defaulting putnidar at the time of delivery of possession.

The mode of enforcement of rights of the purchaser of a putni taluq as against assignees of the defaulting putnidar under the Putni Regulation is different from that of a purchaser under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the question we have to consider in the present case is, whether the interest of the purchaser of a portion of a tenure is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which if not set aside under section 167 of the Act stands good against the purchaser.

The other cases referred to in argument are Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (5) and Asgar Ali v. Gourri Mohan Roy (9). Both the cases dealt with the meaning of (8) 3 C. W. N. 13.

(9) 21 Ind. Cas. 58; 18 C. W. N. 101; 18 C. L. J. 57.

the word "incumbrance" in section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the first, it was held that the sale of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 86, sub-sections (6) and (7), of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the case of Jogeshwar Mazumdar v. Abed Mahomed (8) was distinguished. In the second, which was decided by Mookerjee, J., and one of the members of the present Bench, it was held that the surrender by the tenant of his holding to his landlord in that case after he had transferred a portion of his holding was collusive, and that so long as the tenancy of the original tenant subsisted, the landlord was not entitled to eject the transferee. Another question was raised in the case, viz., whether the purchaser of a portion of a holding is not protected under sub-section 6 of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but in the view that was taken of the rights of the parties with reference to the first question, the Court held that it was not necessary to decide whether the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (5), upon which reliance was placed on behalf of the respondent, furnished a correct exposition of the law. The Court, however, observed that at least four points required consideration with reference to the decision in Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (5). The last two points referred to by the Court have no bearing upon the construction of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. With regard to the first two points, it was observed—"In the first place, the learned Judges adopted for the purposes of the interpretation of section 85, which finds a place in Chapter IX of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the definition of the term 'incumbrance' given for the purposes of Chapter XIV alone. In the second place, the decision of this Court in the case of Chandra Sakai v. Kali Prasanna Chuckerbutty (7) shows that an exchange is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and in relation to the question raised before us, there does not appear to be any real distinction between an exchange and a sale. Now, the Court in that case expressly said that it was not necessary to determine whether the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (5) was correctly decided, and reserved its opinion upon the question involved in the said case. But the observation on the first point indicates, if anything, that in the view of the Court, the term "incumbrance" as used in section 161 is not the same as in section 86, and the observation on the second point, viz., that "there does not appear to be any real distinction between an exchange and a sale" was made in relation to the question before the Court, i.e., in connection with section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Court in that case had nothing to do with the construction of the term "incumbrance" in section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and these cases under section 86, therefore, do not apply to the present case.

It is pointed out that adverse possession for the statutory period has been held to be an "incumbrance." In the case of adverse possession, however, although the tenant by allowing the adverse possessor to acquire a right may be said to create an interest in limitation of his interest in the tenure, no right is created in favour of such a person as a tenant as in the case of a sale, and the latter does not hold the portion in respect of which he acquires a statutory title, as a tenant or as part of the tenure. The purchaser of a portion of the tenure, on the other hand, acquires a right to a portion of the tenure itself, and holds such portion as a tenant and as a part of the tenure, and his position, therefore, differs materially from that of a person who has acquired a statutory title against the tenant.

I am of opinion that the interest of an unregistered purchaser of a portion of a putni tenure is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that the purchaser at a sale held in execution of a rent-decree against the recorded putnidar is not required to annul such an interest under the provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In my opinion, therefore, the decrees of the lower Courts should be set aside and the suit decreed.

MULLICK, J.—The defendant is the purchaser of a share in a putni taluk from the registered tenant and the question is, whether his interest is an incumbrance on the tenure within the meaning of section 161, Bengal Tenancy Act. If the interest is not an incumbrance, then the auction-purchaser who is the zemindar is entitled to take possession without annulling the defendant's interest. In the present case, admittedly the procedure for annulment of incumbrances has not been taken within the statutory period of one year from the date of the sale or from the date on which the purchaser had notice of the incumbrance, and the decree-holder's suit for khas possession must fail unless he can show that the interest in question is not an incumbrance.

Now an incumbrance as defined in section 161 being any lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding or in limitation of his own interest therein and not being a protected interest as defined in the last foregoing section, it seems to me clear that the interest of a purchaser of a share of a tenure from one of the registered tenants must fall within this definition, and if the meaning of the Statute is plain, it is not our province to speculate as to the intentions of its framers. A tenant by selling a portion of his tenure creates a right or interest on his tenure as well as an interest in limitation of his own interest in the tenure. The extinction of his interest in that portion of the tenure which is transferred, does not affect the matter. The sole question is whether the definition applies.

This would appear to have been the view taken by this Court in Chundra Sakai v. Kali Prasanno (7). In that case, the plaintiff was the auction-purchaser of a rai-yati holding at a rent-sale brought about by the putnidar and sued to eject the defendants from three plots of land in the holding, which the defendants claimed to have obtained from the recorded tenant in exchange for some other lands outside the holding. It was held that the interest of the defendants was an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161. The learned Judges observed in that case that the defendants had an incumbrance upon the holding and the exchange by which the land was acquired by the defendants was in limitation, if not in destruction, of the original tenant's right in the holding.

Although other Statutes do not always furnish a safe guide, yet in the present case it would be useful to examine the previous law upon the subject of annulment of incumbrances in respect of tenancies. The first Statute which gave the auction-purchaser of a tenure sold for arrears of rent, the power to avoid incumbrances was Regulation VIII of 1819. The term "incumbrance" is not defined in that Regulation, but it is clear from the text that it covers transfers by sale, mortgage or gift. A complete extinction of the tenant's interest is, therefore, under the Regulation not inconsistent with the creation of an incumbrance. But Regulation VIII of 1819 only applied to a limited class of saleable tenures and although section 105, Act X of 1859, rendered all other saleable tenures also liable to sale for arrears of rent, there was no procedure for bringing the latter to sale free of incumbrances. This difficulty was removed by Act VIII (B. C.) of 1865. In that Act also, there is no definition of the term "incumbrance" but the reported cases show that a sale by the registered tenant of a portion of his tenancy had the effect of creating an incumbrance, the transferee being regarded as the holder of a rent-free tenure: Shib Doss Banerjee v. Bamun Doss Mookerjee (10) following Sreenath Chuckerbutty v. Sreemunto Lushkur (11). Finally Act VIII of 1885, while leaving Regulation VIII of 1819 untouched, repealed Act X of 1859 and provided a procedure for bringing all saleable tenures to sale for arrears of rent. It reproduced in effect the provisions of Act, VIII (B. C.) of 1865 in regard to incumbrances and added a definition of the term "incumbrance."

Therefore, upon the analogy of the rulings under Act VIII (B. C.) of 1865, and in the absence of anything in the present Act which compels us to adopt a contrary interpretation, I think it would be reasonable to hold that a purchaser from a registered tenant is in the position of a rent-free sub-tenant and is still an incumbrancer within the meaning of section 161 of the present Act.

In Jogeshwar Mazumdar v. Abed Mahomed (8), the point for consideration before the Court was whether a tenancy granted by a putnidar was an incumbrance within the meaning of the Putni Regulation, but in giving judgment Rampini, J., observed that a lease just as much as a sale, gift or mortgage must come within the meaning of the word "incumbrance." It is true, the correctness of that decision was doubted by Caspersz and Doss, JJ., in Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda

Nawaz Khan (5), where they held that the sale of a portion of a non-transferable holding was not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 86, Bengal Tenancy Act. But with regard to this case, it is to be observed in the first place, that sections 85 and 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885) contain no definition of the term "incumbrance" and in the second place, that the Court was to some extent at least influenced by the consideration that the transfer having taken place without the consent of the superior landlord the transferor had not created any valid incumbrance.

On the other hand, in so far as the decision was authority for the proposition that a sale of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding was not an incumbrance, it was expressly dissented from in Asgar Ali v. Gouri Mohan Roy (9) by a Division Bench of this Court of which I was a member. In that case we relied inter alia on Chundra Sakai v. Kali Prosonno (7) and were of opinion that if an exchange created an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161, Bengal Tenancy Act, there was no reason why a similar result should not follow from a sale, and applying this line of reasoning to section 86 also, we held that an interest in a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding acquired by purchase, was an incumbrance.

My learned brother has in the present case based his decision to some extent upon certain decisions relating to the Revenue Sales Act (Act XI of 1859). For the purposes of section 54 of that Act, it has been held that the interest of a purchaser from the defaulting proprietor before default, is not an incumbrance: Bhawani Koer v. Mathura Prosad (6) and Annoda Prosad Ghose v. Rajendra Kumar Ghose (12). It has also been held that a person acquiring by adverse possession the interest of the defaulter before default is not an incumbrancer. These decisions, however, were founded upon a consideration of the policy of the Revenue Sales Act and it was felt that in the absence of any definition of the term "incumbrance" it would not be right to apply the term to the interest of a purchaser from the defaulter; for in that case, the auction-purchaser would get nothing at all, a state of affairs which would completely defeat the object of the framers which was the security of the revenue. No such considerations of policy arise in reference to sales held under Act VIII of 1865 and still less to those under Act VIII of 1885, which gives by definition a specific meaning to the term. Indeed on general principles, I cannot see how an interest acquired by purchase can be distinguished from one acquired by exchange or adverse possession.

It appears to be settled that for the purposes whether of the Putni Regulation or Act VIII of 1865, or of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation, a person who acquires by adverse possession some part of the right of the registered tenant, is an incumbrancer. I see no reason for doubting that he would also be an incumbrancer within the meaning of section 161 of Act VIII of 1885, notwithstanding the fact that the acquisition of his interest means the complete destruction of the tenant's interest in the portion so acquired.

On principle, therefore, the complete extinction of the tenant's interest in a part of the tenancy does not seem to be inconsistent with the terms of section 161.

But in the case before us, there is a further ground for holding the interest of the transferee to be an incumbrance. That ground is that the purchaser having acquired a fractional share and not being entitled to claim registration under the Putni Regulation, the extinction of the purchaser's interest qua the landlord is not complete. There has, therefore, been no complete extinction of the tenant's interest.

The result is that I summarise the grounds upon which I base my judgment as follows:—

1. The definition in section 161, Bengal Tenancy Act, covers the sale of a portion.
2. The reported decisions seem to support the view I have taken, with the exception of the cases under Act XI of 1859 which do not apply and Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (5) which has been dis-sented from.
3. No question of policy stands in the way.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

As we differ in opinion on a point of law, viz., whether the interest of an unregistered purchaser of a portion of a putni tenure is an "incumbrance" within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the case is laid before the Chief Justice, so that the point may be referred to one or more Judges under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The case came up for final disposal before Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J.

Babus Prabodh Kumar Das and Khitish Chandra Chakerverty, for the Appellant.

Babus Dhirendra Lal Kastgir and Biraj Mohun Mojumdar, for the Respondents.

JENKINS, C. J.—The point of law referred under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure is whether the interest of an unregistered purchaser of a portion of a putni tenure is an "incumbrance" within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In its practical aspect, the question is whether a purchaser of a tenure under a rent-decree must annul the interest of an unregistered purchaser in order to get a clean title, and whether on his failure so to do, the title of the unregistered purchaser prevails against him. It is not suggested that it was a defect in the rent-decree that the unregistered and unknown purchaser was not a party to the suit; the registered tenant represented the ownership of the whole tenure and as the sale was not of the defendant's interest but of the whole tenure, that tenure passed to the purchaser on the sale in execution of the rent-decree. The only limitation on the purchaser's acquisition was that he took subject to the interests (if any) defined in Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act as "protected interests," but with power to annul the interests defined in that chapter as "incumbrances." There were no protected interests, but it is contended that the interest of the unregistered purchaser is an "incumbrance," and that as the necessary steps to annul it were not taken, it still subsists. In support of this view reliance is placed on the meaning ascribed to the terms "incumbrance" by section 161.

The section runs as follows:—"For the purposes of this Chapter (a) the term 'incumbrance', used with reference to a tenancy, means any lien, sub-tenancy, easement or other right or interest created by the tenant on his tenure or holding or in limitation of his own interest therein, and not being a protected interest as defined in the last foregoing section."

The language used, it is maintained, extends the meaning of the term incumbrance beyond its ordinary signification so as to include any disposition of the tenancy, even an absolute assignment on sale of the entirety, and it is conceded that all that can be urged in favour of an assignment of a part must equally extend to an assignment of the whole; the two stand or fall together.

It is difficult to understand why the inferior interests of a lien, sub-tenancy and easement alone should have been mentioned, if the intention was that the superior interest involved in an assignment was to be included in the general words. It runs counter to the first principles of construction. An incumbrance would not ordinarily mean or include an absolute assignment, nor would it be a right or interest created on the tenure. Can it be said to be in limitation of the tenant's interest? I think not; these words appear to me to refer not to the area but to the quality of the tenant's interest. This view preserves the essential characteristics of a lien, sub-tenancy or easement, for the idea inherent in these leading words is that of a graft on a subject-matter which is not destroyed but still continues, though in a modified form. The more general words that follow are at least as susceptible of a meaning which would give effect to that idea as the wider but less appropriate one for which the respondents contend.

It is urged, however, that there are decisions which compel me to hold an absolute sale as an incumbrance and special stress is laid on the case of Chundra Sakai v. Kali Prosonno Chuckerbutty (7) where it was held that an exchange of land is an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The Court there was dealing with an exchange followed by a long possession, and the subject-matter was a holding, not tenure. The ratio decidendi is to be found in these words: "The exchange by which this land was acquired by the defendant was in limitation, if not in fact in destruction, of the original tenant's right in the holding." A distinction was thus recognised between limitation and destruction and presumably it was considered an exchange was a limitation, for section 161 does not extend to that which is in destruction of the tenant's right. Whether this be a true view of the effect of an exchange, may have to be reconsidered in the future, it does not arise now. I am concerned only with an absolute sale and that, in my opinion, is not in limitation but in destruction of the interest to which it relates. On the question referred, therefore, I hold that the interest of an unregistered purchaser of a portion of a putni tenure is not an incumbrance within the meaning of section 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Therefore, according to the opinion of the majority of the Judges who have heard the appeal, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and a decree for possession passed in the plaintiff's favour.

The case must go back to the Court of first instance for a decree as to mesne profits in accordance with Order XX, rule 12. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs of this appeal and reference.

Decree reversed; Case sent back.

Hindu Law—Dayabhaga—Ajautuka stridhan—Succession—Heir, preferential—Brother or husband.

MAHARAM ALI v. AYESA KHATUN.

At the marriage of a Hindu woman governed by the Dayabliaga school of Hindu Law there was a promise by her brother to give some quantity of land as dowry. The property was, however, given to the woman seven years after the marriage. On the death of the woman her brother sued her husband for the property as the rightful heir of the same:

Held, that the property was the woman's ajautuka stridhan and that her brother was the preferential heir to her husband. [p. 562, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, dated the 30th June 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, Midnapur, dated the 4th April 1912.

Babus Jotish Chandra Hazra and Satkowri-pati Ray, for the Appellant.

Babus Shih Chandra Palit and Kshirode Narain Bhuiyan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, dated the 26th June 1913, affirming the decision of the Munsif. The suit involves the question as to the right of succession to seven bighas of land, which formerly belonged to a Hindu woman who is now dead. The contest is between her husband and her brother. That the property was the stridhan property of the deceased woman, there can be no doubt. The question is what was the nature of the stridhan that was acquired by this woman. The learned Judge of the Court of Appeal below has found that the property was given to the woman seven years after her marriage and that it was a property not given on the occasion of her marriage. The case for the husband, who is the appellant before us, is that there was a promise to give the property at the time of the marriage and that the gift must be taken as a ratification of the promise. That, of course, is not correct. The promise was one that was not capable of being specifically performed. Any seven bighas of land could have been given and there cannot be the slightest doubt that we must take the gift as from the date when it was made to the woman. On the date that the property was given to the woman, there cannot be any doubt that it was an ajautuka stridhan property. There cannot also be the slightest doubt, on the decisions of this Court, that the brother is the preferential heir to the husband. It may be, as has been argued by the learned Vakil for the appellant, that Sreekrishna in his Commentaries says that the husband ought to succeed in preference to the brother when the marriage is accompanied by certain religious ceremonies. That that view has not been accepted in this Court is sufficiently shown by the decision of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case of Ram Gopal Bhattacharjee v. Narain Chandra Bandopadhyaya (1). There Mr. Justice Mookerjee agreeing with Mr. Justice Rampini accepted the opinion of Jimutavahana in preference to that expressed by Sreekrishna. We are bound by that acceptance of the opinion of Jimutavahana and we must adhere to the view that the form of marriage does not alter the nature of the stridhan property. There cannot be any doubt that this property was the ajautuka stridhan property of the dead woman and the decisions of this Court are clear with reference to the brother being the preferential heir to the husband. That being so, we agree in the decisions of the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Muhammadian Law—Divorce—Kabinnamah executed by husband authorizing wife to divorce on ground of second marriage, validity of.

A Muhammadian husband executed a kabinnamah in favour of his wife authorizing her to divorce herself from the husband in the event of his marrying a second wife. He, however, married a second wife and imputed unchastity to his first wife and refused to maintain her. Thereupon a document of taluknamah was executed by the wife in accordance with the provisions to that effect in her kabinnamah.

Held, that the contract was not void and the effect of the second marriage was to give the wife a power to divorce her husband. [p. 563, cols. 1 & 2.]

MAHMUR ALI v. AYESA KHATUN.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tipperah, dated the 15th January 1914, affirming that of the Munsif, Comillah, dated the 28th February 1913.

Babu Sasadhar Roy, for the Appellant.

Babu Upendra Kant Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to recover maintenance against a Muhammadan husband. The claim is in respect of the period of iddat after divorce. A document of talaknamah was executed by the wife in accordance with the provisions to that effect in her kabinnamah. Both the Courts have come to a conclusion that the wife is entitled to maintenance and that the divorce which she purported to effect, was a good and valid one. On appeal, it has been contended that there is no cause of action either in fact or in law. The facts are that the wife claimed under the terms of the kabinnamah to divorce herself from the husband under the powers which had been given her in the event of his marrying a second wife, and further she alleges that she has the right to divorce herself because he has imputed unchastity to her and refused to maintain her. These are findings of fact with which we cannot interfere in second appeal. It must be taken that such facts do exist. But it is said that in law, it was not possible for the parties to enter into the terms which they did. We are referred to the provisions of section 26 of the Indian Contract Act, upon which it is argued that the agreement not to marry a second wife was void. As I pointed out in the course of the argument, we are not concerned, in the circumstances of the case, with the question whether or not the defendant could be restrained from marrying a second wife. The question before us is this, if he does marry a second wife, what is the effect under the terms of the kabinnamah? The effect of the second marriage is to give the wife a power to divorce her husband. That the husband can delegate to her, power to divorce on certain conditions, is not contested before us and as regards the condition against re-marriage which is assailed, we have been referred to the decisions in Badrannissa Bibi v. Mafiattala (1), which was before, and

Ayatunnissa Beebee v. Karam Ali (2), which was after, the Contract Act. An expression of opinion in Mr. Ameer Ali's work on Muhammadan Law was also referred to.

Under these circumstances, we are not prepared to say that the parties could not enter into the contract into which they did enter. Lastly, it is contended that the divorce was bad, because it was not communicated to the defendant by the plaintiff. In the first place, it is by no means clear that in a case of this kind where talaknamah is registered, anything more than this is necessary. The case of Sarabai v. Rabiabai (3) has been cited before us. It is not reasonable to suppose that a registered document of this kind could have been executed in a mofussil village without the defendant knowing that it had been done. But apart from this, it is sufficient to dispose of this part of the case on the ground that the question was not raised in either of the two lower Courts. Had it been raised, the question whether or not there was a sufficient communication or whether the defendant had otherwise knowledge of the divorce pronounced by his wife, could have been entered into. The point not having been raised in the lower Courts cannot, in our opinion, be urged here now.

The result, therefore, is that we affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Execution—Decree—Suit conditionally decreed on Procedure.

A decree was passed in the following terms:—

"It will be established and declared that the sale-deed executed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in favour of defendant No. 1, is not binding upon the plaintiff; possession will be delivered to the plaintiff by dispossession of defendant No. 1 on condition of paying into Court Rs. 66 within one month; in case of default, the plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed." A schedule of costs was given on the assumption that the money would be paid in time. The money was not paid within time.

Held, that under the decree as it stood, the defendant was not entitled to execution for costs.

Execution second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Benares, dated the 8th February 1915.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises under the following circumstances. The judgment-debtor brought a suit claiming a declaration that a sale-deed made by his mother and a brother's widow was not binding upon him, on the ground that it was an alienation made by Hindu widows without legal necessity. The Court held that there was legal necessity to the extent of Rs. 66 and it accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit, but subject to the condition that he should within one month pay into Court the sum of Rs. 66. The plaintiff failed to pay the money into Court within the month. He did, however, pay in on a subsequent date and the Court accepted the money. Thereupon, the defendant Musammât Genda made an application for execution of the decree, contending that inasmuch as the plaintiff had failed to comply with the condition, the plaintiff's suit stood dismissed with costs. The application was to recover the costs that would be payable to the defendant in the ordinary course upon the plaintiff's suit being dismissed "with costs". The plaintiff raised objections. These objections have been disallowed by both the Courts below. The plaintiff has appealed. The decree was drawn up in the following form: "It will be established and declared that the sale-deed executed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in favour of defendant No. 1, is not binding upon the plaintiff; possession will be delivered to the plaintiff by dispossession of defendant No. 1 on condition of paying into Court Rs. 66 within one month; in case of default the plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed." A schedule of costs follows. The schedule shows what the costs of each side would be if the condition had been duly fulfilled. In other words, the schedule is based on the assumption that the money would be paid in within the time specified. It will thus be seen that there was no award of costs to the defendant in the event of the condition not being fulfilled. The decree simply says the suit shall "stand dismissed." It is somewhat unfortunate from the plaintiff's point of view that he should lose the benefit of the decree in his favour simply by reason of his failure to pay the money into Court within the time specified. The defendant, however, is entitled by law to the benefit caused by the default of the plaintiff. On the other hand, the Court executing a decree can only execute the decree as it stands. If the decree was not in conformity with the judgment, it was the duty of the person interested in the decree to have it brought into conformity. In my opinion, the decision of the Court below was not correct and ought to be reversed. I hold that the defendant is not entitled to execution for costs. The other point in the case is connected with the effect of the omission of the plaintiff to pay the Rs. 66 into Court within the time specified. I think this is not an objection which, properly speaking, arose on the defendant's application to execute the decree for costs. If the plaintiff contends that he has still a decree in his favour notwithstanding that he did not pay the money in within the time, he should make an application for the execution of the decree and then the Court will decide the point. If again, the plaintiff considers that he is still entitled to get an extension of time for payment of the money into Court and that the Court has power to grant him such extension, he should make an application for such extension of time and the question can be decided. I wish to say that I am not deciding either of these two last mentioned questions. I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of both the Courts below and remand the case to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court with directions to dispose of the same, having regard to what I have said above. I make no order as to the costs of the appeal.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Grant—Dasabandham rights, grant of, by zemindar to ladies of house—Mortgagee of such rights, rights of—Transferee of zemindari, liability of—"Son to grandson", interpretation of—Custom of such grant, validity of.

A zemindar made a grant for the benefit of the ladies of his family of the dasabandham dues recoverable by him from certain villages and himself undertook to collect the same and pay them on to the ladies. The grantees mortgaged these rights to another person:

Held, that the mortgagees could enforce his rights under the mortgage against the subsequent purchaser of the zemindar's right with notice of the obligation. [p. 569, col. 1; p. 573, col. 1.]

Per Tyabji, J.—The words "son to grandson" used in a grant of this description are merely words of limitation and not of purchase. [p. 569, col. 2.]

A custom providing for grant by a zemindar for the maintenance of the ladies of his family of the dasabandham dues recoverable by him from certain villages and prescribing a particular course of devolution and management of such property, is neither uncertain nor opposed to public policy, and is valid. Appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Arcot, dated the 20th December 1909, in Original Suit No. 35 of 1908.

Mr. K. Raja Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondents.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 5th February 1914, the Court (Miller and Tyabji, JJ.) made the following ORDER.—We do not think, we can decide this appeal without a finding on the 1st issue as to the title of Gangamamba. The District Judge of North Arcot will be asked to return a finding in six weeks. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections. Evidence may be taken.

In compliance with the above order of this Court, the District Judge of North Arcot submitted the following FINDING.—I am required by the High Court to submit a finding upon the 1st issue in this suit, the issue being whether Gangamamba Garu was entitled to half share in the collections as alleged in paragraph 3 of the plaint. The said allegation is that Gangamamba Garu owns and enjoys one-half out of the assessment, jodi, russums, etc., leviable upon all wet lands and dry lands cultivated with wet crops and inam lands in the village of Dalavayipattada.

2. It is explained in this connection that within the Karvetinagar zemindari, there is a separate estate, known as the mahal estate, set apart for the maintenance of the ladies of the palace, and that it is managed by the seniormost Dowager or Rani for the time being. This separate estate has existed from time immemorial. The Manager of the estate is known as the mahal khavand. In 1866 the then zemindar, Verkata Perumal Razu, executed the document, Exhibit A, to his mother Vijaya Lakshmamba Garu, who was then the mahal khavand. This document recites that the irrigation works of certain villages were out of repair and in consideration of Vijaya Lakshmamba Garu having them repaired and paying a certain sum as value of existing works out of her own private funds, she should have the dasabandham right of collecting half wet rents. The document finishes with recitals that this right should be enjoyed by her and her transferees, hereditarily from son to grandson and so on, with powers of gift, mortgage and sale so long as the sun and moon last. The plaint village of Dalavayipattada is included in the document.

3. It appears that after the death of Vijaya Lakshmamba Garu, Konamamba Garu, BANGALU MUTHU VENKATAPPA NAYANIVARU v. GOLLA CHINNABBA NAIDU.

the senior wife of the grantor, Venkata-perumal Raju, took possession of the mahal estate, and after her, the estate came to the possession of Gangamamba Garu, the junior wife of the grantor, who, however, had meanwhile died. The ladies of the mahal were incurring debts and living beyond their means, and so Konamamba Garu as mahal khavani on October 16th, 1888, executed the usufructuary mortgage-deed, Exhibit E, for the dasabandham right in various villages, including the plaint village, to the then zemindar. The zemindar was required to pay Rs. 61,265 to Chandrappa Naidu Garu and Papa Naidu Garu, to pay the mahal expenses, and other creditors, and repay himself out of the dasabandham income giving back the property when he had entirely repaid himself. The zemindar, however, did not pay off Chandrappa Naidu and Papa Naidu, but merely hypothecated to them the rights which he had obtained under Exhibit E. The latter sued and obtained a decree which is now pending execution.

4. In 1894, the zemindar said he could not pay off the debts and the mahal might take back the property, but he executed no deed of release of the usufructuary mortgage. Gangamamba Garu was then the mahal khavani, and it is said she has been in possession ever since. In 1899, the Court of Wards took possession of the Karvetinagar estate and remained in possession until 1905, but they did not interfere with Gangamamba Garu's right to dasabandham. The owner of the ayan right has always collected the whole rent and paid over the dasabandham share to the dasabandhamdars.

5. In consequence of a personal decree against the zemindar, the village of Dallavayipattada was brought to sale on October 22nd, 1895, and was purchased by the zemindar of Bangari Polliem, vide Exhibit B, the sale certificate. This certificate gave all the tinvas, miras, jodi allowances and other rights appertaining to the defendant zemindar. The plaintiff is a double transferee of the dasabandham right from Gangamamba Garu.

6. Upon the hearing of this remand, two further witnesses (Nos. 5 and 6) were examined for the plaintiff and four documents, Exhibits KK, LL, MM and NN, were exhibited. For the 1st defendant, Exhibits XVII and XVIII were filed. The parties also rely upon evidence already on record. P. W. No. 5 was a gumastah under the Zemindar of Karvetinagar for 35 years, and he made the copy, Exhibit KK1, of the letter sent by the zemindar in 1894, saying that he, the zemindar, could not pay off the debts, and the mahal could take back the usufructuary mortgage which had been given to him. The original of this letter has been filed in some previous suit and been lost. It is objected that this letter is inadmissible as evidence for want of registration. The objection is good in so far as the document might be used to prove in itself the extinguishment of the mortgage right, but it is admitted in evidence to explain how the dasabandham right came back to Gangamamba Garu in 1894. This witness says further that the zemindar was meeting the mahal expenses during the continuance of the usufructuary mortgage, i. e., from 1888 to 1894, but not before or after. P. W. No. 6 says he has been a gumastah to the mahal estate for 15 years. The original letter of 1894 (Exhibit KK1) was filed in Original Suit No. 269 of 1900 in the Tirupati District Munsif's Court, but was not reclaimed and was destroyed. The gumastah speaks to the custom of the estate, that it is managed by the senior rani for the time being. He also produced the mahal chitta, Exhibit LL, from 1902 to 1904, showing receipts of dasabandham amounts from Dalavayipattada for Faslis 1308, 1309 and 1310, and he says the mahal was in possession from the year Jaya (1894—1895). Exhibit MM is a letter of 1900 from the Manager to the Court of Wards stating that the Court had not taken the management of the mahal villages.

7. I think it is clear from the evidence now produced and from that already on record that there is, and has been from time immemorial, a mahal estate for the benefit of the ladies of the mahal, and that it is managed by the senior rani for the time being, vide also Exhibits O and O1 where the zemindar in 1888 set out the mahal theory. The first objection taken for the 1st defendant is that Gangamamba Garu was not a proper heir under Hindu Law to succeed to property left by Vijaya Lakshmamba, her mother-in-law. This would, no doubt, be a valid objection were the estate the absolute property of Vijaya Lakshmamba, but as the estate was the joint property of the members of the mahal, and Vijaya Lakshmamba was merely the manager or khavand for the time being, and as Gangamamba Garu inherited merely as manager or khavand on behalf of the mahal, the objection will not hold.

S. The next objection is that the grant Exhibit A specified that the property should descend to son and grandson, and, therefore, the son and grandson of Vijaya Lakshmamba (i. e., the zemindars) are the legal heirs. In the first place, Exhibit A is an outright conveyance, and any limitation and conditions in it are void. In the second place, it is said for the plaintiff that the expression "son to grandson" is mere figurative language implying absolute transfer (vide latter part of paragraph 2 supra), and this I consider is the correct interpretation to put upon it. The argument is that the zemindar was rightfully entitled to the dasabandham right, which, therefore, came to the auction-purchaser under Exhibit B.

9. The plaintiff relies upon certain documents, as mentioned above, to prove that Gangamamba Garu was in possession of the dasabandham right after 1894 and that the Zemindar of Bangari Polliem acknowledged her right. I do not think it necessary to specify the Exhibits (H, H1, K, L, L3 to L9, F, etc.,) and the evidence further, as they clearly prove the point. The 1st defendant in reply pleads that he only recently came to know of the transactions between the mahal and the zemindar, the usufructuary mortgage and the invalid relinquishment, and he cannot, therefore, be bound by any admission which he previously made. I consider that this is a contention which must be allowed.

10. The important question in the issue is whether the relinquishment by the zemindar in 1894 can have any legal force. The letter, Exhibit KK1, is undoubtedly a non-testamentary instrument which purports to extinguish an interest of the value upwards of one hundred rupees in immoveable property, and it, therefore, requires registration under section 17 of the Registration Act. It is contended for the plaintiff that it is open to a mortgagee at any time to remit the debt and say he does not require the security, and that it would not be necessary in such a case to execute a registered relinquishment-deed. In the present case, however, the matter is further complicated by the fact that the mortgagee did not pay the debt in consideration of the mortgage, but further mortgaged his mortgage right to the creditors. The creditors brought a suit, Original Suit No. 39 of 1900, in the Sub-Court and obtained a decree (Exhibit XVII) for the amount due to them upon the security of the mortgage right to the zemindar (Exhibit E), and this decree is still awaiting execution. It does not appear from the decree that the relinquishment of 1894 was admitted or even pleaded in that suit. I entirely fail to see how the zemindar could give up his mortgage right by a mere letter when he had mortgaged it to others. It is, therefore, argued that on the day of the Court sale in 1895, the zemindar had a right to be in possession of the dasabandham right as a usufructuary mortgagee, and that this right passed to the Zemindar of Bangari Polliem under Exhibit B.

11. The Court sale of 1895 was in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 378 of 1880 in the High Court. The attachment of the zemindar's interest in certain villages, including Dalavayipattada, was made on August 3rd, 1885, and it was in pursuance of this attachment that the sale of 1895 was held. It is argued for the 1st defendant that the relinquishment of 1894 was invalid during the continuance of the attachment of 1885, but on the other hand, the zemindar did not acquire his usufructuary mortgage right under Exhibit E until 1883. The usufructuary mortgage right is entirely separate and distinct and certainly cannot be regarded as a mere accretion to the rights which were attached in 1885. If there was no attachment of the usufructuary mortgage right, there could be no valid sale of it, and it cannot be regarded as included in the Court sale of 1895 for which Exhibit B is the certificate.

12. My finding under the 1st issue must be that Gangamamba Garu was entitled, as manageress of the mahal properties for the time being, to a half share in collections, but that her rights were subject to a usufructuary mortgage (Exhibit E) to the zemindar, who had in 1894 waived his right to possession and given back possession to Gangamamba Garu.

BANGARU MUTHU VENKATAPPA NAYANIVARU v. GOLLA CHINNABBA NAIDU.

The new evidence and printed papers are returned herewith.

This appeal coming on for final hearing, after return of the finding on the 15th, 16th, 22nd and 23rd February 1915, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—The subject-matter of the present litigation is the dasabandham rights in the village of Dalavayipattada in the Karvetinagar Zemindari originally granted by the zemindar in 1866 by Exhibit A. They are claimed by the plaintiff (1st respondent) in virtue of an assignment of a usufructuary mortgage (Exhibit C) executed in 1905 by Gangamamba, and the first question is whether this lady was possessed of the dasabandham rights at that time.

According to the plaintiff, the grant by Exhibit A, the genuineness of which is not disputed, was really in favour of the "mahal estate." It is explained that this estate constitutes a sort of endowment for the benefit of the ladies of the zemindar's family, and is managed by the senior married lady for the time being. This estate is of a somewhat unusual nature, and the appellant's Vakil has commented on the meagreness of the direct evidence adduced to prove its existence. On the other hand, the documentary evidence (in particular Exhibits E, F series, M, O and OO) shows the clearest admissions on the part of the appellant (the 1st defendant) and his predecessors-in-title, not only that such an estate existed, but that the plaintiff dasabandham rights formed part of its assets, and that Gangamamba was entitled to enjoyment of the said rights. I consider that the decision of the District Judge on all these points in favour of the plaintiff was justified. I am unable to accept the appellant's contention that an estate of this kind in any way offends against the doctrine of perpetuities.

As regards Exhibit E, I am of opinion that apart from all questions of the admissibility in evidence of Exhibit KK (1), there is evidence to show that in 1894 the zemindar Bomma Raju relinquished his usufructuary mortgage rights under that document (Exhibit E) and gave back possession thereof (in so far as dasabandham rights could be the subject of possession) to Gangamamba. It cannot be held that these dasabandham rights formed part of the property purchased by the 1st defendant's brother under Exhibit B. It being thus found that the plaintiff as assignee from Gangamamba was entitled to receive the plaintiff dasabandham dues, it only remains to decide whether the District Judge was right in giving a decree for their recovery from the 1st defendant.

Whether or no, the holder of the dasabandham rights would be legally entitled to recover his dues direct from the individual ryots of this village is open to doubt, although such a procedure would seem to be contemplated by Exhibit A and for some periods may have been actually resorted to. The difficulties attendant on it are, however, obvious: and it is quite clear that the 1st defendant's brother and predecessor who had succeeded to the rights and liabilities of the grantor of Exhibit A, undertook to collect the whole revenue of the village and to pay to Gangamamba the amounts due to her on account of dasabandham dues—vide Exhibit F, dated 5th April 1903, in which he specifically requests her to refrain from making collections on her own account, and undertakes to pay her the amount due to her for dasabandham. It is likewise clear that the 1st defendant on succeeding his brother accepted the same liability and that up to the beginning of 1907, there was no modification in the system. Shortly before that, the 1st defendant as proprietor of the village had granted a lease of the same for 10 years to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. (Vide Exhibit D.) It would appear from Exhibits M and M1, that in March 1907 the 1st defendant directed the plaintiff, as mortgagee under Gangamamba, to receive the dasabandham dues from the lessees (defendants Nos. 2 and 3). What steps were taken by the 1st defendant to direct the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to pay the same to the plaintiff, does not appear: but it is clear that they made no such payments, and in fact, have throughout denied their liability to do so.

They rely on Exhibit D as defining their liability under the lease: and admittedly this document only provides for the payment of a fixed annual rent of Rs. 900. The 2nd defendant claims that he and the 3rd defendant are entitled under the lease to appropriate the whole rent of the village (or so much of it as they can collect) less this amount. Whatever the rights under this lease (Exhibit D) may be, must form the subject of a separate litigation: the primary liability of the 1st defendant remains and was, in my opinion, rightly enforced by the decree of the District Court.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs. (Two sets.)

TYABJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claims to be paid by the defendants, a half share of a certain cess (referred to as the dasabandham cess) recoverable from the ryots of Dalavayipattada village. The right to recover the other half share of the dasabandham cess is not in question before us, and I shall throughout speak of the cess as referring to the half of it which is the subject of this suit. The plaintiff has obtained a decree against the 1st defendant who now contends that, if the plaintiff has any right at all,—which is denied—it is against the 2nd and 3rd defendants.

The defendants' position appears from the following facts. On the death of Rajah Venkataperumal, the grantor of the sanad, (Exhibit A), his son Bomma Razu succeeded him and all his property was seized and sold in 1895 in execution of a decree in Original Suit No. 378 of 1880. In the auction-sale in execution of that decree, the 1st defendant's elder brother and predecessor-in-title purchased Bomma Razu's interest in the dasabandham cess in question in addition to the other rights of Bomma Razu in the same property. The sale certificate, Exhibit B, is dated the 19th February 1896. The 2nd and 3rd defendants are lessees under the 1st defendant. The lease is Exhibit D dated the 21st September 1906. It is for a term of 10 years relating back to the 1st July 1905. (See paragraphs 1, 2 and 18 of Exhibit D.)

The question from the point of view of the defence, therefore, is whether Bomma Razu had any interest in the dasabandham rights, claimed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's and the defendants' claims are, it is evident, exclusive of each other. They cannot both have title to the same rights and to some extent, the defendants' case is based on a denial of the title of the plaintiff. The defendants, however, raise some further contentions which will have to be dealt with separately.

The plaintiff's alleged right is traced ultimately to a sanad of 1866, Exhibit A, under which Raja Venkataperumal, the then Zemindar of Karvetinagar, granted to his mother, Vijaya Lakshmamba Garu, the right to levy and enjoy a moiety of the dasabandham cess by her and those authorized by her, and by her transferees "hereditarily from son to grandson, and so on with powers of gift, mortgage and sale so long as the sun and moon last." The next step in the plaintiff's title is the alleged devolution of this right from the grantee Vijaya Lakshmamba Garu upon Konamamba Garu, the senior wife, and from her upon Gangamamba Garu, the junior wife, of the grantor, namely, the zemindar. The first question that has to be considered, therefore, is whether this alleged devolution can be held to have taken place and can be recognized in law; and in this question two points are involved: (1) whether the terms of the grant being such as they are, any person other than "the son, grandson and so on" can be considered to have succeeded to the rights granted under Exhibit A; and (2) assuming that a devolution other than that to which the grant refers, can prevail, then, whether the particular mode of devolution relied upon by the plaintiff, can be upheld.

Both these points are somewhat closely connected with each other; for the son of the grantee is the grantor himself, and it appears that the son and the grandson of the grantor have been dealing with Vijaya Lakshmamba, Konamamba and Gangamamba in such a manner that it is impossible to hold that there were any rights left in favour of the grantor in what was purported to be granted away. Moreover, the words cited from Exhibit A, appear to have been used clearly as words of limitation and not of purchase. They indicate that the grantee was to take the fullest and most absolute estate in the rights granted.

RANGARU MUTHU VENKATAPPA NAYANIVARU v. GOLLA CHINNABBA NAIDU.

It is desirable at the outset to refer to the fact that the dasabandham cess has been purported to be granted and usufructually mortgaged exactly as though it were actual land; and in the arguments before us, the same assumption was made throughout.

The rule of devolution under which the plaintiff claims, depends upon the existence of a custom. The question of fact involved in the proof of the custom [Cf. Kunhambi v. Kalanathar (1)] was considered by the learned District Judge in the finding which he has submitted to this Court on the first issue. He came to the conclusion that there was a custom prevalent in the Zemindari of Karvetinagar laying down a particular rule of inheritance with regard to property held by the ladies of the zemindar's family and derived from the zemindar in the first instance for the purpose of maintenance. The alleged custom is that the property, unless it has been alienated during the life-time of the ladies entitled thereto, devolves upon the other ladies of the zemindar's family who would for the time being be entitled to be maintained out of the zemindari funds.

The appellant attacks this finding on what may be analysed as three distinct grounds. It is first argued that the custom is too uncertain to be given effect to; secondly, that it is opposed to public policy, because it ties up property indefinitely; and finally, that it has not been satisfactorily proved to have been prevalent and to have been acted upon for a sufficiently long period with a consciousness that it has the force of law.

There is nothing uncertain about the custom as alleged. Certainly, it is not more difficult of ascertainment than the claims for maintenance of the members of the zemindar's family.

The argument that it is opposed to public policy must also fail, because the custom does not restrict the devolution of property, but at the most earmarks property for a particular purpose leaving each holder of it for the time being a wider power of disposition than in the case of property assigned in lieu of maintenance. The custom appears to be reasonable when considered in the light of the fact that the ladies of the zemindar's family must have some provision made for their maintenance and that this provision in order to be adequate must be of a stable nature and commensurate with the dignity of the ladies. The custom is well calculated to bring about these results.

With reference to the evidence of its prevalence in the Karvetinagar Zemindari, I am not prepared to say that the learned Judge was wrong in the finding at which he has arrived, especially in view of the documents and of the admissions of the parties most nearly concerned and of clear indications that it was recognised as binding by persons who would have been most interested in questioning its binding force. The persons that would have the best information upon it, would be the members of the Karvetinagar Zemindar's family, and not the present plaintiff and defendants. The conduct of the zemindars in the past and of members of their family, bear strong testimony to the existence of the custom.

The only alternative to the recognition of the custom suggested by the appellant is that on the death of Vijaya Lakshammamba Garu her son Venkataperumal, the grantor himself, and on his death, his son Bomma Razu who next succeeded to the zemindari, inherited this right. This alternative cannot be entertained in view of the events that have taken place and of the conduct of Bomma Razu. For Bomma Razu took a mortgage of the same right on the 16th of October 1883 (Exhibit E), five years after Vijaya Lakshammamba's death. It was argued for the respondents that Bomma Razu as the mortgagee of this right, was estopped from denying his mortgagor's title; and Coote on Mortgages, Volume II, page 1434, Pearce v. Morris (2), Kinniard v. Trollope (3) and Debendra Nath Sen v. Mirza Abdul Samed Seroji (4) were relied upon for this proposition. In view of the events that have taken place and of the present title of the parties, it is difficult to apply the rule of estoppel; but it is unnecessary to consider whether it is applicable. In any case, Bomma Razu would not have taken a mortgage of the dasabandham rights if he had conceived himself to be entitled to rights of full ownership in it; and the conduct of Bomma Razu is, therefore, strong evidence in favour of the existence of the custom. He was deeply interested in denying the existence and questioning the effect of the custom, he would have had intimate knowledge of facts enabling him to determine whether the custom was prevalent, yet he acted to the detriment of his own interests in a manner which can only be explained on the basis of the existence of the custom and a consciousness of its having binding force. Exhibits O, OI, OO, E, LL, K, H, H1 need not be referred to in detail; they all support the same conclusion.

Assuming, however, that the custom relied upon by the plaintiff cannot prevail, after the death of Vijaya Lakshmamba Garu in 1883, her son Venkataperumal and on his death, his son Bomma Razu became entitled to the property, and their rights to take possession of the property have never been asserted and became barred long prior to the suit.

I, therefore, proceed on the basis that Gangamamba Garu was entitled to execute Exhibit C which purports to be a usufructuary mortgage of the dasabandham cess, and that the plaintiff who is the assignee of that mortgage, would be entitled to come to this Court in his right as mortgagee, subject to the defences with which I shall now deal.

In 1888, Konamamba Garu who, in accordance with the decision at which I have arrived that the custom relied upon by the plaintiff has been proved, must be taken to have been entitled to deal with the property now in question, executed what purports to be a usufructuary mortgage of it to her son Bomma Razu, Exhibit E. If that mortgage was subsisting at the date of the execution purchase on which the 1st defendant relies, then the plaintiff's right must be taken to be subject to that mortgage, and the plaintiff's suit must consequently fail. It must, therefore, be considered whether the mortgage under Exhibit E was subsisting. With reference to this, the plaintiff contends (1) that the mortgage was released by Exhibit KK (1), (2) that the mortgage right was lost by adverse possession, (3) that the alleged mortgage was nugatory inasmuch as no consideration passed for it, and (4) that the alleged mortgagee is estopped from setting it up as against the plaintiff.

These four contentions are based on different aspects of the same events or pieces of evidence. It may be stated at once that it is not possible to say that on the merits either the plaintiff or the defendants have established any case. On the other hand, the documents and the transactions in question indicate a gross mismanagement of the estate by the zemindar and a complete apathy as to the rights and legal positions of both the zemindar and the ladies of the family and unbusiness-like methods of dealing with valuable rights. Taking the whole of the events and documents together, it seems to me, however, for the reasons which I will state, that the plaintiff's contentions must prevail.

Exhibit E purports to be a usufructuary mortgage. Its object was to provide for the payment of the debts incurred for mahal expenses by Vijaya Lakshmamba Garu; and this was sought to be done by transferring the management of the 32 villages referred to in Exhibit E to Bomma Razu. On the true construction of Exhibit E, it appears that there was in fact no mortgage in favour of Bomma Razu and no consideration received from Bomma Razu, and the real effect of Exhibit E seems to be to entitle Bomma Razu to take charge of the property and to liquidate the debts which were due from the ladies out of the income of the properties referred to in Exhibit E, and after the debts had been liquidated, to hand back the properties to the ladies. This being the original nature and object of the transaction, it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to rely upon Exhibit KK (1) as in the nature of a re-assignment of the mortgage. It is enough for his purpose to refer to the fact that under the document, Bomma Razu would have been entitled to collect the rents and profits of the 32 villages and to pay off the creditors of Konamamba Garu thereout and if he had done so, he would have had a charge on the villages for the sums so paid out. He does not get any other right under the document. The arguments, therefore,

(a) that if there were any failure of consideration for Exhibit E, the only result of it would be that the mortgagor would be entitled to claim payment of the mortgage money and

(b) that in any case, the usufructuary mortgagee gets an immediate right to take possession of the property mortgaged and that this right cannot be affected by failure to pay the mortgage money.

These arguments have no application to the facts of the present case where what is dealt with, is the right to collect the moiety of a cess, and considerations which may be applicable to tangible property, cannot be applied.

It is clear also that Bomma Razu relinquished the right to take possession of the villages and that such a relinquishment does not require to be made by a registered document. [See Thiruvengadachariar v. Ranganatha Aiyangar (5).]

It was argued, moreover, that the auction-sale on which the 1st defendant relies for his title to the property, was based on an attachment of the 3rd August 1885, dated three years prior to the alleged mortgage under Exhibit E, that at that time, even according to the 1st defendant's case, Bomma Razu had no rights over the dasabandham cess now in question, and that it could not entitle the auction-purchaser to acquire rights which had not been attached for the reason that they had not come into being at the time. On the other hand, the 1st defendant relies upon section 70 of the Transfer of Property Act and the decisions in Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami Chetti (6), Muniappa Naik v. Subramania Ayyan (7), Raja Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwari (8), Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zakur Fatima (9), Ajudhia Prasad v. Man Singh (10) and Surja Narain Mandal v. Nanda Lal Sinha (11). It is clear that there is no such accession to the mortgaged property as is referred to in the Transfer of Property Act. It is, however, unnecessary in view of what I have already said to decide whether the comprehensive terms of Exhibit B, the sale certificate, were sufficient to transfer all the rights that Bomma Razu had in the property at the time of the execution sale and whether the absence of any express attachment of those rights, did not affect the purchase under Exhibit B.

In my opinion, therefore, the 1st defendant cannot rely upon the existence of any mortgage rights in favour of Bomma Razu at the time of the Court purchase on which the 1st defendant relies.

The 1st defendant's next contention is that the right of the plaintiff to recover the dasabandham cess must be asserted, if at all, against either the ryots themselves or as against the 2nd and 3rd defendants. This contention falls under the following heads: first, that the 1st defendant was under no liability to collect the dasabandham cess on behalf of the plaintiff; secondly, that as a matter of fact, the 1st defendant did not collect the cess; thirdly, that the right of the plaintiff is as against the ryots, not against himself; and fourthly, that if there was ever any liability on himself to collect the cess, that liability has been transferred to the 2nd and 3rd defendants by virtue of the lease Exhibit D.

All these contentions, again, are based on different aspects of the same pieces of evidence, and it need only be said that owing to his conduct throughout as indicated by the evidence and especially by Exhibits F, F2, M, M1, and S, the 1st defendant cannot be heard to say that he is not liable to pay over the dasabandham cess from time to time—the translation of Exhibit F says “therefore, it is made known to you that the amount due to you will be duly paid to you now and then” meaning thereby “from time to time as the amounts are collected.” The disclaimer of any liability to pay, contained in Exhibit GG dated the 20th February 1908, cannot affect the rights which had already become vested. It is unnecessary to decide in the present case whether the liability to pay to the plaintiff the dasabandham cess rest ultimately as between the defendants themselves, either upon the 1st defendant or or upon the 2nd and 3rd defendants. In my opinion, the right to receive the dasabandham cess has become vested in the plaintiff and by virtue of Exhibits F, F2, M, M1 and S the liability to pay the cess to the plaintiff, rests in the first instance upon the 1st defendant. Whether the 1st defendant assigned to the 2nd and 3rd defendants the right to collect the cess, or whether it is still vested in himself, or whether the 2nd and 3rd defendants are bound to pay the cess to the 1st defendant in addition to the payments they have already made, or whether they have discharged all the liability that rested upon them under Exhibit D and whether Exhibit D may entitle them to recover from the ryots the dasabandham cess to which we have held the plaintiff to be ultimately entitled—all these are questions which need not be considered in the present proceedings.

Finally, the question arises whether the Courts can recognise the existence of such a right as the plaintiff would be entitled to claim on the findings that we have given. We have had occasion recently in Avula Chara-mudi v. Marriboyina Raghavulu (12) to consider the incidence of section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act and section 40 of the Transfer of Property Act, and for the reasons mentioned in that judgment, I am of opinion that the English Law relating to covenants running with the land, is not applicable in India. I am of opinion that the obligation to collect and pay the dasabandham cess was annexed to the ownership of the Dalavayipattada village and as the 1st defendant is the transferee of the village with notice of the obligation, it may be enforced as against him. No reasons have been pointed out why the obligation which is capable of being specifically enforced, should not be so enforced. On the other hand, the principles which underlie section 39 of the Transfer of Property Act favour the enforcement of the obligation.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the decree under appeal is right and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs (two sets of costs).

Appeal dismissed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 34—Attachment before judgment, cash deposited as security for withdrawing—Defendant declared insolvent—Plaintiff, if acquires any right in security deposit—Receiver in insolvency, right of, to get the money.

Where the properties of the defendant, which were attached before judgment, are released on his payment of a cash security and the defendant is subsequently declared insolvent under Act III of 1907, the plaintiff acquires no lien or charge upon the money deposited as security for getting the attachment before judgment withdrawn and the Receiver in insolvency of the defendant's property is entitled to have the money paid to him. [p. 574, col. 1.]

Such money not having been realized in execution of a decree prior to the adjudication order, section 34 of Act III of 1907 does not apply. [p. 574, col. 2.]

Civil Rule against an order of the Munsif, Maldah, dated the 27th July 1914.

Babus Gobinda Chandra Dey Ray and Abani Nath Bhattacharjee, for the Petitioner.

Babus Mohini Mohan Chuckerbutty and Nishitha Nath Ghatak, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The opposite party in this rule instituted a suit for recovery of money on a hatchitta against one Doyachand in the Court of the Munsif of Maldah. He applied for attachment before judgment of certain moveable properties of the defendant. The Court directed an attachment, but ordered that the properties were to be released from attachment on the defendant's paying Rs. 500 as cash security. The defendant paid Rs 500 to the peon who went to attach the properties, which were accordingly released and the money was deposited in Court by the peon.

Subsequently, another creditor of the said Doyachand applied to the District Judge of Marshidabad to have him adjudged an insolvent under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act and the petitioner was appointed interim Receiver of his estate. The petitioner thereupon applied to the Munsif of Maldah for payment of the said sum of Rs. 500 to him and for stopping payment of the amount to any rival claimant. The Munsif on the 11th April 1911 stopped payment of the amount until further orders of the Court.

Doyachand was adjudged an insolvent on the 25th May 1911 by the District Judge of Murshidabad, and the petitioner was appointed Receiver of his estate under section 18 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The petitioner then applied for payment to him of the said sum of Rs. 500. The opposite party obtained a decree in his suit in the Maldah Court on the 20th July 1914, and he objected to the application of the petitioner.

The learned Munsif held that as the money was realised before the order of adjudication was made, the Receiver had no priority over the opposite party and accordingly ordered the amount to be paid over to the latter. The petitioner thereupon obtained this Rule for setting aside the said order.

We are of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute. The opposite party acquired no lien or charge upon the money deposited as security for getting the attachment before judgment withdrawn. It is contended, however, on behalf of the opposite party that the money was paid to his credit and was in fact a part payment of the debt for the recovery of which he had instituted the suit, provided it was decided in his favour, and that the money having been realised before the order of adjudication was made, the Receiver had no right to the same. This argument is founded upon the fact that in the chalan by which the sum of Rs. 500 was deposited in Court by the peon, it was stated that it was deposited to the credit of the opposite party. But the order of the Court was that the attachment on the goods was to be removed on the defendant's paying Rs. 500 as cash security. The peon thereupon could not by any statement of his, convert the security to a payment to the credit of the opposite party, specially at a time when the suit was not decided. It is next contended that the Receiver having been added as a party to the suit was precluded from setting up any right as Receiver to the money. But the decree was only for money, and did not create any charge upon the money deposited and although the Receiver was a party to the suit, there was no decision as to the respective rights of the Receiver and the opposite party to the money which was in deposit in Court as security, nor could there be any such decision.

The money not having been realised in execution of a decree prior to the adjudication order, section 34 of Act III of 1907 does not apply.

We are of opinion that the order of the Munsif directing the money to be paid over to the opposite party, is erroneous. The order is accordingly set aside, and the opposite party is directed to refund the money to the petitioner.

The petitioner will get his costs, one gold mohur.

Order set aside.

Appeals against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 111 of 1911.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellant:—1. The ruling in Raja v. Subbaraya (1) is opposed to all principles of Hindu Law.

2. It was based on Dattaka Chandrika, which is in conflict with the Mitakshara.

3. Texts of Baudhayana, Vashishta and Katyayana agree with the Mitakshara. The Privy Council prefer the authority of the Smritis to other books. *Ayyaru Muppanar v. JUDGMENT.

IN APPEAL SUIT NO. 98 OF 1913.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—One Venkanna adopted the plaintiff in 1898. The 1st defendant was subsequently born. Venkanna died in 1902. The 2nd defendant, the natural mother of the 1st defendant and the adoptive mother of the plaintiff, managed the estate during the minority of the two sons. The suit is for partition for a half share in the family properties. The main contention of the 1st defendant is that the plaintiff is only entitled to a fifth share. The Subordinate Judge, relying on an observation in Raja v. Subbaraya (1), held that the two sons were entitled to equal shares.

The question has been argued at great length before us. I am unable to agree with the Court below. The parties in this case are Sudras. In Raja v. Subbaraya (1), the dispute was between the natural son of a brother and the adopted son of another. It is settled law in Madras, notwithstanding Raghunand Dass v. Sadhu Churn Doss (9) and Giriapa v. Ningapa (10) to the contrary, that, by right of representation, the adopted son would take the share of his father in competition with the natural son of another member of the joint family. That was the only question that arose for decision in the Madras case. At the end of the judgment, the learned Judges say: "If there be such a special rule as is suggested, it is not applicable at all events to Sudras, among whom the adopted son is declared entitled to take an equal share with a legitimate son who is born subsequently to the adoption." Apart from the text of Vridha Gautama commented on in the Dattaka Chandrika to which I shall presently refer, I have not been able to find any authority for this statement. On the other hand, Ayyann Mappanar v. Niladatchi Ammal (2) gave the adopted son only a fifth share in the family properties. Apparently, this decision was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges. In Bombay and Calcutta, subject to the special doctrine which denies the right of representation to the adopted son in a joint family, it has been held that the share of the adopted son among Sudras is only a fourth of that of the natural son. See Raghubanund Doss v. Sadhu Churn Doss (9), Giriapu v. Ningapa (10) and Bachoo Harkisonda v. Nagindas Bhagwandas (3).

On the authority of the Rishis and of the Smrithi writers, I feel no hesitation in holding that the adopted son is not entitled to share equally with the natural son. (1) The well-known text of Vasistha is in Chapter XV, sloka 9, "where a son has been adopted, if a legitimate son be (afterwards) born, the adopted son shares a fourth part." (2) Katyayana is quoted in the Dayabhaga and in Colebrooke's Digest, Vol. II, page 348, as saying: "A son of the body being born, the adopted sons of the same class take one-third of their portion." But in the Madanaparijatha and Viramitrodaya, the sage is quoted as allotting only a fourth part. (3) Baudhayana takes the same view as Vasistha: see Dattaka Mimamsa, section 5, sloka 42. (4) Manu in Chapter IX, sloka 163, says: "The aurasa son alone is the sole heir of his father's wealth; but as a matter of compassion, he may give maintenance to the rest." The Mitakshara interprets this passage as applying to the other class of sons "who are devoid of good qualities," and says that the general rule as to a fourth share, is not affected by Manu's text.

As against these Smrithi writers, we have the authority of Vridha Gautama, who gives an equal share to the adopted son with the natural born son. It is not necessary to consider whether this text of the sage, is an interpolation as surmised by Messrs. Golap Chander Sircar and Ghose. Mr. Shyama Charan Sircar in his Vyavastha Chandrika inclines to the view that the text is obsolete. The preponderance of authority, therefore, is in favour of the view restricting the rights of the adopted son to a fourth share.

Coming next to the commentators, the majority of them enunciate the same rule. It is curious that Vijnaneswara does not even mention Vridha Gautama as an authority on this subject. This marked omission is significant. He refers to a number of Smrithis and propounds the rule, that the adopted son's share is a fourth of the aurasa son's (Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 11, placitum 24, et seq.). Jimuta Vahana, the author of Dayabhaga, in discussing the share of the adopted son in Chapter X, does not mention the authority of Vridha Gautama. The Madanaparijatha and the Viramitrodaya adopt the rule given in the Mitakshara. The Saraswati Vilasa after a full discussion, concurs in the same view. The author does not refer to Vridha Gautama. The first note of dissent is to be found in the Dattaka Chandrika, section 5, paragraphs 24 to 32. The author reconciles the text of Vridha Gautama with the others by restricting its application to Sudras alone. The text itself is general. But the commentator refers to the fact that among Sudras, illegitimate sons are given at least a third share in competition with legitimate sons, and argues that adopted sons should not be in a worse position. It is permissible to point out that whatever may be the social status of an illegitimate son, the fact that he is of the same flesh and blood as the person whose property he seeks a share in, may account for the favourable position assigned to him. The same considerations do not always apply to an adopted son. The other reason given by the author with reference to Manu's text about a man having a hundred sons, does not commend itself to me. It is curious that the Dattaka Chandrika in interpreting Vridha Gautama's text, does not properly explain the "taha Jathe." The author of the Dattaka Mimamsa translates the words as 'possessing good qualities'. Shyama Churn Sircar in his Vyavastha Chandrika gives the same meaning. In Ghose's Hindu Law, the quotation of Vridha Gautama uses the words "Thatha Jathe." Whatever may have been the exact words, their literal meaning is "existing as above." The reference apparently is to the quality which a person to be adopted is expected to possess. Manu in Chapter IX, sloka 169, describes an adopted son thus:—"He is considered as a son made or adopted, whom a man takes as his own son, the boy being equal in class, endowed with filial virtues, acquainted with the merit of performing obsequies to his adopter, and with the sin of omitting them." That is the reason why such an erudite scholar as Nanda Pandita translates Vridha Gautama's text in the way I have mentioned. I am of opinion that Gautama's rule is an exception to the general law. It would be impossible to administer such a rule by Courts, as the determination whether a man possesses good qualities would lead to endless conflict of views. The author of Dattaka Mimamsa, after examining Vridha Gautama's text carefully, inclines to the view taken by Vijnaneswara and the other commentators. Thus we see that with the exception of the Dattaka Chandrika, all the commentators agree in not giving an equal share to the adopted son. Mr. Narayanamurthi contended that as the Dattaka Chandrika is a special treatise on adoption its conclusions are entitled to greater weight than those of the other commentators; he quoted Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (11) for this position. In the first place, the question that has to be decided does not relate to the qualifications of the adopted son or to the ceremonies relating to the adoption. It is a question of inheritance. It is well settled that in matters relating to inheritance the Mitakshara is paramount in Madras. Moreover, as pointed out by Mr. Ramadoss, the authority of the Dattaka Chandrika is not to outweigh the sayings of the Rishis. See Sri Balusa Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusa Rama Lakshmanma (4) and Puttu Lal v.

KARUTURI GOPALAN V. KARUTURI VENKATA RAGHAVULU.

(11) 12 M. I. A. 397 at p. 436; 10 W. R. 17 (P. C.); 1 B. L. R. P. C. 1; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 135; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 361; 20 E. R. 389.

Parbati Kunwar (5). Further, the Dattaka Mimamsa, another special authority on adoption, takes a different view. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the view taken by the Dattaka Chandrika is not binding on us and that the dictum in Raja v. Subbaraya (1) based on this authority should not be followed.

Writers on Hindu Law have almost unanimously accepted the view taken by the Mitakshara. Messrs. Golap Chandra Sarkar, Ghose and Siromani Battacharya are unhesitatingly for a fifth share. Messrs. West and Bolder are of the same opinion. Mr. Mayne expresses no definite opinion on the question. He says that in Ceylon, the adopted son shares equally with the aurasa son. On the other hand, the precedents quoted by Macnaughton in page 184 show that the practice is different in India. On all these grounds, I hold that the plaintiff is only entitled to a fifth share in the family properties.

Another point argued in the appeal relates to the direction in the decree that the 1st defendant's share should be held liable for moneys not accounted for by the 2nd defendant. This is clearly wrong. The 1st defendant may never benefit by the misconduct of his mother. See Sonu Vishram v. Dhonda Vishram (6).

The last point relates to the provision for marriage expenses. In Srinivasa Iyengar v. Thiruvengadathaiyangar (8), Spencer, J., agreeing with Sundara Aiyar, J., held that in partition decrees provision should be made for the marriage expenses of the unmarried members of the family. On the other hand, Sankaran Nair and Oldfield, JJ., in Appeal Suit No. 89 of 1913 have taken a different view. The practice in Madras seems to be in consonance with the view taken in Srinivasa Iyengar v. Thiruvengadathaiyangar (8). See Strange's Manual of Hindu Law, pages 190 and 191. Sir Thomas Strange in Chapter VIII refers to the opinion of Pandits to that effect. Jairam v. Nathu (7) supports the appellant. Such a provision should be made only for persons who are of the same degree of relationship as those who have been married at the expense of the family.

In reversal of the decree of the Subordinate Judge we direct that the plaintiff be allotted a fifth share in the properties found to belong to the family, that in passing the final decree a provision be made for the marriage expenses of the 1st defendant, and that that portion of the decree declaring the 1st defendant's share liable for malversation made by the 2nd defendant be omitted. Appellant is entitled to his costs from the 1st respondent in this appeal.

WALLIS, C. J.—I agree.

IN A. S. No. 107 OF 1913.

We think the 2nd defendant is entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 10 per mensem charged on the estate, and to be paid by the plaintiff and the 1st defendant in proportion to their shares in the joint family property and payable on the 10th of every month. There will be no decree for arrears.

The decree is modified accordingly: otherwise the appeal is dismissed with costs.

IN A. S. No. 158 OF 1913.

The Subordinate Judge is wrong in disallowing item 18 in Schedule A. The reason that this item was sold away to the 18th defendant by the plaintiff is not sufficient to deprive him of his right to claim it as family property. The party whom the 1st defendant alleges as the owner of it was not before the Court. This item must be included in the properties decreed to the plaintiff.

As regards item 11 in Schedule A, item 6 in Schedule C and the E Schedule properties, we think the Subordinate Judge is right. The appeal must be dismissed in regard to them. With regard to the debt covered by Exhibit B, the matter stands thus. Exhibit B is a deed of simple mortgage taken by the plaintiff's father in respect of items 12 and 13 in 1892. At that time he was managing the properties of the 8th defendant's father. In 1895, the latter obtained from the plaintiff's father some of the properties entrusted to his management and gave Exhibit I A as receipt therefor. It is admitted that Exhibit B is not among the documents mentioned in that receipt. The case for the 8th defendant is that Exhibit B was subsequently handed over by the plaintiff's father to him. No receipt is produced evidencing the delivery. It seems unlikely that a receipt would not have been obtained if the document was really handed over. In 1905, the 2nd defendant purporting to act on behalf of the plaintiff and the 1st defendant executed a deed of release by which she gave up the claims of the two minors in Exhibit B. We are not satisfied that this was a bona fide settlement of a disputed claim. The evidence of the 2nd defendant about the properties having been in the possession of the 8th defendant is palpably false, as the properties were subjected only to a simple mortgage. There is no specific evidence that the money due under the document came from the estate of the 8th defendant's father. All that is deposed to is that as the plaintiff's father had the estate in his possession, the money must have come from that estate. We do not think this evidence is sufficient to alter the prima facie character of the transaction. We are of opinion that the money advanced belonged to the father of the plaintiff and 1st defendant. They are entitled to their respective shares in the debt; items 12 and 13 of Schedule A are subject to this mortgage-debt.

We cannot uphold, for the reasons given in Appeal No. 98, the decree by which the 1st defendant's share in the property has been held liable for the moneys not accounted for by the 2nd defendant. We must ask the Subordinate Judge to appoint a Commissioner to take an account of (a) the moneys which came into the hands of the 2nd defendant as guardian of the two minors since the death of her husband in 1902; and (b) of the expenditure legitimately incurred by her in the management of the estate.

In passing a final decree, plaintiff and the 1st defendant should be given their respective shares in the balance that may be found due from the 2nd defendant. Plaintiff will have proportionate costs of this appeal from the 8th defendant in this and in the lower Court. The other parties will bear their own costs.

Appeals dismissed; Decrees notified.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9—Adhjar, position of—Tenant or labourer—Suit for possession by adhjar, maintainability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

An adhjar is generally a tenant and as such his possession would be protected under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

Therefore, a decision in favour of an adhjar under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act is not liable to be revised under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, in the absence of proof that the adhjar is not a tenant but a labourer.

Civil Rule against the decision of the Munsif, Rangpur, dated the 8th January 1915.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, for the Petitioners.

Babu Jitendra Nath Roy, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an attempt to revise a decision passed under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The way it is sought to make this application one under section 115 is as follows:—It is said that the Judge has made a statement as to an alleged admission which is inaccurate. He says in the judgment that the defendants concede, however, that the plaintiff was in possession of the disputed land as a bhag tenant. It is said that that is not a fact and that no reference to tenancy is made in the pleadings. That appears to be so. But what was admitted was that the plaintiff was in possession as an adhjar. The question which is raised on that point is whether the adhjar is a tenant or a labourer. If he is a tenant, then his possession would be protected under section 9. If a labourer, it would be otherwise. In the first place, there is no affidavit before us that an adhjar in this part of the country means a "labourer" and not a "tenant." There is, on the contrary, a statement in the affidavit that the land was "let out" to the plaintiff as adhjar, which term is appropriate to the existence of a tenancy. The various books upon the subject which were referred to, show that very largely an adhjar is a tenant and the learned Judge who decided this case must be well aware of the meaning of the term in the district in which his Court is. Under those circumstances, a case has not been made out for revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Rule is, accordingly, discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

In the case of a copy of a document 30 years old, section 90 of the Evidence Act empowers the Court to presume that the copy is in the handwriting of the person in whose handwriting it purports to be. Though a presumption as to stamping is not raised by section 90 of the Evidence Act, a lower Court can draw that presumption under section 114, and if it so does, an Appellate Court should not lightly interfere with it. [p. 580, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 612 of 1909, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Manjeri, in Original Suit No. 44 of 1908.

MANAVIKRAMAN P. NILAMBUR THACHARAKAVIL.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 31st March and 1st April respectively of 1914, the Court (Tyabji and Spencer, JJ.) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover an elephant. The elephant fell into a pit dug on a hill referred to in the plaint as Choriappara hill and by the defendants as (1) Thonimannu Thekke mala or (2) Ottathannippattu or (3), Perumpattur Thekke mala. Each party claims ownership of the land in which the pit was dug as well as to have dug the pit. The main issue, therefore, depends upon the questions whether (1) the land belonged to the plaintiff or (2) to the defendant and (3) whether the pit was dug by the one party or the other. The first Court held that the plaintiff had proved his title to the land as well as that the pit had been dug by him and granted a decree in his favour. The learned District Judge held that the plaintiff had not established his title to the land and on this finding alone dismissed the plaintiff's claim. It is admitted by the learned Pleader for the respondent that the Appellate Court's finding is insufficient to dispose of the case. It is argued, however, that the alternative claim based on the admission that the land may not be proved to have belonged to the plaintiff is not taken in the plaint and that such a basis for the claim is now not open to the plaintiff. We think the plaintiff's claim on this alternative basis was sufficiently raised in the plaint and will ask for findings accordingly. Difficult questions of law may arise if the pit is found to have been dug by one of the parties on land belonging to the other or to a stranger. See Makath Unni Moyi v. Malabar Kandapuni Nair (1), Blades v. Higgs (2). Pollock and Wright on Possession, page 148.

With reference to the title of the land it may be that neither side can conclusively show it. Failure on the part of the plaintiff to prove title would not, however, be such a fatal defect as to necessitate a dismissal of the plaintiff's suit. The learned District Judge has found that the plaintiff has not established his title to the land. His finding is, however, vitiated in our opinion by the grounds on which he has excluded Exhibit D from evidence. He has rejected it on grounds mentioned in paragraph 2 of his judgment. With great respect to the learned Judge we are of opinion that he has misunderstood and misapplied the rules of law relating to secondary evidence. The District Munsif has approached the question from the right point of view in paragraphs 11 and 12 of his judgment. He considered first whether the original of which Exhibit D purports to be a copy, was in itself a valid document. On this point it was contended that the original was not stamped and that it could not be presumed to have been stamped. In this Court it was pointed out to us that section 89 of the Indian Evidence Act dealing with the presumption as to stamps does not apply to the present case—the document not being such as could be called for as required by section 89. It is then argued that section 90 does not apply as section 90 refers to originals. We see no difficulty in applying section 90 in so far as it is applicable to copies. In the case of a copy 30 years old section 90 empowers the Court to presume that the copy is in the handwriting of the person in whose handwriting it purports to be. But section 90 does not refer to stamps. We may, however, call the attention of the learned Judge to section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act and may also point out that when the Court of first instance has drawn a certain presumption which the law empowers it to draw and especially when the presumption has reference to such a point as the present, being preliminary to the admissibility of a document, a Court of Appeal ought not lightly to interfere with the exercise of the discretion vested in the Court of first instance. The learned Judge in considering the admissibility of Exhibit D will, therefore, first consider the question whether he ought to differ from the District Munsif on the question that the original of Exhibit D was duly stamped. After doing so, unless he holds that there are sufficient reasons to entitle him to differ from the District Munsif, he will have to consider whether the original was lost. In this connection it would be improper to expect that proof should be offered of the exact occasion when the document was lost. Documents would seldom be lost if parties could always account for the exact time and place when the document was lost by them. When events have occurred so long ago as in the case of Exhibit D, the Courts may well be expected to be satisfied with less clear evidence. In any case the question would not be so much whether the party has proved the exact mode and time of loss, but whether the party offering the secondary evidence is unable to produce the original for reasons not arising from his own default or neglect. See section 65 (c) of the Indian Evidence Act. Finally the District Judge will have to consider whether or not the copy is a genuine one. For this purpose the aid of section 90 may be called in to the extent we have referred to. Section 114 may also be applicable.

We will, therefore, ask the learned District Judge to record findings in the light of our observations on the following points:—

- (1) Whether Exhibit D was wrongly presumed to be genuine and admitted in evidence by the District Munsif?
- (2) If not, then whether the plaintiff has proved title to the land on which the pit in question was dug?
- (3) Whether the defendant has proved title to the said land?
- (4) Whether it was the plaintiff or the defendant who dug the pit and made the capture of the elephant?

The findings should be submitted within one month from the re-opening of the District Court after the recess and 10 days will be allowed for filing objections.

The District Judge returned findings to the effect that Exhibit D was wrongly presumed to be genuine, that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant had proved his title to the land in which the pit was dug, but that the pit was dug by the latter.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing this day after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Jurisdiction—Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 12—'Suits for land', meaning of—Compensation for wrong to land.

The expression "suits for land" extends to a suit for compensation for wrong to land, where the substantial question is the right to the land, and, therefore, clause 12 of the Letters Patent, which empowers the Calcutta High Court to try "suits for land and other immoveable property" applies to such a suit. Appeal from the following judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher in Suit No. 549 of 1914:—"This suit is down for the settlement of issues. The suit has been brought by the plaintiff Company to recover damages from the defendant Company. The allegations in the plaint are that the plaintiff Company and the defendant Company are the owners of adjoining collieries. The plaintiff Company alleges that it left a barrier of 25 feet along the eastern boundary of its property as a protection for its mine. They also allege that on some date between the 16th June 1913 and the 1st of July 1913 the defendant Company cut through their barrier and thereby caused a large influx of mud and water into the plaintiff Company's colliery, whereby the plaintiff Company suffered damage. The question, therefore, is, has this Court jurisdiction to try a suit of this nature? It seems to me that this Court has no jurisdiction. The case is a suit for land. I cannot distinguish the present case from the decision in

SUDAMDIH COAL CO., LTD. v. EMPIRE COAL CO., LTD.

Indust Colliery Co., Ltd. v. Bipin Bihari Basu

(1). The material fact in this case will be whether the plaintiff Company can prove the ownership of the barrier of 25 feet of coal, which they allege they left along the eastern boundary of their own property. That is the basis of the cause of action, no case being set up in the plaint that the defendant Company had negligently worked their own property; that being so, the decision in this case will involve the trial of the title to this barrier of 25 feet which, it is alleged, had been left along the eastern boundary of the plaintiff's property. That is a suit for land not within the jurisdiction of this Court under clause 12 of the Letters Patent constituting this Court. That being so, this Court has no jurisdiction to try this case. The plaint discloses no cause of action which this Court is competent to try. This suit will, therefore, be dismissed with costs."

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher who has dismissed the suit with costs. This was done on a preliminary hearing upon settlement of issues, and the only question involved is whether this is a suit for land or other immoveable property within the meaning of clause 12 of the Letters Patent. That clause was intended to define the original jurisdiction of the High Court as to suits, and it empowered the Courts "to receive, try and determine suits of every description, if, in the case of suits for land or other immoveable property, such land or property shall be situated.....within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court."

The matter in dispute here relates to a mining property outside the jurisdiction so defined. But on behalf of the plaintiff it is contended that having regard to the pleadings it cannot be said that it is a suit for land or other immoveable property. The question is, what was intended by that expression? It appears to me that it was not a mere formal test that was proposed—a test to be determined by the precise form in which a suit might be framed; but that regard was to be had to the substance of the suit, and I cannot help thinking that the particular expression was used, because there was its equivalent in the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, section 6. Indeed, it is a matter of common knowledge that the Secretary of State's despatch forwarding the Letters Patent to this Court makes special reference to that circumstance. The course of decisions on the Charter shows that the description cannot be limited to suits for the recovery of land in its strict sense, and as to that there can be no dispute: and, running on parallel lines with that, we find the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859 developed in 1877, so as to embrace a number of topics which perhaps would not in strictness be regarded as suits for land, and it is instructive to observe what they are. They are suits for the recovery of immoveable property (with or without rent or profits), suits for the partition of immoveable property, suits for foreclosure, or redemption of a mortgage of immoveable property, suits for the determination of any other right to or interest in immoveable property, and suits for compensation for wrong to immoveable property. This appears to me to be in accordance with principles of general, if not universal, application, according to which suits for land in its strict sense must come before the Court where the land is situate. The system on which our procedure is based, the English procedure, regards a suit for damages for trespass to land in the same way, and it is interesting to notice that Chancellor Kent in his commentaries on American Law states that 'an injury to real property is local as to jurisdiction, and trespass on real property situated in one State cannot be sued for in another.' Therefore, it seems to me that we are not giving a construction that is opposed to the general trend of legal thought, if we hold that suits for land at any rate extend to a suit of this kind, which is a suit for compensation for wrong to land, when, as I hold to be the case here, the substantial question is the right to the land. In my opinion, the suit is one to which clause 12 of the Letters Patent applies in the sense I have indicated and, therefore, it was rightly dismissed. The appeal should, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

A notice of proceedings in insolvency instituted by a creditor served on the agent of the debtor, is as effectual as if served on the debtor himself. [p. 585, col. 1.]

Although clause (3) of rule 21 of the rules framed under section 51 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, requires the notice to be served on the debtor himself by registered post, there is no express provision that it should be served only on the debtor. Where, therefore, an agent of the debtor gets notice of the proceedings and appears at the hearing he must be deemed to have waived any objection that he might have had to any supposed irregularities in giving the notice. For the purposes of section 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the act of an agent may be the act of the principal, and, therefore, where an agent departs from the place of business, it constitutes an act of insolvency on the part of the principal, though the English Law requires the act to be a personal act of the principal, i. e., the debtor himself. Where the power-of-attorney, under which an agent acts, empowers him to do other acts besides carrying on the trade and dealing with his property, his agency does not terminate immediately on the presentation of a petition for the adjudication of his principal as insolvent. It subsists to stave-off bankruptcy orders against his principal. [p. 586, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court of South Malabar, in Insolvency Petition No. 7 of 1912.

Mr. K. R. Subramania Sastri, for the Appellant.

Messrs. David and Brightwell and Morsely, for the Respondent.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 13th, 16th and 17th November 1914 before Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Tyabji, the Court made the following ORDER—The circumstances in which the learned District Judge held that notice had been duly served on the debtor under section 12 of the Provincial Insolvency Act are not clear. We must, therefore, call for a finding on the issues:—

1. What notices were served on the debtor directly or on his agent Visram?

2. What attempts to serve the former were made by registered letter or otherwise? and was rule 21 (3) of the rules framed under the Act complied with?

3. Was it found impossible to serve the debtor direct? If so, what were the circumstances in which a valid service was effected on Visram?

Fresh evidence may be adduced. The findings will be submitted within six weeks from the date of receipt of records. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above order, the District Judge of South Malabar submitted the following

* * * * *

1. It is admitted that no notice was served on the debtor directly. But I find that a notice was issued on the 6th December 1912 by the Court addressed to Hirji Visram Sait, mukhtiar of Kallianji Singji Bhai, sole partner of the firm of Rayasi Amerchund of Nagaram Amsom, Desam, Calicut Taluq, the address given in the insolvency petition of the counter-petitioner for the service of notice and processes. The copy of that notice was affixed to the outer door of the dwelling house of Hirji Visram, because he stated that he was unwilling to sign and accept the notice and that his principal should be added as a party.

KALLIANJI SINGJI BHAI V. BANK OF MADRAS.

2. It is proved by the evidence of Mr. Krishna Ayyar, Vakil engaged in the insolvency petition, that a registered letter (Exhibit H) was sent by petitioner's Vakil, Mr. Ramakrishna Ayyar, to the insolvent Kallianji Singji Bhai intimating to him the fact that a petition has been presented and accompanied by a copy of the petition. This was addressed to Cutch, Mandavi, and was returned by the postal authorities to the sender with the endorsement "Left, Particulars not known. Returned to the sender" for which the receipt being H2. I find that this was the only attempt made to serve the debtor.

With regard to the latter part of the second issue, I find that there was no compliance with rule 21 (4) of the rules framed under the Act, because as it appeared impossible to serve the debtor in person, the Court ordered on the 11th March 1913 that the notice given to the agent should be held to be sufficient with reference to rule 5 (2) of the rules under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

3. It appears from the fact that the notice sent to the debtor by post by the petitioner's Vakil was returned un-served and from the correspondence (Exhibits D, E, F and G) that the service on the debtor direct was impossible. It was not stated in the objection petition filed by Hirji Visram on the 11th March where the principal was. My finding on the first part of the third issue is consequently in the affirmative. With reference to the latter part of the 3rd issue, the mukhtarnama (Exhibit J) under which the agent acts gives him sufficient authority to represent the debtor and the vakalath executed by him for the petition was in pursuance of it. The service and the notice already referred to on the agent was service sufficient under Order III, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, and Order V, rule 12, Civil Procedure Code, and with reference to rule 5 (2) of the Madras Insolvency Rules. I find, therefore, that in the circumstances stated valid service was effected on Visram.

This appeal against order coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding upon the issues referred by this Court on the 9th and 10th September 1915, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is the sole partner of the firm of Rayasi Amerchand carrying on a money-lending business at Calicut with a head office at Bombay. On December 3rd, 1912, the agent of the Bank of Madras, the respondent in the case, presented a petition to the District Judge to adjudicate the appellant insolvent and to appoint an ad interim Receiver. On December 6th a notice signed by the sheristadar of the District Court (by order) went to the local agent to inform him that a petition to declare the appellant insolvent was posted for January 21st and that he might appear and show cause against it. The agent, Visram Sait, refused to receive the notice on the ground that his master should be made a party, and it was served on him by affixture. On December 7th a notice of the hearing together with a copy of the petition was sent by the respondent's Pleader through registered post to the appellant at Mandavi in Cutch, where he was thought to be residing, but it was returned to the sender as the addressee had "Left, Particulars not known". At the hearing on January 21st notice was ordered by the Court to go to the principal debtor for March 11th, but admittedly no further attempt was made to serve a notice of the date of hearing on the debtor in person as it was found impossible to do so. On March 11th the notice given to the local agent was declared by the Court to be sufficient, and on the same date the said agent filed in Court a counter-petition on behalf of the appellant describing himself as his mukhtiar. The proceedings were fully contested and ended on December 19th, 1913, in an adjudication of the debtor under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as insolvent.

A number of objections have been raised to the sufficiency of the service of the notice on the agent and our attention has been called to the fact that the agent did from the first object to receiving notice for his principal.

These objections may be briefly answered by a reference to the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act and the rules framed under the authority of section 51. Section 12 (3) provides that in cases where the petition is by the creditors, notice of the date for hearing shall after admission of the petition be served on the debtor in the manner provided for service of summons. Section 47 directs that Courts of Insolvency shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, follow the procedure followed in regard to original civil suits. Order V, rule 12, of the Civil Procedure Code declares that wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient. Rule 13 allows service to be made on any agent who at the time personally carries on business or work for a person who does not reside within the Court's jurisdiction, in any suit relating to business or work. Order III, rule 3 (i), makes service on a recognised agent as effectual as if it was on the party in person unless the Court directs otherwise. A recognised agent includes a person holding a power-of-attorney authorising him to make and do such appearances, applications and acts on behalf of such parties (Order III, rule 2). Exhibit J, the power-of-attorney held by Visram Sait from the appellant, authorizes him 'to defend all suits, appeals and actions' in the Courts of this Presidency to which the appellant may be a party and 'generally to act for him and to do all things and acts that may be necessary and that the attorney may think fit for the complete discharge of his business effectually, completely and to his benefit'; thus there can be no question that there was a valid service under the Civil Procedure Code on the appellant's agent, and that the Court declared it to be sufficient.

Turning to the rules framed by the High Court under section 51 of the Insolvency Act, we find that clause 3 of rule 21 provides that notice of the date of hearing of an insolvency petition shall, if the petition is by the debtor, be sent by the Court by registered post to all creditors and if the petition is by a creditor, shall be sent to the debtor, not less than 14 days before the date of hearing. Notice was not sent to the debtor in this case by the Court through registered post, although the Bank's Vakil attempted vainly, as already mentioned, to communicate a notice and a copy of the petition to the appellant in a registered letter. As we read the rules, however, the sending of a notice by registered post is chiefly intended to provide for the information to be given to creditors on a petition by a debtor and to particularize the words 'such other manner as may be prescribed' in section 12, clause (2). We are not aware of any practice of sending notices of the hearing to debtors through the post in the first instance upon creditors' petitions. Notice to debtors is otherwise provided for by rule 5, clause (2), and by the rules under the Civil Procedure Code. If a debtor gets notice of the hearing served on his authorized agent like a summons, he cannot reasonably complain that he did not also receive a similar notice from the Court through the post, and his objection might be answered by a reference to section 99, Civil Procedure Code. Rule 5, clause 2, of these rules directs that a copy of an insolvency petition presented by a creditor shall be served together with the notice of the date for hearing 'on the debtor or upon the person upon whom the Court orders notice to be served.' It is not required that such an order should be in writing. In this case the notice was addressed to the agent and was signed by the District Court Sheristadar (by order). It was served under Order V, rule 17, Civil Procedure Code, more than 14 days before the hearing on January 21st. Presumably this was a good notice to the agent, and as the agent appeared and filed a counter-petition on March 11th in which he did not raise any objection to the manner or time of service, he must be deemed to have waived any objection that he might have had to any supposed irregularities in the giving of notice.

So much for the question of notice. More substantial objections have been raised to the capacity in law of an agent to represent a debtor in insolvency proceedings, and to the capacity of a debtor to be adjudicated insolvent upon an act of insolvency committed by his agent. It is argued that as orders of adjudication relate back to and take effect from the date of the presentation of the petition on which they are made [vide section 16, clause (6)], and as the agency of Visram Sait terminated under section 201 of the Contract Act by his principal being adjudicated an insolvent, therefore, the agency must be taken to have ceased on the presentation of the petition; and that by the appointment on December 3rd of a Receiver, in whom the property of the debtor vested, the business of the firm could no longer be carried on by the agent and ipso facto his power-of-attorney became void. But it is evident from a reading of the whole of this section from clauses 2 to 6 that they all deal with the property of the insolvent. This was made clear in the case of Minor, Ex parte, Pollitt In re (1), where in treating of the corresponding section of the English Bankruptcy Act, Lord Esher observed: "The result of the relation back is, that all the subsequent dealings with the debtor's property must be treated as if the bankruptcy had taken place at the moment when the act of bankruptcy was committed." The agent's power-of-attorney in this case empowered him to do other acts besides carrying on the trade and dealing with his property and one of those acts must be taken to be to stave off bankruptcy orders against the firm.

As regards the jurisdiction of the Courts to adjudicate persons insolvent upon acts of insolvency committed by their agents, there appears to be a difference in the law as it stands in England and in India.

In Blain Ex parte, Sangers, In re (2) it was held that an act of bankruptcy must be a personal act or default and could not be committed through an agent. This principle was followed in Coke v. Charles A. Vogeler Company (3), another case of a foreigner domiciled and resident abroad having business in England, but in both of these decisions it was conceded that if the law had been different the Courts would have had to take a different view.

In India it has been expressly enacted as an explanation to section 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act that for the purposes of that section which deals with acts of insolvency committed by a debtor, the act of an agent may be the act of the principal. It was accordingly held in In the matter of Brijmohun Dobay (4) that the departure of an agent from the place of business did constitute an act of insolvency on the part of the principal.

In this case if the fact that the firm at Bombay of which appellant was partner had suspended payment, of which Mr. Lamb states that the agent gave him notice, be taken as the act of insolvency giving rise to these proceedings, there is no need to consider the effect of the agent's act as agent, as the suspension of payment at Bombay was the act of the principal, but if the suspension of payment by the branch at Calicut and the inability of the agent there to meet his bills in Calicut, to which Mr. Deane has testified, be taken into account, then we have no hesitation in applying section 4 of the Act and in holding that the order of adjudication based on such an act of insolvency was a perfectly valid order. We agree in holding that an act of insolvency has been proved. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BHARAT INDU V. MUHAMMAD MAHBUB ALI KHAN.

On the 26th of March 1895 a decree was passed in favour of one Rai Bahadur Babu Durga Prasad for the sum of Rs. 85,665. The present plaintiffs are the sons of the said Babu Durga Prasad. In execution of the above-mentioned decree the property (the subject-matter of the present suit) was put up for sale and purchased in the names of Musammât Bigga Begam and a man named Ahsan Ali. The sale took place on the 20th of July 1898, and the sale certificate is dated the 12th of August 1899. On the 20th of December 1899 Ahsan Ali executed a deed in which he admitted that the entire purchase-money of the property mentioned in the plaint in the present suit, as also the purchase-money of an indigo factory which was sold at the same time, was altogether provided by the Musammât and that he "had not and never had" any interest in the property sold. Musammât Bigga Begam was the wife of one Hakim Muhammad Wilayat Ali Khan, the person against whom the mortgage-decree was passed. The said Ahsan Ali was a nephew of the said Wilayat Ali Khan. It may be noted here that in the deed to which I have just referred, Ahsan Ali Khan does not purport to relinquish any rights. The statement in the deed is that he "has not and never had any right or interest." The purchase-money of this property now in dispute was Rs. 10,075. The price of the indigo factory was Rs. 1,810. The mortgaged property having proved insufficient to satisfy the mortgage-decree a further decree was obtained under section 90 of the Transfer of property Act on the 1st of December 1906. The result of this last-mentioned decree was that the decree-holder was entitled to realise the balance still remaining due on foot of the decree from any other property which belonged to the judgment-debtor. Various applications were made for execution, with the result that a large additional sum was realised. Finally after the death of Musammât Bigga Begam the decree-holders attempted to attach the property now in dispute. In the first place, they alleged that the property had been inherited by Wilayat Ali Khan from his widow Bigga Begam. The application to sell this property was refused. The result was the institution of the present suit. The plaintiffs' claim now is that the property was all along the property of Wilayat Ali Khan, in the alternative they contend that even if the property belonged to the Musammât, it was inherited by Wilayat Ali Khan and is, therefore, liable to satisfy the balance of the decree still remaining due. The defence is that the property was purchased by the Musammât with her own money and that prior to her death she disposed of the same by Will, that her heirs accepted the Will and that Wilayat Ali Khan never had any interest in the property from the date of its sale in 1898. I may here point out that even if the purchase in 1898 was really a purchase by Wilayat Ali Khan in the names of his wife and nephew, it ceased to be liable to the mortgage. The property can now only be sold by virtue of the personal decree under section 90.

The question for decision is whether the property belonged to Wilayat Ali Khan or his wife Bigga Begam. This question, it seems to me, must depend upon the answer to another question, namely, with whose money was the property purchased. See Dhurm Das Panley v. Shama Soondri D. biah (1) and the recent case of Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (2). I may mention here that while there was nothing to prevent Wilayat Ali Khan making his wife a present of the property, there is no evidence that he did so and this is not the case for the defendants. Their case is that the money belonged to the lady. On the 18th of July 1895 Hakim Muhammad Wilayat Ali Khan mortgaged certain property to secure the sum of Rs. 6,000, the mortgage being in favour of Gobardhan Das. According to the registration endorsement Rs. 5,000 was paid in cash and a rukka for Rs. 800 was returned. The consideration appears to have been Rs. 5,045 and the discharge of the rukka for Rs. 800 principal and Rs. 155 interest. On the 19th of July 1898 Hakim Muhammad Wilayat Ali Khan made another mortgage to secure Rs. 6,000. This was made in favour of Gauri Sahai, father of the mortgagee in the other mortgage. The plaintiffs contend that the raising of this sum of Rs. 11,000 odd in cash two days before the property in dispute was put up for sale is very significant and strong evidence that Wilayat Ali Khan was raising the money to buy in the property that was being sold on foot of the mortgage-decree. It seems to me that there is great force in this contention, unless the defendants can satisfactorily show that the money was raised for some other purpose. No books or documentary evidence are produced to show to what purpose this Rs. 11,000 odd was applied. But a witness of the name of Jaffer Khan is produced, who says that he used to have dealings with Wilayat Ali Khan who borrowed from him on one occasion Rs. 4,900 under a note of hand, that "God knows what difficulty he had to encounter in making Wilayat Ali Khan pay up the Rs. 4,900", that Wilayat Ali Khan about 14 years ago borrowed money from Gauri Sahai and his sons and paid him. In cross-examination he had to admit that the money which he advanced to Wilayat Ali Khan was not entered in his accounts. He admits that there are other entries relating to his business transactions with Wilayat Ali Khan in his account books. He says that this sum was not entered because the amount had been advanced from his house and not from his shop. I absolutely disbelieve this witness. It seems to me most improbable that Wilayat Ali Khan when he must have wanted money and when his property was being sold, would have paid off the debt of Jaffer Khan even if such debt existed. Jaffer Khan had not even a decree against him. I think, however, one has only to read the evidence of Jaffer Khan to come to the conclusion that there was no debt at all. In my opinion the purpose to which the money borrowed in 1898 by Wilayat Ali Khan was applied would appear from entries in his account books if they were produced.

The next point to consider is the probability of Bigga Begam being possessed of money to make the purchase. Ahsan Ali whose name was joined with herself in the purchase says that the whole amount belonged to the lady, that she gave him Rs. 14,000 one day before the auction sale, that he went there to make the purchase on behalf of Bigga Begam. He states that before the purchase she and he were partners in a sugar factory and that the purchase was made in pursuance of an agreement between Bigga Begam and him that they should purchase the village share and share alike and that he would pay his share of the price in two or four years out of the income accruing from the sugar factory. In cross-examination he had to admit that he had no accounts of the profits and loss of the sugar factory. He made some vague statements that the Musammal had considerable means. He said that the father-in-law of Bigga Begam (that is, the father of Wilayat Ali Khan) used to allow her Rs. 200 or Rs. 250 per mensem and that after his death Wilayat Ali Khan made her a similar allowance. He admitted that the father of the lady had no zamin-dari, nor had the lady. He admitted that Wilayat Husain was the own brother of Bigga Begam and that the profit of his business (whatever it was) was not even assessable with income tax. His sons were cultivators and plied three or four ekkas on hire. It seems to me from a perusal of this witness' evidence that the father of Bigga Begam was a man of no property and that he was unable to give money to his son and still less to his daughter Bigga Begam. Furthermore, I think that if the lady really had property and was in a position to produce Rs. 14,000 in a lump sum the day before the auction sale, accounts would be forthcoming. The case for the plaintiffs may be summoned up as follows:

(1) The sale was admittedly fictitious to this extent that Ahsan Ali was joined in the purchase and he admitted by a deed that he never had any interest whatever therein;

(2) That the borrowing of the Rs. 12,000 two days before the sale unexplained proves that the money was the money of Wilayat Ali Khan;

(3) That not only is it not shown that the money belonged to the Musammal, but the evidence shows that she was a woman of no private means.

BHARAT INDU V. MUHAMMAD MAHBUB ALI KHAN.

The defendants, on the other hand, contend that the onus of showing that the money belonged to Wilayat Ali Khan lay on the plaintiffs and that they have not discharged the onus. It appears that after the death of the Musammāt, Wilayat Ali Khan and the other heirs accepted in writing an alleged Will made by the Musammāt in favour of Hakim Mahbub Ali Khan. Mr. O'Connor on behalf of the respondents strongly relied on this fact. He contends that Wilayat Ali Khan by accepting the Will admitted that the property belonged to his wife. I think the force of this argument entirely depends on the state of Wilayat Ali Khan's financial position at the time he made the so-called admission. If he was in financial difficulties, it might be much more to his interest to allow the property to come to his nephew than to claim it for himself. Furthermore, it appears that these admissions were made after the decree-holders had made a move to make this very property available for the satisfaction of the balance due on foot of the decree. An injunction had issued at the instance of the decree-holders restraining Wilayat Ali from dealing with the property.

Mr. O'Connor further relied on the fact that the decree-holders had never challenged the title of Musammāt Bigga Begam between the years 1898 and 1908. He contends that this fact shows that the decree-holders themselves considered that the property really was the property of the Musammāt, otherwise they would have attached it long ago. I am not much impressed with this argument. Up to the year 1906 when the decree under section 90 was obtained, only the mortgaged property could be made available for the satisfaction of the mortgage-decree and it was of no consequence whether the property belonged to the husband or wife. It was only when the mortgage security was exhausted that the decree under section 90 was or could be obtained. It is an admitted fact that after the decree under section 90 was obtained in the year 1906, the decree-holders succeeded in realising a very large sum out of property admittedly belonging to Wilayat Ali Khan other than the mortgaged property. It is, therefore, not surprising that no move was made against this property until the year 1915 or 1909. The learned Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the defendants. He says in his judgment: "It was argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that Bigga Begam was not rich enough to pay for the property. But from the evidence of Muhammad Ahsan, Hamid Ali Khan and Ashraf Ali Khan, witnesses examined by the defendant, it appears that she was a rich lady. These witnesses have stated that she was in receipt of a sum of Rs. 200 a month from her father-in-law from the date of her marriage and from her husband from the date of his father's death. Muhammad Ahsan witness has stated that Bigga Begam and he were partners in a khandsal concern. The witnesses Gobardhan Das and Ramji Mal could not state if Bigga Begam had any money of her own. They did not know her father and brothers. Ramji Mal no doubt adds that he infers that her father must have been an ordinary man from the fact that her nephews ply ekkas now-a-days. But there is nothing extraordinary about a rich man's heirs to be placed in that position, but to judge of their predecessor from their present state of wealth is a far-fetched conclusion. Such being the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses, the testimony of the defendant's witnesses on this point must be believed." It seems to me that the learned Judge has not fully appreciated the force of the evidence. He disbelieves perhaps with some reason the evidence of Gobardhan Das and Ramji Mal that when Wilayat Ali Khan was executing the two mortgages for Rs. 6,000 each, he openly stated that the money was being raised for the very purpose of purchasing the property. It is suggested that if a secret purchase was being made for the debtor, he would not speak about it. It must be remembered, however, that at that time Wilayat Ali Khan had still a large amount of property, the amount of the decree had not swelled to the extent it subsequently did by the accumulation of interest and it may well have been then hoped that the decree would be discharged. But even if we discard the oral evidence, the fact still remains that Wilayat Ali

SECRETARY OF STATE P. SUBRAYA KARANTHA.

Khan raised Rs. 11,000 odd at the very time the property was being sold and that no satisfactory account is given as to how this money was applied. On the contrary the account that is given cannot be believed. The learned Judge says "from the evidence of Muhammad Ahsan, Hamid Ali Khan and Ashraf Ali Khan it appears that the Musummat was a rich lady." I have already dealt with the evidence of Muhammad Ahsan. It is true that all these three witnesses make a vague statement that the lady was rich and that her father was a rich man but it is not shown that they had any personal knowledge of these matters, and it appears from the cross-examination of the witnesses that her father was not a rich man. There is not a particle of evidence that the lady got property from her father during his life-time or at his death. The witnesses say that she got an allowance of Rs. 200 a month from her father-in-law and afterwards from her husband, but this allowance would not make the lady a "rich" lady and it is not shown how these witnesses came to know that she received an allowance of Rs. 200 a month. If the lady was a rich lady it is certain that she would have had account books. It seems to me that the learned Judge has overlooked the significance of the admitted fact that Rs. 11,000 odd was raised on the very eve of the sale and that he has come to the conclusion that she was a rich woman on evidence not worthy of the name. I am quite satisfied on the evidence that the money which purchased the property belonged to Wilayat Ali Khan and not to his wife. If this view be correct, it is quite unnecessary to consider whether Wilayat Ali Khan could assent to the Will of his wife and so defeat his creditors. I think the Court below had a certain amount of sympathy, perhaps not unnatural, with the defendants on the ground that the decree-holders have realised a very large sum on foot of their decree. We are bound, however, to throw aside any feeling of this kind and to decide the case on the evidence before us. I would allow the appeal.

RAFIQUE, J. I concur.

By THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal prevails and is allowed. The decree of the lower Court is set aside and the claim of the plaintiffs-appellants is decreed, with costs of both the Courts including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Appeals against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Canara, in Original Suit No. 61 of 1911.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Government Pleader, for the Government.—The Subordinate Judge has clearly gone off the issue; he says that the various instances in which the claim was set up show that the plaintiffs in those suits must have been the heirs. It is enough in this case for the Government to show, that there is some prima facie evidence that the deceased died without heirs. There were three suits brought against the widow when she alienated the properties in two of which they, the plaintiffs, were referred to regular suits, and in the third the right was negatived. As against the only possible heir, the right was entirely negatived.

(2). The judgment which negatived the right is relevant under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.—It is for the Government to prove prima facie that the deceased died without heirs. That is clearly laid down in the case of Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry Venkata Narrainapah (1).

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff to declare that the properties in South Canara of the late Zalle Subraya, who appears from Exhibit N to have died in that district in the year Parthiva, 1825—6, escheated to the Crown for want of heirs on the death of his widow Manjamma, who appears to have died at an advanced age in January 1906 at Benares. The suit was brought against the defendant in possession, and the latter in his written statement set up the existence, among other alleged heirs, of the junior widow and the senior widow's daughter and daughter's son of one Venkatapathaya, who are described as residing at Shimoga in the Mysore State. The Subordinate Judge has rejected the case set up as to the other alleged heirs, but has held that the descendants of Venkatapathaya are in the line of heirs of the deceased. Before dealing with the facts of this somewhat extraordinary case, it will be well to refer to what their Lordships have laid down in Gridhari Lall v. Bengal Government (2), the leading Indian case, as to cases which lie on the Crown in claims to escheat. In the course of the argument in that case Kelly, C. B., observed that in England in a writ of Intrusion or Ejectment, the Crown must, to take lands by escheat, prove there was an entire failure of heirs, and so also of a Lord of the Manor with respect to copyholds on the death of a tenant without heirs, and cannot rely upon the want of title of the party in possession.

In that case the Calcutta High Court had rejected the claim of the appellant Gridhari Lall, who had been in possession and recognized by Government as heir, but had decided that the decree against him should not be made absolute until the claims of other alleged heirs had been investigated, and had remanded the case with a direction to the District Judge to call upon these and any other claimants to come in and prove their case. Their Lordships, whilst disposing of the appeal on the ground that Gridhari Lall was an heir, deemed it right to take exception to the procedure adopted by the High Court and to point out that, as against a defendant in possession, the Crown was in the position of an ordinary plaintiff in an ordinary suit in the nature of an ejectment. Their Lordships went on to lay down that it lay upon the Crown to prove at least prima facie that the deceased left no heirs, and that the defendant was entitled to set up any jus tertii that might exist. The course taken by the High Court, in their Lordships' opinion, would have had the effect of causing the other claimants who had intervened as objectors to litigate their title with Government, casting apparently the burden of proof on them, and seemed to their Lordships to deprive the appellant of his right to defend his possession on the ground of an existing jus tertii. It had been objected for the Crown that it could not be called upon to prove a negative, and it was apparently with reference to that objection that their Lordships guarded themselves by saying that it lay upon the Crown to prove at least prima facie that the deceased died without heirs.

Coming now to the facts of the present case, the deceased Zalle Subraya died in the year 1826 leaving a widow Manjamma and apparently no other near relations. Manjamma died at Benares in January 1906, having survived her husband for 80 years and having about 50 years before her death alienated her husband's properties in South Canara and removed herself to Benares where she died. No pedigree or family tree showing the alleged relationship has been produced from proper custody, and the defendant is obliged to rely on the pedigrees or statements of relationship which are to be found in the pleadings in the litigation already mentioned. As the alleged common ancestor Venkappa is fourth in ascent from the deceased who died in 1826, direct oral evidence is not to be looked for. Nor again is there any oral evidence worth considering that either Subraya or his widow ever recognized the alleged relationship. On the other hand there are denials, no doubt, of an interested character by Manjamma in the litigation already referred to. In view of this litigation and of the conduct of Manjamma in alienating her properties and removing to Benares, it is not perhaps surprising that no communication should have passed between her and Venkatapathy's family after her removal to Benares, but the result is that there is no evidence of recognition any more than there is any direct evidence of relationship in support of the defendant's case. We are in effect left to rely on evidence of assertion of title as reversioners by Venkatapathy's line in certain suits filed between 1847 and 1872, in one of which the alleged relationship was found not to be proved. The Subordinate Judge lays much stress upon the improbability that Venkatapathy's family would have persisted so long in their claims if they had been concocted, but I cannot attach much weight to this argument, and I do not think the evidence of assertion it such as would justify us in holding the alleged relationship proved in view of the fact that every assertion appears to have been met with a denial by Manjamma, and that in the only case where the issue was tried there was a finding against it.

Exhibit N is the judgment in Original Suit No. 280 of 1847 in the Court of the Sudder Amin of Honnavar, an unsuccessful suit brought against Manjamma and others by the widow of one Jalle Gundappa, who was alleged to be the undivided brother of the deceased. Paragraph 11 shows that Venkatapathy's grandfather Zalle Venkatapathy had presented a petition stating that he was the undivided dayadi of the deceased and that his claim should not be prejudiced by the suit. The petition was recorded with the observation that if his allegation was true he might bring a separate suit.

This judgment was pronounced on 8th March 1852, and it was only some years later that Venkatapathy's father Timmarasayya brought two suits, Original Suit No. 731 of 1862 and Original Suit No. 15 of 1864, in the Court of the Taluq Munsif of Kundapur. The plaintiff sued to recover the properties of the deceased as his undivided dayadi from the widow and her alienees, and in her written statement she denied that he was a member of her family and alleged that he had no right whatever in the property. In Exhibit M which is a translation of the judgment from the Canarese, the Munsif observed in paragraph 11: "the first question to be considered is whether the plaintiff and the first defendant are members of the same family, and whether either the plaintiff or his ancestors have either enjoyed the suit property or obtained the benefit thereof. In respect of this he has examined four witnesses in Kavelidurga Taluq (in Mysore, then under a Chief Commissioner) and four witnesses in this Court. Of these only two have given some particulars of the family, but they did not explain satisfactorily how they came to know them. From the evidence of the remaining witnesses nothing has been proved.

SECRETARY OF STATE V. SUBRAYA KARANTHA.

It appears that the first defendant is a lonely woman without any relations whatever and having property, has been enjoying the same absolutely from the beginning of the year—(illegible). It appears from the general statement of the witnesses that the 1st defendant brought and had (sic) the plaintiff in her house and got writing and other work done by him, that thereafter, as ill-feeling arose between them, she turned out the plaintiff; that formerly he used to come in this manner from the ghauts occasionally from time to time staying for some days and go away. As these facts alone are not sufficient for establishing any rights—"Some word is missing after this, but it cannot affect the sense, and this judgment seems to me to contain a finding as between the plaintiff in that suit, Venkatapathiya's father, and the widow Manjamma, that the plaintiff had failed to prove his relationship with the deceased. The fact that Venkatapathiya's father failed in a contested suit to prove the relationship of his line with the deceased fifty years ago when such an issue was much more susceptible of proof than it is now is, in my opinion, evidence against the existence of the right of that line to claim as heir of the deceased within the meaning of section 13 of the Evidence Act. This seems to be in accordance with the ruling of this Court in Natesa Gramani v. Venkatarama Reddi (3), to which I was a party, and on a re-perusal of the judgment of Beaman, J., in Muhamad Amin v. Hasan (4), which was cited on the other side and impressed me at the time, I think that this case, where the alleged relationship admitted of assertion, denial and recognition in a series of transactions extending over a long series of years, comes precisely within the class of cases to which Beaman, J., held the section specially applicable at page 153 of his judgment. If relevant, this evidence is, in my opinion, of great importance as it practically stands uncontradicted, seeing that the Subordinate Judge has rightly, in my opinion, disbelieved all the oral evidence for the defence in any way connecting Venkatapathiya's line with the deceased and we agree with him in this. The effect of this evidence is, moreover, strengthened by the subsequent conduct of the parties. Timmarasaya, the plaintiff in these suits of 1862 and 1864, did not venture to file another suit, but his son Venkatapathiya filed Original Suit No. 24 of 1871 in the Court of the Principal Sudder Amin of Mangalore, making his father Timmarasaya a defendant, for a declaration that the alienations made by Manjamma were not binding on the reversioners. This suit was dismissed by the first Court and by the High Court in Second Appeal No. 657 of 1872 on the view which then prevailed that only the next reversioner could sue, but neither Timmarasaya nor Venkatapathiya after his death ever instituted any other suit, and the evidence of his daughter Thimmava shows that she and her family never put in any claim until they were asked to sign a claim at the instance of the defendant, after the Collector had issued a notice calling for claim. The Subordinate Judge has really nothing to go upon but the fact that the relationship has been asserted in three successive suits, and this, though it was not proved in the only case in which it was investigated, and the further fact of slight import that both the deceased and the petitioner in the suit of 1847 bore the first name of Zalle. The hesitation shown by Government as to whether they should file this suit or wait for certain deaths which would obviate the necessity of raising this issue proves nothing in support of the defendant's case. Without the evidence of the failure of Venkatapathiya's father to establish the relationship in 1864, there might have been more difficulty in saying that the plaintiff has established the prima facie case which he is required by law to make out, but that transaction should, in my opinion, be regarded as more than shifting the onus, and as I have already pointed, the same inference is suggested by the subsequent conduct of the parties. I would allow the appeal, reverse the decision and give judgment for the plaintiff. On the 5th issue we agree with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the lease is not binding on the plaintiff, and we cannot accept his view that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover this property in the present suit without suing to set it aside. v. Dasarathi Misra (6) and Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (7). There is no ground of appeal as to the defendant's right to improvements, and we are not prepared to allow the point to be raised. We accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge who accepted the finding in paragraph 13 of the 2nd Commissioner's report. We think the Subordinate Judge was wrong in disallowing the plaintiff's right to mesne profits. The amount will be determined by the lower Court and embodied in the final decree, the mesne profits to run from 23rd September 1909, when the defendant was served with notice calling on him to surrender possession. By consent, we also direct the Court to ascertain what changes, if any, must be made in the figures given in paragraph 13 of the 2nd Commissioner's report, having regard to the suggestion that the defendant who has continued in possession, may have cut and carried away the trees valued by the Commissioner or exhausted the improvements for which an allowance was made, any such alteration to be embodied in the final decree. The plaintiff is also entitled to future mesne profits from date of suit to delivery of possession. The appeal is allowed and each party will bear his own costs of this appeal and there will be proportionate costs after mesne profits have been ascertained.

The other Appeal No. 274 of 1913 is dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree and wish to say a few words on the general features of the case. If the persons in whose favour a jus tertii is set up by the defendant sued to recover the plaint properties, I would have had no hesitation in holding that they have failed to establish their claim. The person put forward as the sister's son of Zalle Subraya, the last male owner, has absolutely failed to prove his relationship. I cannot believe that if he was related to Manjamma as he states, he would never have had any correspondence with her, would not have visited her in Benares and would not have adduced evidence of the observance of pollution on her death. Neither he, as the alleged nephew of Gundappa, took any objection to the sale of all her property by Manjamma when she left for Benares—no suit was brought subsequently to contest the alienation. Equally unsatisfactory is the evidence regarding the claim of defence witness No. 1. He is unable to prove that he observed pollution when Gundappa's widow Kavaramma died. The Subordinate Judge was not impressed with this evidence and I do not differ from him.

The case of Thimmavva is more difficult. Naturally enough, great stress was laid by the learned Vakils for the respondent on the use of the family name Zalle. The evidence regarding this is very meagre. My Lord has dealt with it and I do not propose to examine it any further. It is noteworthy that in the genealogical trees filed from 1847 onwards, the word Zalle does not appear. There is a singular lack of testimony regarding the identity of Gotram between that of the claimant's father and that of the last male owner. This is very suspicious. In Mitakshara, Chapter XI, section 5, placitum 6, the concluding clause runs thus:—"The relationship of samanodakas extends to the fourteenth degree; or as some affirm, it reaches as far as the memory of birth and name extends. This is signified by gotra or the relation of family name." The family name is generally taken from the place in which the common ancestor originally lived. It is possible that this common family name may be the heritage of more than one group of persons. These may not be related to each other at all; but if the family name is associated with the common gotra (which is by repute the name of the Rishi of pre-historic days from whom descent is traced), then there will be something tangible to go by. I repeatedly asked the learned Vakils whether there was any evidence of the common gotram. The absence of this evidence is very significant. I, therefore, do not attach weight to the use of the name Zalle by the claimant's father and grandfather. Barring that, we have only the assertions of right on three occasions and the filing of genealogical trees. On each of the occasions, the course pointed out by the Court which would have brought matters to a head was not followed. Venkatapayya asserted the extravagant claim of being undivided in the suit of 1847 (between Kavamma and Manjamma). He was referred to a regular suit. Nothing was done till nearly 15 years after. Timmarasaya, the son of Vankappia, asserted that he was an undivided cousin of the husband of Manjamma in a suit of 1862 and in Original Suit No. 415 of 1864. These suits were dismissed. At this time Manjamma had granted an arthamulgeni lease to the defendant's vendor's predecessor; if the claim of being a joint member of the undivided family was found unsustainable, it is difficult to understand why the claim as reversioner or a declaration that the alienation was not binding beyond the widow's life-time, was not subsequently litigated. At the time of the third litigation, the unsuccessful plaintiff of 1864 was alive. His son sued now. He was nonsuited on the ground that his father was alive. Yet, the father did not sue. Nor did the son, subsequent to the death of the father, pursue his remedies. These are very suspicious circumstances. I am, therefore, unable to attach weight to the three assertions of right referred to by the Subordinate Judge.

It was argued by Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar that the burden of proof lies on the Secretary of State. He relied on Gridhari Lall v. Bengal Government (2). In that case, the defendant in possession was an undoubted relation of the last male-holder. He was the father's maternal uncle of the deceased. The question was whether he was an heir under the Benares School of Law. The Judicial Committee held that he was. Their Lordships further pointed out that "the appellant was entitled to defend his possession not only by proof of his own title, but by setting up any jus tertii that might exist. By an alternative plea he did set up such a bar to the respondent's suit; and the title of those persons who, he says, are, failing himself, the heirs of Woopendro Chunder Roy, has never yet been determined." Where a specific individual is put forward in the written statement as an heir and the right of that individual was not determined, the Government could not say that the property has escheated. I do not understand the above passage to lay down, before there can be an escheat, that the Government should affirmatively establish the invalidity of the claim of the third party whose title was pleaded by the defendant. Their Lordships intimate in the earlier portion of the judgment that the Government should prove prima facie that the last male owner died without heirs. This has been done in this case. Nobody claiming heirship to Subaraya is in possession. No persons who, in common parlance, could be said to be relations, have been found to have had any correspondence with the woman who left for Benares 50 years ago. This is all the prima facie proof that can be expected. The burden then would be shifted to each of the claimants to establish prima facie his relationship to the last male-holder. If that is not satisfactorily done, the Government must succeed. The decision of Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry Vencata Narrainapak (1) supports this view. I, therefore, agree with the learned Chief Justice that the appeal should be allowed and in the further order which he proposes to make.

Appeal allowed; Suit decreed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1136 OF 1914.

June 26, 1915.

Present:—Mr. Justice Rattigan and

THE IMPERIAL OIL, SOAP AND GENERAL MILLS COMPANY, LTD., DELHI—

PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

*versus*WAZIR SINGH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS —RESPONDENTS.

Company—Director acting as such for many years
—Third person, if can question his power—Share-holder —Estoppel.

When a Company is shown to have accepted a certain person for many years as its Director and has never on any occasion repudiated any of his acts as such, it is not open to one who has no concern with the Company to challenge the appointment of such Director or to contest his authority to act on behalf of the Company. [p. 596, col. 2.]

When a share-holder of a Company takes part in nearly all the general meetings of the Company and joins in the annual appointment of its Director without taking exception to his appointment, he is under the circumstances debarred by his conduct from objecting to the validity of the Director's appointment or to his authority to act for and on behalf of the Company. [p. 596, cols. 1 & 2.]

IMPERIAL OIL, SOAP AND GENERAL MILLS CO., LTD. v. WAZIR SINGH.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 19th February 1914, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd class, Delhi, dated the 30th October 1913, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Obedulla, for the Appellant.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Delhi, on the 21st of April 1913 and purports to be by the "Imperial Oil, Soap and General Mills Company, Limited, Delhi," the plaint being signed, verified and presented on behalf of the said Company by Mr. Clarence Kirkpatrick, who is described in the plaint as the sole Director of the said Company. The claim was for rendition of accounts and for recovery of certain sums due for articles alleged to have been supplied to defendant No. 1, Lala Wazir Singh, through defendant No. 2, Lala Ram Chand. A preliminary objection was taken by the defendants that Mr. Clarence Kirkpatrick had no authority to institute the suit on behalf of the Company or to do any other act in relation to the conduct of the suit. This objection was elaborately considered and discussed by the Subordinate Judge and by the Additional Divisional Judge who, after going into all the facts and history of the Company, were both of opinion that the objection must prevail and accordingly dismissed the suit.

A second appeal has been preferred to this Court on behalf of the Company and we have listened to lengthy arguments on a number of intricate and difficult questions of law, but we find it unnecessary to decide those questions as we hold that ground No. 7 of the grounds of appeal must prevail.

Defendant No. 2, Ram Chand, is a shareholder of the Company and a reference to the Company's General Meeting Minute Book shows that he was present at, and took an active part in, nearly all the General Meetings of the Company from August 1903 to the 24th of February 1912, and that from time to time he joined in the annual appointment of Mr. Kirkpatrick as sole Director of the Company. During all these years Mr. Kirkpatrick, to Ram Chand's knowledge, acted as such Director and there is no indication on the record nor indeed is it suggested that Ram Chand on any occasion took exception to Mr. Kirkpatrick's acts as such Director. In these circumstances, we consider that Ram Chand has debarred himself by his conduct from objecting to the validity of Mr. Kirkpatrick's appointment or to his authority to act for and on behalf of the Company.

As regards Lala Wazir Singh, the case is somewhat different as he is not a shareholder of the Company and did not in any way participate in electing Mr. Kirkpatrick as Director. On the other hand, however, it is to be remembered that he is a mere outsider and that the Company as such has, so far as we can see, accepted Mr. Kirkpatrick as its sole Director ever since 1905 and that it has never on any occasion repudiated his acts or denied his authority as such de facto, if not indeed de jure, Director. When a Company is thus shown to have accepted a certain person for many years as its Director and has never on any occasion repudiated any of his acts as such, it is not, we think, open to one who has no concern with the Company, to challenge the appointment of such Director or to contest his authority to act on behalf of the Company. In the present case, it is not urged—and it is certainly not proved—that the Company as such disapproves or repudiates Mr. Kirkpatrick's conduct in instituting the present suit and that being the case, Lala Wazir Singh has no right to ask that this claim shall be dismissed on the ground that Mr. Kirkpatrick had no authority from the Company to institute the suit.

We accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the orders of the Courts below we remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Delhi, for decision on the merits. The Court-fee stamp on this appeal will be refunded and all other costs will abide the event.

Appeal accepted.

CO-OPERATIVE HINDUSTAN BANK, LTD. v. BHOLA NATH.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

SUIT No. 257 OF 1911.*

July 13, 1914.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chitty.

CO-OPERATIVE HINDUSTAN BANK, LTD.—PLAINTIFF

BHOLA NATH BOROOAH—DEFENDANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 3, 8 and 15—Arbitration—Order of reference authorising arbitrator to extend time made by consent of parties—Arbitrator extending time after the period originally fixed by Court had expired—Arbitrator after such time, if functus officio—Award submitted within such extended time, if must be set aside—Arbitrator's interest in subject-matter in suit, when insignificant and unknown to him, if would invalidate award.

Where an order of reference to an arbitrator under Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) fixed three months' time for the submission of the award to Court and also empowered the arbitrator to extend the time for such submission from time to time by endorsement in the office copy of the order:

Held, that when the Court had made the order by consent of the parties, there could be no objection to the functions of the Court with regard to the enlargement of time being delegated to the arbitrator if the parties so desired. [p. 600, col. 1.]

But the arbitrator could only extend the time in such cases, before the time originally fixed for making the award had expired. If he did not do so, he was by reason of effluxion of time functus officio and had no further jurisdiction in the matter. As in this case, the arbitrator had extended the time after the three months originally fixed by Court had expired, the award must be set aside, although it was submitted within the time so extended by the arbitrator. [p. 600, col. 1.]

If an arbitrator, unknown to one of the parties, has a personal interest in the subject-matter of the award, it would be improper that he should act as arbitrator. If, however, his interest is insignificant and unknown to himself so that it is impossible that it could have influenced his award in any way, the Court would not be disposed to set aside the award. [p. 600, col. 2.]

FACTS.—This suit was referred by consent of the parties by Mr. Justice Fletcher, sitting on the Original Side of the High Court, under the provisions of Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), to the arbitration of Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee, a Vakild of the Calcutta High Court, on the 21st of July 1913. The material portion of the order of reference was as follows:

"That all matters in difference in this suit between the parties hereto be referred to the final decision of Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee, Vakild of this Court, who is to make his award in writing and submit the same to this Court together with all proceedings, depositions and exhibits before him within three months from date on which an office copy of this order of reference shall be delivered to him or within such further time as the arbitrator shall allow himself by endorsement on the office copy of the order." The arbitrator submitted his award to the Court on the 1st of June 1914.

The defendant thereupon applied to the Court for setting aside the award on, amongst others, the following grounds:—

"That the provision for extension of time by the arbitrator by endorsement on the order aforesaid, is not justified by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and that the said order is without jurisdiction.

That the order of reference was served on the arbitrator on the 18th of August 1913, but neither the petitioner, nor his Solicitor or Counsel was aware when the order was actually served on the arbitrator, as the arbitrator had not drawn their attention to this fact in the course of proceedings before him.

That the arbitrator commenced the proceedings on the 23rd of August 1913 and went on from time to time till the 15th of November, when the same was adjourned to the 22nd of November 1913.

That there were sittings on the 22nd and 23rd of November and that the petitioner's Counsel and Solicitor attended these under a misapprehension that the time had not then expired.

That at the sitting of the 28th of February which followed, the arbitrator mentioned to the petitioner's Counsel that the three months' time fixed by the order of the Court had expired, and that he had not extended the time as he believed that it was understood that he would go on.

That the Counsel for the petitioner thereupon took exception to the portion of the Court's order relating to the extension of the time by the arbitrator and pointed out to him that under Schedule II, Articles 3 (1) and 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court alone could extend the time and that if the arbitrator extended the time then without reference to Court, he must take the responsibility of the course upon himself.

*The report of this case has been taken from the Calcutta Weekly Notes with permission.—Ed.

CO-OPERATIVE HINDUSTAN BANK, LD. V. BHOLA NATH.

That thereafter the arbitrator intimated to the parties that he would extend the time to the 31st of May 1914 (which was a Sunday) and that the petitioner (until the award was filed in Court on the 1st of June and that even then he) did not know when the order, extending the time had been endorsed by the arbitrator on the office copy of the order, as he did not give any date of the endorsement. That the petitioner had also discovered since the submission of the award that the arbitrator was a share-holder in the plaintiff Bank and that for this as also other reasons aforesaid, the award should be set aside."

Messrs. B. Chakravarti, S. P. Sinha, J. Chaudhuri and B. K. Lahiri, for the Defendant-Petitioner.

Mr. H. D. Bose, for the Plaintiff Bank.

Mr. B. Chakravarti, for the Petitioner, urged that after the three months originally fixed by the Court, the arbitrator had become functus officio and he had no authority to extend the time. The provision in the order of reference which purported to empower the arbitrator to enlarge the time by endorsement in the office copy of the order, must have been embodied in it, under a misapprehension that the reference was made under the Indian Arbitration Act (IX of 1899) which empowers the arbitrator to extend the time from time to time by such endorsement. See Schedule I, para. 3, of the Act. But this was a reference under the Code of Civil Procedure, Schedule II. The Code expressly provides that the "Court shall specify the time" for making the award. See Schedule II, para. 3, Civil Procedure Code. Then Schedule II, para. 8, provides that it is the Court that can enlarge the period, "from time to time either before or after the expiration of the period fixed for the making of the award." This was pointed out by Mr. J. Chaudhuri to the arbitrator before whom he appeared. But the arbitrator did not care to come before Court and apply for extension of time. He had committed other irregularities set out in our petition. If he had come before Court, then we could have brought these to the notice of Court and asked to annul the proceedings and make a fresh reference. The fact that Mr. Chaudhuri continued to appear before the arbitrator after he had drawn the attention of the arbitrator to the provisions of the law and asked the arbitrator to proceed on his own responsibility, cannot amount to acquiescence on Mr. Chaudhuri's part. In such cases, it is enough if the Counsel protests, and he is not bound to retire from the case. See Hamlyn v. Betteley (1). Further, in this case, it was not known to the petitioner when the arbitrator extended the time, as he did not put down any date above or below his endorsement extending the time. One thing is certain, that he did not extend the time within the three months originally fixed by the Court. The power given to the arbitrator to extend time amounted to delegation of the Court's powers and was without jurisdiction. Even assuming, but not admitting, that the provision in the order of reference empowering the arbitrator to extend the time was good in law, still the arbitrator did not extend the time before the three months fixed by Court had expired. He was then functus officio and he had in my view no authority to extend the time. But he could have come before Court at any time before submitting the award and applied to Court to have the time extended under Schedule II, para. 8, Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Chaudhuri was, therefore, fully justified in attending before him even after the time had expired. The Court had no jurisdiction to extend the time after the award had been submitted to Court. This is the view that was taken by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Har Narain Singh v. Bhagwant Kuar (2). This has been followed in our Court, even after the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, came into force. See Shib Krishna v. Satish Chunder Dutt (3). The wording of Schedule II, para. 15, clause (c), "after the expiration of the period allowed by Court" read with "no award shall be set aside except on one of the following grounds", shows clearly that this amendment of section 521 of the Code of 1882, was made in deference to the Privy Council decision referred to above. Further, the award should be set aside, because the arbitrator never disclosed the fact to the defendant that he is a shareholder in the plaintiff Bank. See Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal (4). In this case, the Lord Chancellor's decree was set aside, because he was a share-holder in the plaintiff Company which was not known to the defendant. In our Court, Maclean, C. J., set aside the award in Kali Prosanno v. Rajani Kant (5), because the arbitrator had not disclosed that he was the retained Pleader of a party. [In the course of Mr. Chakravarti's argument, the arbitrator was sent for and examined by the Court. The substance of his deposition will appear from the judgment of Chitty, J.]

Mr. H. D. Bose urged on behalf of the plaintiff Bank that the Privy Council decision relied upon by Mr. Chakravarti had been superseded by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and referred to Schedule II, para. 15, clause (c), of the Code of 1908 and section 521 of the Code of 1882. The case of Shib Krishna v. Satish Chunder Dutt (3) was, therefore, wrongly decided. He referred also to section 148, Civil Procedure Code, which is a new section and which gave the Court an absolute discretion to extend time at any time, the Court pleased. The provision in the order of reference empowering the arbitrator to extend time was not bad, but was sanctioned by long-standing practice on the original side of the Calcutta High Court. Even if the endorsement extending time was bad after the period fixed by Court had expired, the fact that defendant's Counsel attended the proceedings, would operate as estoppel and amount to waiver and acquiescence. See Tyerman v. Smith (6).

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition on behalf of the defendant Bhola Nath Borooah that the award made in this case by Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee, a Vakil of this Court, may be set aside. Two grounds have been urged in support of this application—(1) that the award was made out of time and (2) that Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee is a share-holder in the plaintiff Company and, therefore, ought not to have acted as arbitrator between the parties. The suit was filed on 9th March 1911, to recover Rs. 25,000 on five hundis said to be signed on behalf of the defendant's firm by the defendant's son, and endorsed over to the plaintiff Bank by Rajendra Chandra Chuckerbutty. The defendant filed his written statement on 1st May 1911, pleading payment of Rs. 15,000. On the 9th July 1912, there was a reference to the arbitration of Babu Tara Kissors Chaudhuri, a Vakil of this Court. Nothing further was done under that order, and on the 21st July 1913 that order was discharged; and a fresh order of reference was made to Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee. Under that order, his award was to be made within three months from the date of the service of an office copy of the order upon him or within such further time as the said arbitrator might allow himself by endorsement on the said office copy of the order. The order was served on 18th August 1913. The three months would expire, therefore, on 18th November 1913. It is admitted that no award was made, nor the time extended, within that date. The arbitrator, however, proceeded with the reference and held a number of meetings. On 28th February 1914, it was brought to his notice that the time had expired and had not been extended. I have had the advantage of hearing the evidence of the arbitrator as to what precisely occurred. From his evidence, it is clear that on 28th February 1914, there was a discussion with regard to the confirmation of the arbitration. The arbitrator wanted to know if any objections would be taken; and pointed out to Counsel on either side that there might be a difficulty, and that, in case the award went against either party, that party might make a grievance of it. The plaintiff's Counsel appears to have made no objection to the arbitration continuing. The defendant's Counsel on the other hand said, that he would not commit himself, but left the responsibility of proceeding entirely with the arbitrator. Shortly afterwards, the arbitrator made an endorsement on the office copy extending the time for making the award to 31st May 1914. On 31st May, he made and signed his award. There are three additions or alterations in it, two merely verbal, but one of more importance, relating to the costs of the arbitration. Whether he made these alterations on the night of the 31st or early in the morning of the 1st June, is not clear. The award is dated 31st May and was filed by him on 1st June 1914. The defendant against whom the award was made, now complains that the arbitrator had no authority to extend the time after 18th November 1913. This contention is, I think, correct. It was suggested that the order of this Court, dated 21st July 1913, was ultra vires in so far as it permitted the arbitrator to enlarge the time for making his award. I do not think that is so. The Court proceeded by consent of the parties and there could be no objection to the functions of the Court with regard to the enlargement of time being delegated to the arbitrator if the parties so desired. It is, however, clear that the arbitrator would only have such power as was conferred by the order, and he would, therefore, be bound to enlarge the time before the time originally fixed for making the award had expired. If he did not do so, he was by reason of effluxion of time, functus officio and had no further jurisdiction in the matter. It is a matter of great regret that when this difficulty was first noticed, and there was a discussion with regard to it before the arbitrator, an application was not made then and there to the Court under Schedule II, paragraph 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which case the Court could have enlarged the time, even though the time fixed for making the award had expired. This was not done, presumably because the parties were willing to go on with the reference. I think that on the above ground, the award is invalid and must be set aside.

The second ground is that Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee was, unknown to the defendant, a share-holder in the plaintiff Company. It appears from Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee's evidence that it was also unknown to himself. He had, it appears, applied for one share of Rs. 50, but he says he never paid a pice in respect of it and was unaware until yesterday whether any share had been allotted to him or that his name was on the register of share-holders. It was stated at the Bar that on this share, Rs. 5 had been paid. With regard to this, Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee stated that he had paid nothing, but that some friend must have paid on his behalf. Now it is clear that if an arbitrator, unknown to one of the parties, has a personal interest in the subject-matter of the award, it would be improper that he should act as arbitrator, as the fact of his having such an interest might influence his decision. But in this case, as his interest was so small and was apparently unknown even to himself, it is impossible that it could have influenced his award in any way. If that were the only ground, I should have been unwilling to set aside the award merely because he held that one share. On the first ground, however, the award must be set aside, and I accordingly order that that be done. It appears to me that both the parties were willing to go on with the arbitration, even when they had been made aware of this difficulty. Under the circumstances, I direct that each party do bear their own costs of this application. I think that the suit should proceed before me with all expedition, as it has now been for three years on the file. The case will be set down for hearing four weeks from to-day, the written statement to be filed within a fortnight.

First appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 14th March 1913, dismissing the suit with costs.

Messrs. Manohar Lal and Rali, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., and Rai Sahib Babu Wazir Singh and Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are the appellants in this Court, brought an action for the recovery of the property of one Sewak Ram, grandson of one Moti Ram, a Nagar Brahman of Delhi, and claimed to succeed to the estate as Sewak Ram's heirs ab intestato under the Hindu Law, on the allegation that they were the sons of two sisters of Sewak Ram's father. The claim thus set up, was resisted by the defendant Musammatt Parbati, a minor daughter of Sewak Ram's brother Kesho Ram, who denied, inter alia, the relationship alleged by the plaintiffs. Upon the pleadings of the parties, the learned Divisional Judge who tried the suit as an original Court framed seven issues, the most important of which is the first issue which runs as follows:—Is the pedigree table propounded by the plaintiffs correct and are they related to Moti Ram as alleged? On the question of fact embodied in this issue, he has recorded his finding against the plaintiffs with the result that he has dismissed the suit, in toto. It is against the judgment and the decree dismissing their suit that the plaintiffs have preferred the present appeal to this Court and it is manifest that unless they succeed in establishing the relationship, which is the foundation of their claim, they have no right whatever to the property in dispute.

To understand the point in controversy between the parties, it is necessary to set out the following pedigree table put forward by the plaintiffs :—

Moti Ram, who was the head of the family, died in 1883 leaving a Will, a copy of which has been placed upon the record. The original document, which was a registered one, could not be found and for this reason the trial Court allowed the defendant to produce secondary evidence thereof apparently without demur by the appellants, and we think it is now too late for them to object to its admissibility, more especially when we find that the memorandum of appeal does not contain any objection to that effect.

It appears that Salig Ram predeceased his father and that the property which descended from Moti Ram was partitioned in 1885 between his son Shib Shankar alias Chhaj Mal on one side and the two sons of Salig Ram on the other, in accordance with the award of Madho Ram, father of the plaintiff, Hardeo Ram. The deed of partition, which is dated the 30th June 1885, is on the record and will be referred to hereafter in so far as it has a bearing upon the matter before us. It may be mentioned here that the property, which came to Chhaj Mal's share, is in the possession of his granddaughter Musammât Gauri, and that, after the death of Kesho Ram in 1904, the remaining half of Moti Ram's estate came into the exclusive possession of Sewak Ram who died in 1908, leaving his widow Musammât Raja Devi whose death in 1910 led to the present litigation. Now it is undeniable that the defendant, Musammât Parbati, is the daughter of Kesho Ram and that she being in possession of the property, is entitled to retain it until evicted in due course of law by a person or persons who establish their superior right. The plaintiffs assert that Moti Ram had, besides other issue, two daughters, Musammât Suraj Kaur and Musammât Jarao Kaur, who were their mothers; but this assertion is controverted by the defendant.

It will be observed that, with the exception of these two ladies and their descendants, the rest of the above genealogical tree is admitted by the parties and the question for determination is whether the plaintiffs, on whom the onus admittedly lay, have succeeded in proving that Musammât Suraj Kaur and Musammât Jarao Kaur were daughters of Moti Ram. Now one would expect that in a family of this kind owning a valuable estate in the town of Delhi, there would be some documentary evidence setting the matter one way or the other. But we find that there is no document of any sort or kind that would enable the Court to come to any definite conclusion. The only two documents, which have been referred to by the learned Counsel for the parties, are the Will of Moti Ram and the partition-deed of 1885, and neither of them is of any importance with respect to the relationship. The former mentions only the male descendants of the testator and omits all reference to daughters, though it is common ground that two, at any rate, were in existence at his death. In the partition-deed, the son and the grandsons of Moti Ram describe Madho Ram, the father of plaintiff Hardeo Ram, as their rishtedar; but a reference to Exhibit VI (printed at page 5 of the paper-book) conclusively shows that Madho Ram's grandfather was the brother of one Rattan Chand, who married Musammât Radhan, a sister of Moti Ram, and that Madho Ram was, therefore, properly described as their relation by the descendants of Moti Ram. In the face of this admitted relationship, which fully accounts for the use of the above quoted word, the plaintiffs cannot invoke it to support their contention that Madho Ram had another and closer relationship, namely, that he was a son-in-law of Moti Ram. It is clear that both these documents are altogether inconclusive and do not lead to any inference in favour of the plaintiffs.

Turning now to the oral evidence, we observe that the testimony of the plaintiffs' witnesses is flatly contradicted by the evidence of the witnesses produced by the defendant. It is noteworthy that of those examined on behalf of the plaintiffs, there are only two, namely, Chuni Lal and Shankar Lal, who were mentioned in the first application, dated the 1st April 1912, made to the Court for summoning witnesses; and it appears that the remaining witnesses named therein were given up and that other persons were substituted for them, as the case progressed from time to time. This circumstance naturally excites suspicion and detracts from the value to be attached to the oral evidence. Further, we notice that the majority of the witnesses are partisans of the plaintiffs and do not seem to possess any special means of knowing the descendants of Moti Ram or their kinship with the plaintiffs.

The judgment appealed against gives a

irly correct version of the evidence of the witnesses for the plaintiffs and after examining it in the light of the arguments advanced on both sides, we consider that the learned Divisional Judge has not underestimated the value to be placed upon it. It would make our judgment unnecessarily long, if we were to deal in extenso with the evidence of each witness seriatim and set forth our remarks in connection therewith. We think that witnesses Chuni Lal, Narain Das, Anant Ram, Sri Ram, Manohar Lal, Nathu Mal, and Basti Ram need not detain us long and may be disposed of with a few general observations. None of them seem to be men of any real status in society and are unable to give any satisfactory explanation of their means of knowledge of Moti Ram's descendants. They are interested in the plaintiffs and their evidence appears to be unsatisfactory.

Of the remaining witnesses, Hamir Lal and Shiv Ram are brothers and the former is married to the sister of the plaintiff Hardeo Ram. Consequently both of them are vitally interested in the success of the suit, and as observed already, neither of them was summoned for the first hearing. There are only three witnesses, namely, Shambho Nath, Devi Sahai and Shankar Lal, whose evidence deserves serious consideration. Now Shambho Nath was undoubtedly connected with this family, as his sister was the first wife of Kesho Ram, but the lady seems to have died about 17 or 18 years ago without leaving any issue. The witness is a young man of 33 years of age and has obviously no first-hand knowledge of the facts deposed to by him. Further, he is unable to specify the source of his information beyond stating that he heard of the relationship in his own family. Pandit Devi Shankar, being a Deputy Inspector of Schools in the United Provinces, is a respectable Government officer but it appears that one of his cousins is the wife of the plaintiff Gokal Chand, and he cannot, therefore, be regarded as a disinterested person. His evidence would have been of some importance, if he had disclosed to the Court, the means by which he came to know of the existence and the names of Moti Ram's daughters. The witness admits that he never saw Moti Ram, and as he does not belong either to Delhi (where the deceased resided) or to Agra (where the plaintiffs are living), we are unable to find how the witness came to know about the female descendants of Moti Ram. In these circumstances, the only inference which we can deduce is that his information is based upon hearsay evidence. Lastly, there is the statement of Shankar Lal, who is alleged to be the jons et origo of this litigation. The witness claims to be the probat of Moti Ram's family and gives a detailed account of the various members thereof. He cannot, however, produce a single document in support of his testimony and it is plain that he is, by no means, favourably disposed towards the defendant. Not only does he admit that he is not the defendant's probat, but it is clear that he is her sub-tenant and that there is a dispute between him and the defendant over the payment of rent and also in connection with a sum of Rs. 1,000.

This summarises the case for the plaintiffs, which we think is amply rebutted by the evidence of the witnesses examined by the defendant. They are practically unanimous in stating that Moti Ram had only two daughters,—Musammatt Ganga and Musammatt Rattan Kaur; and one of the witnesses, Lakshmi Chand, gives very convincing evidence against the plaintiffs. There is no doubt that he was in a position to know of the descendants of Moti Ram, because we find that not only did his wife's sister marry Salig Ram but that his own sister married Salig Ram's brother, Chhaj Mal, and that he himself was a partner of Kesho Ram for nearly nine years. The witness is positive that Moti Ram had only two daughters, Musammatt Ganga and Musammatt Rattan Kaur, and that he never saw or heard of Suraj Kaur and Jarao Kaur. He is not partial to either party and no reason has been shown to us for thinking that he is perjuring himself in order to bolster up a false defence and thereby deprive the rightful owners of their inheritance.

Before we conclude, we should like to mention a few circumstances which, in our opinion, tell strongly against the version of the plaintiffs. The evidence on the record makes it pretty clear that on the occasions of deaths and marriages in the family in question, neither of the plaintiffs was ever present and that one Gokal Chand of Meerut, the grandson of Moti Ram's sister was requisitioned to perform at least some of the funeral ceremonies, e. g., on the deaths of Kesho Ram and of the wives of Salig Ram and Sewak Ram. Now if the plaintiffs were the grandsons of Moti Ram, they would be more nearly related than Gokal Chand of Meerut and their abstention from all ceremonies of the families is wholly inexplicable. Further, there is not a particle of evidence to show that on the occasions of their own marriages, or of their brothers and sisters, or of their descendants, the plaintiffs ever received any presents from Moti Ram's family. And if the alleged kinship is not a mere fiction, the social usage demands that they should have been the recipients of the usual presents in cash and dresses at the time of each marriage. Moreover, it seems strange that there should not be any entry in a book, or any letter, or some other document during all these years which would support their assertion as to relationship. Nor is it easy to understand why Gokal Chand, admittedly a collateral of the plaintiffs and a grandson of Moti Ram's sister, and Seth Ram Chand, the son-in-law of Musammatt Rattan Kaur, both of whom are obviously cognizant of the affairs of the family, should not have been produced as witnesses by the plaintiffs.

Upon an examination of the entire material on the record and a careful consideration of the pros and cons of the case, we have arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiffs have not discharged the onus which rested upon them and that the finding of the learned Divisional Judge on the first issue must be affirmed. In this view, it is obviously unnecessary to deal with the other points, which can only arise in the event of the plaintiffs establishing their allegation with respect to the relationship. We accordingly confirm the judgment and the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Landlord and tenant Occupation rent—Evidence—Unregistered lease deed, if admissible to prove rent fixed—Claim for occupation rent, whether transferable—Vendee of land, right of, to recover occupation rent for period prior to date of conveyance—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 3, 6 (e)—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17 (d), 49.

An unregistered document purporting to be a lease of immoveable property is not admissible in evidence even to prove the rent agreed to be paid. [p. 604, col. 2.]

The right to claim occupation rent is not a mere right to sue incapable of being transferred, but an actionable claim which can be transferred. Consequently, a vendee of a land is entitled to recover the occupation rent due on it even prior to the date of the conveyance. [p. 606, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the judgment and decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Small Cause Suit No. 1480 of 1913.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. N. S. Rangaswami Aiyangar, for Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this petition is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover a sum of Rs. 290 from the defendant for the use and occupation of certain lands.

There was a document between the parties purporting to be a lease but inasmuch as the agreement was reduced to writing but not registered, it could not affect the immoveable property by reason of sections 49 and 17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act, XVI of 1908.

The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, proceeded on the basis that, though this document is inadmissible for want of registration to prove the leasing or the tenants' right to the term in it, yet it "is admissible to prove the rent agreed to be paid." In my opinion this is an erroneous view of the law. Section

GOVINDASAMI PILLAI v. RAMASAMI AIYAR.

17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act provides that "leases of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent" shall be registered; and section 49 provides that "no document required by section 17 to be registered shall affect any immoveable property comprised thereinunless it has been registered." The document Exhibit A, therefore, which purports to be a lease of the property, cannot affect the immoveable property. It has been argued before me that, if the document is looked at for the purposes of fixing the rent between the parties, it does not affect the property and, therefore, it may be operative in this regard notwithstanding sections 49. I cannot accede to this argument. When there is a lease with reference to immoveable property, it seems to me that the terms on which the property is leased "affect" that property within the meaning of section 49, and the rent reserved in the lease is the most important of the terms.

In my view, therefore, the Subordinate Judge's finding on the question of the amount of occupation rent due from the defendant to the plaintiffs is vitiated by the error. I find, however, that he refers to the terms of Exhibit B, which is a previous registered lease of half the land now in question. The rent fixed under that deed was Rs. 130 per annum, and the Subordinate Judge points out that if that document were taken as the basis for fixing the occupation rent in respect of the whole land now in question, the defendant would be liable to pay Rs. 260 per annum. I take it, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge indicates, with sufficient precision for my present purpose, that in his opinion the claim of Rs. 290 made by the plaintiffs is a fair claim. I agree with him; and I think it would be futile to call for a fresh finding on the point.

The next point argued before me is whether the plaintiffs have become entitled to this sum, assuming it to be a fair occupation rent. It is argued before me that they are not entitled, because the plaintiffs became the owners of the property in question only by a sale in their favour, dated the 23rd October 1912, and that a part of the sum which is decreed to them as occupation rent became due prior to their sale-deed, that the claim for occupation rent is not such a claim as can be validly transferred and that when such a claim is purported to be transferred, it is of no effect and does not empower the alleged transferee to claim it.

The sale-deed, Exhibit E, in favour of the plaintiffs, provides that the plaintiffs shall hold and enjoy the said properties with the income accruing therefrom from the date of Exhibit D, the 8th December 1911, on which date the plaintiffs' vendor purchased the property.

I must here refer to a matter to which neither my attention nor the attention of the lower Court was drawn and which is not taken in the grounds of revision. It is this that the claim is for rent for the period between 1st September 1911 to 14th November 1912 and it has been allowed for that period. But the plaintiffs' sale-deed empowers them to recover the rent only, as from 8th December 1911. In spite of the fact that this point was not taken by the defendant, I considered it right to draw the attention of the Pleaders to it. Mr. N. S. Rangaswami Iyengar, who appeared for the plaintiffs, expressed his willingness to have a deduction made in the claim in respect of the period from 1st September 1911 to 8th December 1911, but said that as during this period also, his clients had a $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in the property, they should be allowed to recover $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the proportionate rent for that period. This offer, which I am informed, means a deduction of Rs. 48-12-0 from the decree amount, was not accepted. I do not think that I ought to interfere in this matter without the consent of the parties. Moreover, it seems to me that the calculation of the occupation rent is on a rough basis not too favourable to the plaintiffs, and I am not prepared to hold that on a fair basis, the deduction for the period between 1st September and 1st December ought necessarily to be proportionate or that the amount fixed for the period claimed would not be a fair amount for the period between 8th December and 14th November 1912.

I proceed to consider the question with reference to the period after the date of Exhibit D.

GOVINDASAMI PILLAI v. RAMASAMI AIYAR.

The argument for the petitioner before me has been that the terms of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, section 6 (e), prohibit the transfer to the plaintiffs of any right to recover the occupation rent due from the defendant prior to the sale-deed in their favour, namely, prior to the 23rd October 1912.

The question shortly, therefore, is whether the right to claim occupation rent is:

(1) "a mere right to sue" incapable of being transferred, or

(2) such an actionable claim as is defined in section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act, which can be transferred under the sale-deed, and by being so transferred, empower the vendee to recover the occupation rent due on the land prior to the date of the conveyance.

In the Metropolitan Railway Company v. Defries (1), it was decided by the Court of Appeal in England, agreeing with the Divisional Court, that where premises are transferred with the rights to recover "all rents and profits", the right to recover occupation rent is also transferred.

In that case, the facts were that the plaintiffs agreed to purchase certain property from the defendants and the purchase was to be completed on the 29th September 1869, from which time the plaintiffs were to receive all rents and profits and to pay interest on the purchase-money until the completion of the purchase. The purchase, however, was not as a matter of fact completed until the 13th March 1876. The defendants had remained in possession, but had paid no rent. It was held that the defendants were liable to pay occupation rent for the period in question. Mr. Seshachariar sought to distinguish the Metropolitan Railway Company's case (1), on the ground that the amount that ought to have been allowed for occupation rent was admitted there, whereas in the case before me that amount has had to be determined in the manner mentioned in an earlier part of my judgment. This circumstance seems to me to be quite irrelevant to the real point. The Metropolitan Railway Company's case (1) seems to me to be indistinguishable from the present except on one point (which was not taken before me), namely, that the occupation rent claimed there was not for a period prior to the date of the agreement for the sale of the property; but I do not consider that to be an important distinction.

What seems to me to be of substance is that the right to recover occupation rent was considered to follow the title to the property and to be included in the term "rents and profits." If the rent recoverable in respect of the period in question had been not occupation rent, but rent under a valid lease, the plaintiffs would have been entitled to succeed, and it seems to me that the case of Metropolitan Railway Company v. Defries (1) is authority for the proposition that in this regard, occupation rent is not different from rent due under a lease. The same point seems to have been assumed, though it did not come up for decision, in Anker v. Franklin (2).

A point was also taken before me that the defendant ought to have the benefit of section 132 of the Transfer of Property Act. But it was not suggested in the written statement or at the trial in the lower Court that there were any such equities or liabilities as the section contemplates. Mr. Seshachariar took the point for the first time in his grounds, but is not able even now to give any particulars of the equities or liabilities that may be in question. There is no substance, therefore, in this point.

It seems to me for these reasons that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount decreed to them by the Subordinate Judge, and I dismiss the petition with costs.

Petition dismissed.

PATIRAM BANERJEE v. KANKINARRA CO., LD.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 69 of 1914.*

February 26, 1915.

Present:—Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Woodroffe.

PATIRAM BANERJEE—PLAINTIFF—

versus

KANKINARRA COMPANY, LTD., AND ANOTHER—DEPENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Broker—Undisclosed principal—Bought and sold notes—Contract—Construction by similarity—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 222, 230—Arbitration.

The plaintiff was a broker who bought on behalf of the agents of the defendant mills a certain quantity of jute and he sent to the mill agents a bought note stating—"We have bought to your order and for your account from our principals, etc.", and at the same time he sent to the firm from whom the jute was bought, a sold note saying—"We have sold by your order and for your account to our principal, etc." The plaintiff disclosed to the mill agents the name of the firm of whom jute was bought about the time delivery was due, but more than three months after the contract was effected, whereupon the mill agents refused to recognise this firm and sought to make the broker liable as seller.

Held, by Jenkins, C. J.—that the plaintiff here was no more than an intermediary, and was not an agent for sale to whom the provisions of section 230 of the Indian Contract Act would apply so as to make him liable as an agent who has not disclosed his principal's name. [p. 613, col. 2.]

Contracts should be interpreted by themselves and it is improper to interpret one contract by reference to another because they may seem to differ very little, as it may result in identifying contracts which are wholly different. [p. 613, col. 2.]

Gubboy v. Aetoom, 17 C. 449, distinguished.

Southwell v. Bowditch (1876) 1 C. P. D. 374; 15 L. J. C. P. 630; 35 L. T. 196; 24 W. R. 838, followed.

Woodroffe, J.—A broker is an agent to find a contracting party and as long as he adheres strictly to his position as broker, his contract is one of employment between him and the person who employs him, and not a contract of sale or purchase with the party whom he in the course of such employment finds. [p. 614, col. 1.]

FACTS.—This was an appeal from a judgment of Chitty, J., by the plaintiff Patiram Banerjee.

It was a suit for a declaration that an award made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce is invalid and inoperative as against the plaintiff, that the said award may be set aside, that in case the said award be held to be valid, the second defendant K. D. Shaha may be declared liable to indemnify the plaintiff.

The bought and the sold notes were sent to the parties on the 2nd June 1913. The names of the opposite parties to the contract were disclosed by the plaintiff in writing on the 16th September 1913.

The material portions of the bought and the sold notes addressed by the plaintiff-appellant were as follows:—

Calcutta, 2nd June 1913.

Messrs. Jardine, Skinner and Co.,

Agents, Kankinarra Jute Mills Co., Ltd

Dear Sirs,

We have this day bought by your order and for your account from our principals

Two hundred and fifty kutchha bales of jute (quality, mark, weight and price and other conditions are then mentioned, etc., etc., etc.

Yours faithfully,

(Sd.) S. N. Banerjee & Co.,

Brokers.

Calcutta, 2nd June 1913.

Babu B. K. Shaha,

Calcutta.

Dear Sir,

We have this day sold by your order and for your account to our principals

(Then follow identical details of quantity, weight, price and other terms.)

Yours faithfully,

(Sd.) S. N. Banerjee & Co.,

Brokers.

Each of the above bought and sold notes concludes with an arbitration clause, which was in the following terms:—

"Any dispute arising out of this contract shall be referred to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce whose decision shall be accepted as final and binding on both parties to this contract."

The other material facts of the case will appear from the judgment of Chitty, J., which is as follows:—

"This is a suit brought by Patiram Banerjee, who carries on business as a broker in the name of S. N. Banerjee & Co., to have set aside an award which was made under the Rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and which ordered that he should pay to Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., as Managing Agents for the Kankinarra

*The report of this case has been taken from the Calcutta Weekly Notes with permission.—Ed.

PATIRAM BANERJEE v. KANKINARRA CO., LD.

Co., Ltd., the sum of Rs. 4,593-12 and the costs of the arbitration Rs. 197. The plaintiff has joined as defendants the firm of Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., and also K. D. Shaha. Against K. D. Shaha the plaintiff claims in the alternative that, in case the award be held to be valid, the defendant K. D. Shaha may be declared liable to indemnify the plaintiff and may be ordered to pay to the plaintiff the sums of Rs. 4,593-12 and Rs. 197. Against Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., the plaintiff has obviously no case at all. It was argued that this award was made between him and Jardine, Skinner & Co. This is clearly not the case. The persons to receive payment were, no doubt, Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., but only in their capacity of Managing Agents of the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., whose business, as such Managing Agents, they transact. The suit must, therefore, fail against Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co.

"The plaintiff put through a contract between the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., and K. D. Shaha on 2nd June 1913, the bought and sold notes being Exhibits A1 and A2 in this case. The plaintiff in doing that acted as broker, but in each case, he refrained from mentioning to the opposite party the name of the principal with whom the contract was being made. Thus he informed Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., as Managing Agents of the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., that he had bought by their order and for their account from his principal 250 kutch bales of jute, the time for delivery of the jute being within September 1913, and the delivery to be made to the Kankinarra Jute Mills. On 11th September he wrote to K. D. Shaha to say that he had not yet received the documents for the contracts in question and directed him to see that the jute was delivered within due date. On 16th September the plaintiff wrote again to K. D. Shaha declaring Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., as Managing Agents of the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., as principals in the above contract, and on the same day, he wrote a similar letter to Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., declaring K. D. Shaha as the seller. Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. at once, on 17th September 1913, wrote to the plaintiff saying that they did not care to accept the principal's name in the contract, and added 'this contract must, therefore, stand as originally made out'. On 29th September 1913, Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. wrote to the plaintiff for documents for the 250 bales of jute due on 30th September under this contract. The plaintiff had done nothing up to that day in consequence of the refusal of Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. to recognise K. D. Shaha as the contracting party. On 30th September, he wrote to K. D. Shaha to say that he was still without documents from him against his contract, and that the due date for delivery was over on that day. He added 'we shall, therefore, be reluctantly obliged to buy against you and shall proceed to take legal proceedings to realize the amount of the market difference, if so advised'. On the same day, he writes to Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. requesting them to ask the seller direct for the jute due under the contract. On the 3rd October 1913, Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. replied that they had applied to him direct for the delivery of the September portion of the contract, and that they did not recognise his sellers and could have no dealings with them, and asked him further to note that, as he had not applied for extension of delivery, a bill for difference would be made against him. On the same day he appears to have intimated to K. D. Shaha for the first time that Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. would not accept him as the principal under the contract. On 23rd October 1913, Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. billed the plaintiff for the amount now in question, Rs. 4,593-12, and on the 25th, the plaintiff writes to K. D. Shaha: 'As you have failed to deliver 250 bales of jute due on 30th September last under this contract, we present our bill for the market difference of the jute on that day'. Subsequently Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. acting on behalf of the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., as they have been acting throughout, referred the matter to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce for arbitration. The plaintiff asked for time of the Chamber of Commerce to consider his position in the matter of the arbitration, which was expressed to be between the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., on the one side and the plaintiff on the other. After two postponements for him to consider his position, the plaintiff ultimately stated that the contract was not between him and the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., but between his principal K. D. Shaha and the said Company. He, therefore, maintained that the agreement for reference did not bind him, and submitted that the Tribunal had no jurisdiction in the matter. The arbitration proceeded ex parte, with the result that the award was made against the plaintiff for the sums mentioned. So far as the plaintiff's case against the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., is concerned, it was argued that the contract and arbitration were not with that Company at all, but with Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. With that I have already dealt. There can be no doubt whatever that the contract was one between the Company and the seller, and that Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. were merely the Managing Agents carrying on the business of the Company and working on its behalf. The Company is a limited Company and such matters would be naturally transacted by its Managing Agents. Then, it is argued that the plaintiff did not submit to arbitration as between himself and the Kankinarra Co., Ltd. That appears to me to turn on the question of the plaintiff's liability under the contract. By section 230 of the Indian Contract Act, in the absence of any contract to that effect, an agent cannot personally enforce contracts entered into by him on behalf of his principal, nor is he personally bound by them. Such a contract is presumed to exist in certain circumstances, one of which is when the agent has not disclosed the name of his principal. Here he did not at first disclose the name of his principal, and it would be presumed that the contract was, if necessary, enforceable against him. He did, however, at a later stage disclose the name of K. D. Shaha as his principal, and the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., through Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., declined to accept that person as seller. Now the obvious course for the plaintiff was to have told both the Company and K. D. Shaha that as the Company would not recognise K. D. Shaha as principal, there could not be any contract between them. If he had done that, there was no answer, and he clearly could not have been made liable in any way. The plaintiff, however, did not take this course. He did not even inform K. D. Shaha of what Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. had said until 3rd October, when the time for performance had gone by. He accepted the position which they proposed in their letter of 17th September that the contract should stand as it was, namely, with himself as broker and an undisclosed principal. He would, therefore, be liable to the undisclosed principal. The question is raised—whether that covers the clause referring to arbitration. It is a nice point and so far as I know is not covered by authority. I have no recollection of its ever arising before, but it appears to me that if the contract is enforceable against the broker as though he were a principal, it must necessarily follow that it is enforceable in its entirety and as he is entitled to the benefit of any clause in his favour, so also is he liable for any obligations which may be thrown upon him. He becomes for the purpose of the contract, a party to the contract and I think that he must be taken to be bound by the clause which accepts the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and agrees to take the decision of that Tribunal as binding. The plaintiff in clause 10 of his plaint has put forward a number of grounds for setting aside the award, but the 2nd, 3rd and 4th grounds have not in any way been pressed. With the 1st, 5th and 6th grounds I have dealt. It follows, therefore, that so far as the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., is concerned, the award must be held to be valid and binding on the plaintiff and cannot be set aside.

Then, there is the question whether the plaintiff has any claim to be indemnified by K. D. Shaha against the award, which stands against the plaintiff as a decree of this Court. I do not think that he has any present case against K. D. Shaha for two reasons. In the first place, he accepted the position that Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., for the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., would not accept K. D. Shaha as a contracting party, and at the same time, he appears to have regarded K. D. Shaha as a principal contracting party with himself. That is clear from his letters of 30th September and 25th October 1913, and by the fact that he billed K. D. Shaha as liable to him for non-delivery of the jute. If that be so, it is obvious that he cannot now proceed against him as a principal for whose default the broker has been made liable. The second reason is that the plaintiff has not yet paid anything to the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., and cannot, therefore, ask K. D. Shaha to indemnify him in any particular amount. Mr. Pugh in reply for the plaintiff insisted very much on the principles laid down in Wolmershausen v. Gullick (1). I do not wish to appear as in any way dissenting from the correctness of that decision or of the various decisions which Mr. Justice Wright there reviewed. It appears to me that the facts there are totally different from the facts of this case. Here, moreover, we have the Contract Act which is perfectly plain. If this be regarded as an ordinary case of guarantee, then by section 145, the surety is only entitled to recover from the principal debtor whatever sum he has rightfully paid on the guarantee, but not sums which he has paid wrongfully. Under section 222 of the same Act, the employer of an agent is bound to indemnify him against the consequences of all lawful acts done by such agent in exercise of the authority conferred upon him. It may be doubted whether the plaintiff and K. D. Shaha any longer stood in the position of agent and employer having regard to the line which the plaintiff took up; but even supposing it were so, then K. D. Shaha would only be bound to indemnify the plaintiff against the consequences of his acts. We do not yet know what the consequences may be. It may possibly be that the plaintiff may compromise the case with the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., and have to pay very much less, or even nothing at all, in respect of this award. It would obviously be premature in this case to pass a prospective decree against K. D. Shaha for payment of such sum as the plaintiff may have to pay to the Kankinarra Co., Ltd. For these reasons, I think the suit fails against all the defendants and it must be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2.

"Mr. Pugh.—I ask that there be one set of costs.

(1) (1893) 2 Ch. 514, 62 L. J. Ch. 773; 3 R. 610; 68 L. T. 783.

"CHITTY, J.—Certainly not. You have chosen to join the three parties as defendants and must pay to each of them their costs.

"This decision covers the Suit No. 266 of 1914 which is between the same parties, with the exception that the Kamarhatty Co., Ltd., is substituted for the Kankinarra Co., Ltd. That suit must also fail against all the defendants and be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2."

On appeal from the above judgment:—

Mr. N. N. Sircar, with him Mr. J. N. Sinha, for the plaintiff-appellant.—The two parties were K. D. Shaha (seller) and Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. as agents for the Kankinarra Jute Mills (buyers). There is no dispute that the plaintiff acted merely as a broker. "Both parties" in the arbitration clause obviously refers to the buyer and the seller.

[JENKINS, C. J.—You say there is no contract with you and the Kankinarra Mills. Does the arbitration clause extend to a case, when there is a dispute as to the existence of the contract?]

Mr. Sircar.—No. In this case, the real dispute is whether there was any contract at all between the appellant and the respondent Mills. I cannot be made liable under this contract [Piercy v. Young (2)].

Section 230 of the Contract Act does not apply where a person acts as the common agent of both parties. The section merely raises a presumption which can be rebutted and ordinarily the form of the contract would rebut it.

If section 230 applies to a common agent and then if you apply section 222 to the same common agent, what will be the position? The principal will get damages from the common agent under section 230 and will have to indemnify the same common agent under section 222 for the same amount.

[WOODROFFE, J.—How long can an agent keep from disclosing the name of his principal?]

Mr. Sircar.—It is sufficient, if he discloses the name at any time before the completion of the contract.

PATIRAM BANERJEE & KANKINARRA CO., LTD

Even Petheram, C. J., in Gubboy v. Avetoom (3) said, "I am not by any means prepared to say that the disclosure must be on the face of the contract".

[JENKINS, C. J.—Is there any departure in section 230 from the principles as laid down in the English cases?]

Mr. Sircar.—It is suggested in the order of reference, though not in the judgment in Gubboy v. Avetoom (3), that section 230 is not in accordance with English Law. A passage from Pollock's Law of Contract, 2nd Edition, is cited in Hasonbhoy Visram v. H. Clapham (4) to show that Indian Law is different from English Law. That passage, however, does not appear in Mr. Pollock's Contract Act, 3rd Edition.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Pollock's view of Indian Law now is that it is identical with English Law.]

Mr. Sircar.—Gubboy v. Avetoom (3): This case merely decides that "Avetoom for Principal" does not rebut the presumption arising under section 230. We are not relying merely on those words as in Gubboy v. Avetoom (3). The whole contract in our case rebuts the presumption. Cites Southwell v. Bowditch (5). Contracts must not be construed on the ground of the language being somewhat similar: Bristol Waterworks Company v. Uren (6). I submit that in Gubboy v. Avetoom (3) the law was not rightly interpreted. It relied on the judgment in Fleet v. Murton (7) which was cited at the Bar. But Fleet v. Murton (7) decided absolutely the contrary. The Court overlooked the point of usage in Fleet v. Murton (7). If the Court should hold that the award is valid, then I submit K. D. Shaha ought to indemnify me: Lacey v. Hill Crowley's Olaim (8).

Mr. Avetoom (with him Mr. McNair), for the Respondent Mills, refers to Southwell v. Bowditch (5).

[WOODROFFE, J.—Does the case come under section 230? You must distinguish between the contract as to the employment of the agent and the contract of sale.]

Mr. Avetoom.—The whole law is to be found in Benjamin on Sale, 5th Edition, page 256. Cites Hutcheson v. Eaton (9).

[JENKINS, C. J.—I don't think there is any intention in Gubboy v. Avetoom (3) to depart from Sopromonian Setty v. Heilgers (10).]

Mr. Avetoom.—Gubboy v. Avetoom (3) is good law until it is overruled by a Full Bench.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Is the construction of one document by one Court binding on another Court construing another document? Reads arguments of Mr. Cohen, Q. C., in Southwell v. Bowditch (5).]

Mr. Avetoom.—The broker may increase his liability by acting in a certain way. Cites Parker v. Winlow (11) and Ramji Das v. Janki Das (12).

Mr. S. R. Das, for the Defendant-Respondent K. D. Shaha, contends that he cannot in any case be made liable on the contract. Adopts Mr. Sircar's argument that the plaintiff was not my agent to sell. I am bound to indemnify him against such consequences as arise directly from my order: Halhronn v. International Horse Agency and Exchange Limited (13). It cannot be said that the award made against him was the direct result of any order.

Mr. Sircar (in reply) cites Mackinnon, Mackenzie & Company v. Lang, Moir & Company (14), Paul Brier v. Chotalal Javerdas (15), Lakshmandas Narayandas v. Anna R. Lane (16), Parker v. Winlow (11) and Gadd v. Houghton (17). The presumption in section 230 would not apply to a broker. Once the contract is made and is complete,

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—The plaintiff carries on business as a jute-broker under the name of S. N. Banerjee & Co., and he has brought this suit for a declaration that an award, dated the 14th February 1914, is invalid and inoperative, and for consequential relief. In the alternative, he seeks a decree for indemnity.

This award professes to have been made on a dispute between Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., Managing Agents, Kankinarra Co., Limited, and Messrs. S. N. Banerjee & Co., with reference to a claim for damages for non-delivery of 250 bales jute bought and sold under contract No. D/2382 of 2nd June 1913.

The bought note was in these terms:—

No. D/2382.

Indian Jute Manufacturers' Association,
Jute Contract.

Calcutta, 2nd June 1913.

Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co.

Agents, Kankinarra Jute Mills Co., Ltd.

Dear Sirs,

We have this day bought by your order and for your account from our principals

(Here follows a description of the jute and provisions not material at this stage).

Arbitration.—Any dispute arising out of this contract shall be referred to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, whose decision shall be accepted as final and binding on both parties to this contract.

Yours faithfully,

(Sd.) S. N. Banerjee & Co.,
Brokers.

A corresponding sold note was sent to Babu K. D. Shaha on the same date.

On the 16th September 1913, S. N. Banerjee & Co., by letter declared Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., Agents. Kankinarra Co. Limited, on the one hand, and Babu K. D. Shaha on the other, their principals.

On the 17th September, Messrs. Jardine Skinner & Co. replied to Messrs. S. N. Banerjee & Company:—

"We do not agree to accept your principals' names under this contract. The contract must, therefore, stand as originally made out."

On the 29th September, Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. called on Messrs. Banerjee & Company to hand them documents for 250 bales, and on the 30th, Banerjee & Co., replied requesting them to ask the seller direct for the jute due under the contract. There was further correspondence but no delivery or payment was made, and ultimately Messrs. Banerjee & Co. received notice from the Registrar, Bengal Chamber of Commerce, that Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. had applied for arbitration. Messrs. Banerjee & Co. repudiated the jurisdiction of the Chamber of Commerce and the arbitrators appointed by it. The arbitrators, however, proceeded with the arbitration and made their award directing Messrs. Banerjee & Co. to pay Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. the sum of Rs. 4,593-12.

This is the award now impugned. Chitty, J., has dismissed the plaintiff's suit, and from this judgment, the present appeal has been preferred.

It is contended by the appellant that there was no contract between Messrs.

S. N. Banerjee & Co. and Messrs. Jardine Skinner & Co., or the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., that authorised the reference to arbitration.

The Kankinarra Co., Ltd., on the other hand maintain that the reference is justified by the clause providing for arbitration in the bought note.

The arbitration clause contemplates two parties, each a party to the contract, and there can, I think, be no doubt that those two parties are the sellers and the buyers.

Was then the plaintiff a party to the contract so as to be bound by the arbitration clause, was he a seller or buyer?

This question is not to be solved by describing the plaintiff as an agent with an undisclosed principal and finding what the Contract Act says about a person in that predicament; that would be a superficial mode of investigation. We must find out what was the contract between the plaintiff on the one hand, and Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co., as representing the Kankinarra Co., Ltd., on the other. For this purpose, we must examine the bought note and also the surrounding circumstances, among them being the fact that a corresponding note was sent to Babu K. D. Shaha. The bought note is no doubt signed by the plaintiff, and prima facie, that would bind him, but it would only bind him to that which is expressed in the document.

If the document be examined, it does not purport to be a sale by the plaintiff even as an agent; it is an intimation that Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co.'s order has been carried out by a purchase made by the plaintiff on their account not from himself, but from some one else.

The note may be an admission of the plaintiff's employment by Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. to buy on their behalf, but the contract (if any) as between the plaintiff and them, which it evidences, is a contract not of sale, but of employment.

This employment was to negotiate a sale and to be an intermediary, not to sell on behalf of another. The position is described by Jessel, M. R., in Southwell v. Bowditch (5), where he says, "Blackburn, J., in a remarkably clear judgment says: 'there is no doubt at all in principle that a broker, as such, merely dealing as broker and not as purchaser, makes a contract from the very nature of things between the buyer and the seller, and he is not himself either buyer or seller' (the phrase 'the very nature of things' hitting the fallacy of the Court below in this case), 'and that consequently where the contract says "sold to A B" or "sold to my principals", and the broker signs himself simply as broker, he does not make himself by that either purchaser or seller of the goods'."

That a person signs simply as broker may be clear from the terms of the contract as well as from any statement to that effect appended to his signature, and this is illustrated by Mellish, L. J., in the same case at page 379, where he says:—

"Now there is, I think, a material difference between the words 'sold for you to my principals' and 'bought of you for my principals'. The rule of law, no doubt, is that, if the principal is undisclosed, the broker saying 'bought of you for my principals' is himself liable; but this contract says 'sold for you to my principals, i.e., I, your broker, have made a contract for my principals, the buyers.'"

I have already pointed out that the note in this case is in the 2nd of these two forms, and, on its true construction, I hold that the plaintiff was no more than an intermediary, and was not an agent for sale, to whom the provisions of section 230 of the Contract Act applies, so as to make him liable as an agent who has not disclosed his principal's name.

It has been contended before us that the present case is governed by Gulboy v. Astoom (3). It is true that it was there held that the defendant in that case was an agent for an undisclosed principal within the meaning and operation of section 220. But to treat the construction placed on the document, and circumstances under consideration in that case, as a decision binding us in this case, is to fly in the teeth of the doctrine propounded by Jessel, M. R., in Southwell v. Bowditch (5) where he says "There is no more vicious line of argument, if I may say so with deference to the Court below, than that which was adopted by the Court below in this case of comparing one contract with another and saying it differs very little; you arrive ultimately at identifying wholly different contracts."

PATIRAM BANERJEE V. KANKINARRA CO., LTD.

And yet this is the way Mr. Avetoom would have us go. In a word, the Court there on the construction of the document before them, came to the conclusion that a particular relation was established: this cannot bind us in our construction of a different document written under wholly different circumstances. I do not propose to discuss the competence of a suit like the present, for no objection on this score has been raised. Nor is it necessary to consider the plaintiff's claim to indemnity against K. D. Shaha. In my opinion, the judgment of Chitty, J., must be modified and a decree passed in the plaintiff's favour setting aside the award. The respondent Company must pay the plaintiff's costs of the suit and appeal, and the plaintiff must pay K. D. Shaha's costs of the suit and appeal.

WOODROFFE, J.—We must look at the terms of section 230 of the Contract Act. The first question is whether the appellant, who is a broker, is as such an agent. I think, a broker is an agent. For what purpose he is an agent is another question. Primarily and for some purposes, he is the agent of the party by whom he was originally employed. He is also generally the agent of each of the two parties for whom he negotiates. The engagement of a broker is like that of an ordinary agent, but with this difference, that the broker being employed by persons who have opposite interests, he is, as it were, agent for both the one and the other to negotiate the commerce or affair in which he concerns himself. Thus his agreement is twofold and consists in being faithful to all the parties in the execution of what each of them entrusts him with. A broker, when he closes a negotiation as the common agent of both parties, usually enters it in his business book and gives to each party a copy of the entry or a note or memorandum of the transaction, which as given to the seller, is the sold note, and as given to the buyer, is the bought note. Prima facie a broker is employed to find a purchaser or seller and as such is a mere intermediary. He is thus an agent to find a contracting party, and as long as he adheres strictly to his position as broker, his contract is one of employment between him and the person who employs him and not a contract of purchase or sale with the party whom he in the course of such employment finds. A broker may, however, make himself a party to the contract of sale or purchase. For he can go beyond his position of mere negotiator or agent to negotiate and by the terms of the contract make himself the agent of his principal to buy or sell. The section, therefore, refers to contracts "entered into by him on behalf of his principal." The next question is, therefore—did the appellant enter into the contract in suit on behalf of his principal, that is, was he an agent to sell to the respondent or was he a mere negotiator to bring the parties together, but otherwise not concerned? If in this case, the broker did enter into a contract, then I think on the facts he would be liable. For his principal was undisclosed at the date of the contract and the effect of the subsequent disclosure some three months later, would not in itself affect the right of the respondents to proceed against the appellant though they might, if they chose, elect to proceed against the principal when disclosed. Whilst, however, I am of opinion that the appellant would be liable to the buyers if the case falls within section 230, the question is whether that section applies.

Prima facie, a broker does not make himself liable and upon the question whether he has entered into a contract or not, we must look at the terms of the contract itself. Reference has been made to the fact that the appellant did not disclose his principal until three months later and did not, when Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. attempted to make him personally liable, repudiate the liability then sought to be put upon him. He also appears to have billed the seller for the difference. There is, however, a letter in which he refers Messrs. Jardine, Skinner & Co. to the sellers, and the difference bill is headed "Kankinarra Account". Subsequently, personal liability was denied. It is not contended that these facts amount to acquiescence or estoppel, or constitute a new contract. So far as the contract in suit is concerned, we must look to the terms of the contract itself. I should have had no difficulty as to this, had it not been for the case of Gubby v. Avetoom (3), on which the respondent relies, and which is very similar to the case before us, and which (whether it has been rightly or wrongly decided) is, it is contended, binding on us. I felt some difficulty on this point during the hearing, but as the learned Chief Justice is of opinion that this case does not stand in our way and his decision is in accord with the natural justice of the case, I do not dissent from the order he would pass. I wish to note with reference to the observation that in Calcutta, this would be regarded as a principal contract, that there is no evidence of such usage before us.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—
 Book containing formal declaration of division of status of members of joint Hindu family unregistered, admissibility of, in evidence for proving divided status of family.

In the course of certain partition proceedings among the members of a joint Hindu family, consisting of a father, his two undivided sons and a grandson by a predeceased son, separate lists were prepared of the properties, both moveable and immoveable, in the possession of the several members of the family and available for division. These were entered in a book together with the value of such properties. The several lists were then totalled up and the value of the share of each member ascertained and thereunder the following note appeared:—"In the presence of the witnesses named hereunder we divided." Below this note, the parties and the witnesses signed:

Held, that the book containing the above entries was a formal declaration of division of status attested by witnesses and that as such, it affected the immoveable properties mentioned therein and that not being registered, it was inadmissible in evidence to prove even the divided status of the members of the family. [p. 615, col. 2.]

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of Mr. Justice Spencer, in Second Appeal No. 1282 of 1912 (reported in 24 Ind. Cas. 771), preferred to the High Court against the decree of the District Court of Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 389 of 1910 (Original Suit No. 546 of 1908, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Dindigul).

FACTS of the case are set out in 24 Ind. Cas. 771.

Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Appellant.—The learned Judge erred in holding that Exhibit VIII was admissible in evidence to show the divided status and that it did not require registration. It is a document whereunder the parties divided their properties both moveable and immoveable. The words used in Exhibit VIII "In the presence of the witnesses named hereunder we divided," clearly show that the parties divided their properties under that document and that it was not intended as a mere memorandum recording the fact that they had previously become divided. Exhibit VIII is, therefore, clearly inadmissible in evidence for any purpose whatsoever. See Kannupatti Subbaya v. Kuruani Muddaletiah (1). Subrahmanya Aiyar v. Savitri Ammal (2) is wrongly decided. [Further argument was stopped and arguments on other points were reserved].

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer, for the Respondents:—Exhibit VIII is only a memorandum of a division which had already taken place and is admissible to prove the divided status. Vide Subrahmanya Aiyar v. Savitri Ammal (2).

JUDGMENT.—We think that Exhibit VIII is a formal declaration of division of status attested by witnesses and that as such, it affects the immoveable properties mentioned therein, and is inadmissible in evidence. We accordingly direct Exhibit VIII and the evidence relating thereto to be excluded from the record, and have decided to call on the District Judge to submit revised findings on issues 1 and 4 on the evidence on record. The findings should be submitted in six weeks. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections. The other questions are reserved.

[In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Madura submitted findings which were in favour of the appellant and the High Court, accepting the same, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restored that of the Munsif with costs in the High Court and the lower Appellate Court].

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73 (1), (c)—Surplus sale-proceeds, distribution of amongst attaching creditors—Money standing to credit of one suit, application for transfer to another suit, if to be made in former—Practice—Rateable distribution, application for, on Original Side—Certificates of Accountant-General and Registrar, necessity of.

Where money in Court stands to the credit of one suit and the plaintiff in another suit has, by reason of being an attaching creditor or mortgagee or otherwise, an interest in such money and desires the fund to be transferred to the credit of his suit in order to be dealt with therein, he should in all cases make the application in the suit to whose credit the money stands for the transfer. [p. 617, col. 1.]

In an application on the Original Side of the High Court for the transfer and rateable distribution of funds to which the provisions of section 73 (1), clause (c), of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) may possibly apply, the applicant should be required to produce, in addition to the certificate of the Accountant-General, a certificate of the Registrar. [p. 617, col. 2.]

FACTS.—This is an Application in Chambers, the facts of which are set out in the judgment.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by Kumar Krishna Mitter, decree-holder in Suit No. 163 of 1914, asking that a fund of Rs. 4,650-2-7 lying in the hands of the Accountant-General of this Court to the credit of the said suit be, after payment of the petitioner's costs, divided rateably between the petitioner and Ram Chandra

Ray Chaudhuri, execution-creditor in Suit No. 453 of 1910. The facts are as follows:—Property which had belonged to Hari Das Mitter, deceased, was subject to a mortgage, dated 19th December 1901, in favour of Byomkesh Chuckerbutty. The mortgagee instituted a suit on his mortgage (No. 179 of 1911) making the representatives of Hari Das Mitter party defendants. The final decree in that suit, dated 15th January 1913, ordered a sale of the mortgaged property. The sale took place on 2nd May 1914, and after making the first and second payments prescribed by section 73 (1), proviso (c), (it does not appear that there were any subsequent incumbrances), there remained a sum of Rs. 4,650-2-7 as surplus sale-proceeds.

On 6th April 1914, the present petitioner obtained a decree in this Court for Rs. 1,644-15-9, interest and costs against the estate of Hari Das Mitter. On 18th June 1914, he applied for execution and attached the surplus sale-proceeds above mentioned. In November last, he applied to have the said fund transferred to the credit of his suit, No. 163 of 1914, and it was so transferred under an order of 2nd December 1914. That transfer was made without notice to other creditors. The certificate of the Accountant-General, which was the only certificate required on the application for transfer, showed no attachment or other impediment as regards that fund.

On 22nd December 1908, Ganga Das Mahta had obtained a decree in Small Cause Court Suit No. 22785 of 1908, against the estate of Hari Das Mitter for Rs. 1,684-2-0, including, costs and interest up to 26th April 1911. The statement in paragraph 13 of the present petition, that that was a personal decree against Amulya Charan Mitter and Bireswar Mitter, is incorrect. That decree was transferred to this Court for execution on 1st May 1911, and on 28th August 1911, that execution-creditor attached the mortgaged property.

On 29th July 1910, Ram Chandra Ray Chaudhuri obtained a decree in Suit No. 453 of 1910 for Rs. 2,701 with further interest and costs against the estate of Hari Das Mitter. In execution of that decree, he also on 10th January 1913, attached the mortgaged property.

*The report of this case has been taken from the Calcutta Weekly Notes with permission.—Ed.

HORI V. THAKURJI MAHARAJ.

There was a further execution-creditor, Gourhari Mukerjee, who held a money-decree for Rs. 2,000 odd against the estate of Hari Das Mitter, but as he did not apply for execution until 12th December 1914, i. e., after the assets had been received by the Court, it is obvious that he has no locus standi on the present application, and his claim may, therefore, be left out of consideration.

On 22nd December 1914, the present petitioner applied that the fund might be rateably distributed between himself and Ram Chandra Ray Chaudhuri. For the purpose of this application, it was necessary for him to produce certificates, not only of the Accountant-General, but also of the Sheriff and the Registrar. From the two latter, it appeared for the first time that there were attachments against the property at the instance of Ganga Das Malita and Ram Chandra Ray Chaudhuri. It is clear that by the provisions of section 73 (1), proviso (c), these persons are entitled to be paid rateably out of the proceeds of sale in priority to the present petitioner, whose attachment was issued after the sale, and then only against the surplus sale-proceeds. As their claims are more than sufficient to absorb the whole fund, Rs. 4,650-2-7, it follows that there will be nothing left for the petitioner, and his present application must necessarily fail. It is a matter of regret that it should have been possible for the petitioner to obtain the order for transfer of the fund, without its transpiring that there was in reality no fund to transfer in which he could hope to share. This is due to two defects in our procedure, one of which has already been recently dealt with by the issue of a general order. Till recently, it was uncertain in which suit an application for transfer of a fund should be preferred, the suit to the credit of which the fund lay, or the suit to which it was to be transferred. I have intimated that in future, it should in all cases be made in the suit to the credit of which the fund is lying. The second defect is that in applications for transfer, such as that in the present case, orders have been passed on the certificate of the Accountant-General only. From this certificate all the attachments or incumbrances on a property or its sale-proceeds do not necessarily appear. If on such applications, the petitioner were required to produce a certificate also from the Registrar, he would be compelled to search the registers of that officer as well, and any objections which might exist to the transfer, would necessarily be disclosed. In my opinion this practice should be followed in the future, and on an application for the transfer of a fund to which the provisions of section 73 (1), proviso (c), Code of Civil Procedure, may possibly apply, the applicant should be required to produce, in addition to the certificate of the Accountant-General, a certificate of the Registrar.

This application fails and must be dismissed. Under the peculiar circumstances, I direct that each party do bear his own costs. As the order for transfer should never have been made, I direct that the funds in question be transferred back to the credit of Suit No. 179 of 1911, to be dealt with under section 73 (1), proviso (c), if and when the parties or either of them entitled thereunder make an application for that purpose.

Application dismissed.

Omission to consider question of costs—Failure to exercise jurisdiction vested in Court—Revision.*

A suit was withdrawn with permission to re-file it. The question of the terms on which the suit should be allowed to be withdrawn, especially as to costs, was not considered by the Court granting the permission.

Held, that the omission to consider the question of costs, which resulted in substantial injustice being caused to the defendant amounted to a failure to exercise the jurisdiction vested in the Court.

Reference from the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, for revision of an order allowing an enhancement suit to be withdrawn.

ORDER.

HOLMS, S. M.—The other side has not appeared although duly informed, so no objection has been raised by them to the order which the Additional Commissioner recommends should be passed. In this case, the Assistant Collector passed the order allowing the suit to be withdrawn with permission to re-file it on the 17th August last, the same day on which the application for withdrawal was put in. The defendant was not called on, and apparently, the question of the terms on which the suit should be allowed to be withdrawn, especially as to costs, was not considered by the Assistant Collector at all. Following the principle laid down in Kallan v. Dildar (1) and Kalika v. Ram Charan (2), the omission to consider the question of costs, which resulted in substantial injustice being caused to the defendant, amounted to a failure to exercise the jurisdiction vested in the Court.

I would, therefore, set aside the order of the Assistant Collector and order that permission be given to the plaintiff in the enhancement suit to withdraw from it with liberty to institute a fresh suit on paying the whole of the defendant's costs in the former proceedings in all the Courts.

Bengal Medical Act (VI B. C. of 1914), s. 27—

*The report of this case has been taken from the Calcutta Weekly Notes with permission.—Ed.

Rules framed under the Act by Local Government, ultra vires—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 45—Mandamus—Omission of qualified candidate's name from Election Roll—Mistake of Returning Officer—Jurisdiction of High Court to interfere.

The petitioner was a Licentiate in Medicine and Surgery of the University of Calcutta and as such was admittedly entitled to be registered under section 4 of the Bengal Medical Act. The petitioner's name was omitted from the preliminary list of persons qualified to vote at the first elections under the Act published by the Returning Officer appointed by the Local Government. His name was also omitted from the final Election Roll. The petitioner's application to the Returning Officer to have his name entered was not considered by that officer. The petitioner applied to the High Court under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act for an order compelling the Returning Officer to include and publish his name in the final Election Roll.

Held, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere. [p. 624, col. 2.]

Under rule 16 of the rules framed by the Local Government under the Bengal Medical Act, the decision of the Local Government on any question that may arise as to the intention, construction or application of the rules shall be final, and under section 27 of the Act no suit or other legal proceedings shall lie in respect of any act done in the exercise of any power conferred by the Act on the Local Government or the Council or the Registrar. [p. 624, col. 1.]

The act which is referred to in section 27 of the Bengal Medical Act is not one done by the Local Government, but done in exercise of any power conferred by the Act on the Local Government. [p. 624, col. 1.]

Per Woodroffe and Coxe, JJ.—Even assuming that rules framed by the Local Government under section 33 of the Bengal Act are ultra vires, an application under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act for an order compelling the Returning Officer to include and publish the applicant's name in the final Election Roll based on the assumption that the rules are not ultra vires but that they are valid rules which have not been given effect to in one particular by the Returning Officer, cannot be entertained. [p. 623, col. 2.]

FACTS.—This is an application under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act to compel the Hon'ble Mr. H. L. Stephenson, Financial Secretary to the Government of Bengal, who was appointed by the Government to be the Returning Officer under the Bengal Medical Act in respect of the first elections to the Council of Medical Registration, to include and publish the name of the Applicant, Dr. Narendra Nath Basu, in the final Election Roll, so as to enable him to take part in that election.

The facts are shortly as follows:—Dr. Basu is a Licentiate in Medicine and Surgery of the Calcutta University, having obtained his degree in 1896, and he is a medical practitioner practising in Calcutta. Under the rules published by the Local Government under section 33 of the Bengal Medical Act, a preliminary list of persons appearing to be qualified to vote at the first elections was published by the said Returning Officer in the Calcutta Gazette of the 10th June 1914. Dr. Basu's name was not included in that preliminary list. Under the rules all objections to and applications for inclusion of names in the said list, were to be sent to the office of the said Returning Officer before the 4th of July 1914. Dr. Basu sent an application for inclusion of his name on the 2nd of July 1914. His application was not considered by the Returning Officer at all. It was admitted by the Counsel for the Returning Officer that such failure to consider the application was due to an oversight. On the 15th of July 1914, a list purporting to be the final Election Roll was published in the Calcutta Gazette and the name of Dr. Basu was again omitted from the final list. On the 17th of July 1914, Dr. Basu again applied to the Returning Officer for inclusion of his name. In reply to such application, the Returning Officer on the 21st of July 1914, wrote saying that, since the name of Dr. Basu was not included in the final Election Roll, it was not possible under the rules to enter his name in the list of voters. Upon such refusal, this application was made to the High Court.

The case came on for hearing in the first instance before Chaudhuri, J.

Mr. H. D. Bose (with Mr. B. L. Mitter and Mr. Sarvadhikary), for the Applicant, argued that it was a proper case under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, and nothing in the Bengal Medical Act had taken away or interfered with the jurisdiction of the High Court. Section 27 of the Bengal Medical Act had no application, as the Returning Officer under the rules was independent of the Local Government or the Council or the Registrar under the Act. He was a public officer whom the Court could compel to perform his duty. Rule 4, which provided that on publication, the final Election Roll should be "deemed to be final and conclusive", meant that it should be conclusive for the purpose of the election and any election held on the basis of the said final Election Roll as published, could not be challenged on the ground of the Election Roll being incorrect. He further submitted that rule 3 provided that the Returning Officer "shall" consider all objections and applications in respect of the preliminary Election Roll and prepare therefrom a final Election Roll. In the present case, the Returning Officer having admittedly failed to consider Dr. Basu's application, the Election Roll published on the 15th of July was not the final Election Roll within the meaning of rules 3 and 4, and, therefore, there was no finality or conclusiveness in the Election Roll published on the 15th of July 1914, although it was called the final Election Roll. The Court had power to compel the Returning Officer, as the Returning Officer had himself the power of his own motion, to correct the admittedly incorrect Election Roll.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Counsel, appeared for the Returning Officer and said that the name of Dr. Basu had been omitted by mistake. He argued that the Court had no jurisdiction to make any order as it was clearly the scheme of the Act to oust the jurisdiction of the Court. The right of franchise was given by the Act and unless a remedy was also given by the Act, there was none for the violation of that right. Section 27 of the Act expressly excluded the jurisdiction of the Court. He further argued that under rule 4, the final Election Roll upon publication became final and conclusive for all purposes and there was no power either in the Court or in the Returning Officer to correct that Election Roll.

The following judgment was delivered by

CHAUDHURI, J.—I regret I have to refuse this application. It is conceded that the applicant is qualified as a Licentiate in Medicine and Surgery of the University of Calcutta. It is also conceded that in the preliminary list made by the Returning Officer, his name was not entered; that he protested against it and sent in an application for the inclusion of his name; and that the Returning Officer has failed to consider his application. His contention was that he was entitled to be registered under section 4, clause (d) or clause (e). The Returning Officer apparently did not think that he was qualified under clause (d) and overlooked the contention about clause (e). The Returning Officer then prepared the final Election Roll. It is also conceded that if the matter of the applicant's contention based upon clause (e), had been present before the Returning Officer's mind, the omission would not have occurred. The final Election Roll was then published in the Calcutta Gazette as provided for in the rules. It is clear that this application satisfies all the requirements of section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, clauses (a) to (d), namely, that the applicant is entitled to exercise his franchise, and that his right to exercise it would be injured, that it was clearly incumbent on the Returning Officer to consider his application, that he has failed to do so in his public character, and that it was right and just on his part to consider the application and include the applicant's name, and that the applicant has not other specific legal remedy. But the question arises as to how far the election rules applicable to this matter oust my jurisdiction, and whether the Court can exercise its power in favour of the application. It is quite clear that under section 33 of the Bengal Medical Act, the Local Government has power to make rules for the purpose of carrying out the Act. Rules have been framed with that object. The rules I have referred to, about the preparation and publication of the Election Roll, can in no sense be said to fail to carry out the purposes of the Act. It is the failure of the Returning Officer to comply with the rules which has created the difficulty. The rule says he shall consider the application and prepare the Election Roll and publish it. I was at one time under the impression that the duty of the Returning Officer was to consider the applications, and to prepare the final Election Roll and to send it to the Local Government for publication and that the Local Government eventually published the Election Roll. But the rule is clear, that the Returning Officer is the person who has to publish the Election Roll in the Calcutta Gazette in manner directed by the Local Government. The rule, however, lays down that on such publication, the Election Roll as published is to be deemed as final and conclusive. I do not see that this rule is at all ultra vires. It appears also, looking at section 27 of the Act, that it was not intended that the Law Courts were to interfere in these matters. The Election Roll on publication becomes final and conclusive. It gets its finality as soon as it is published. It does not seem open to any process of revision. If the Returning Officer considered the application and wrongly decided the matter, or even arbitrarily did so, the publication of the Election Roll made it final. I do not think it could be then revised by the Court. If an arbitrary adverse decision may not be revised, it seems hardly open to revision for failure of consideration. The Court could perhaps compel the Returning Officer to consider the application before the publication of the Election Roll, but I fear it is now too late. Having regard to the facts, I regret I am unable to help the applicant, as I should like to, in a matter of this character. In view, however, of the default on the part of the Returning Officer in considering the application, I shall make no order against the applicant for the costs of this application.

NARENDRA NATH V. STEPHENSON.

[The petitioner preferred an appeal which came on for hearing before Woodroffe and Coxe, JJ.]

Mr. Norton (with him Messrs. Chakravarti and H. D. Bose), for the Appellant, referred to the provisions of the Act. Section 33 provides the machinery, but the rules in question in this case are made under subsection 2, clause (a), which refers to the election after the Medical Council has come into existence. These rules which have been impleaded against me and which were published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 3rd June 1914, cannot have anything to do with my right to have my name entered in the list of persons qualified to be registered under the Act.

The proviso to section 6 deals with the first election. It speaks of persons qualified under the Act and the qualifications are set out in the Schedule. I am duly qualified and entitled to claim registration in the preliminary list. The effect of the construction which the lower Court has put on the rules (which say that the list when published shall be final) would be that the Local Government in framing rules will be entitled to abrogate the undoubted qualification which under the Act I have.

Under section 33 (1), the Local Government is empowered to frame rules regulating the qualification of persons to form the Electoral College for the Bengal Medical Council. This the Government has not done. They have issued rules under the section which deals with the Council after it has come into existence. The proviso to section 6 with the Schedule, makes it quite clear (and it is admitted) that I am qualified.

The rules pleaded in extenuation of their conduct do not apply. That is my first contention.

Secondly, even assuming that the rules are valid, I can ask your Lordships to correct what is evidently a mistake.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Where is it said that the rules published are final?]

It is in the rules.

The rules say that the Returning Officer shall consider objections, etc. It is imperative that the Returning Officer shall consider objections.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Rule 4 is subject to 3. They are conclusive as regards all matters which have been considered.]

Yes.

The rules framed under the Act throw on the Returning Officer an obligation to consider all objections and where that course has not been followed, the rules cannot be final.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, for the Respondent.—I may mention to your Lordships that this point that the rules have not been properly framed, was never alluded to in the Court of first instance. This is the first time that I hear this objection.

Mr. Norton.—I have given notice of this ground. My second ground is strong enough. There has admittedly been a mistake. My client is undoubtedly qualified under the Act, and I can ask your Lordships to correct it.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Is it admitted that the Returning Officer omitted to consider the objection?]

Mr. Mitter.—It is admitted that so far as regards his qualification as an L. M. S. of the Calcutta University [clause (c), section 4], there was a mistake; but as regards his qualification under clause (d), section 4, it was duly considered and the Returning Officer held against him.

Mr. Norton.—I am entitled to come here for a mandamus.

Refers to section 27 of the Medical Act, which bars proceedings in Court. If the section applies to my case, I am outside it, because it is a case of omission.

Secondly, it is not an act done by the Local Government, but an officer created by the Local Government for carrying out certain preliminary purposes. There are sections in the Act where acts contemplated to be done by the Local Government are to be found.

Sections 26 and 27 refer to statutory prohibition with regard to the acts of Government other than the preparation of the preliminary list. These sections are not intended to apply to anything anterior to the creation of the Council. Even taking the worst view, the omission complained of, is not an omission of the Local Government but of the Returning Officer.

To sum up.

If the Act gives the right, no rule framed under the Act can take it away.

The mere publication of a list without considering the objections cannot make the list final. Suppose by a mistake of the printer, pages of the list are omitted; is it to be said that there is no remedy and the imperfect list is final?

Refers to section 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

[WOODROFFE, J.—The Medical Act is a Bengal Act, can it interfere with the right of mandamus? I believe, there have been cases.]

Our case is that no Bengal Act can take away a right given by an Imperial Act. Cites Hari Pandurang v. Secretary of State for India (1).

[WOODROFFE, J. (to Mr. Mitter).—Your contention is that the right of mandamus has been taken away.]

NARENDRA NATH V. STEPHENSON.

Mr. Mitter.—The whole jurisdiction of the Courts has been taken away. There is the Act of Parliament which authorises the Local Government to repeal or amend any Act passed by the Government of India (53 and 56 Vict., Chap. 14, section 5).

[WOODROPPE, J.—Then the point would be that if this mandamus rested on any power of the High Court derived from the Charter, it could not be interfered with, but this power being derived from the Specific Relief Act passed by the Government of India, it can be taken away.]

Mr. Mitter.—Yes. That is the point. The whole Specific Relief Act can be repealed by the Local Government under the authority of the Parliamentary Statute. Refers to Empress v. Burah (2). This point was feebly suggested by my friend in the Court below and at once withdrawn.

Mr. Norton.—The inherent jurisdiction of the High Court cannot be taken away by any Legislature in India. The relief given by the habeas corpus still exists in spite of the Code of Criminal Procedure. So the relief given by a writ of mandamus still exists.

Refers to section 27.

What is the power conferred on the Local Government? It is the power conferred by section 33 to frame rules. That right they had. Some person other than the Local Government proceeds to do an act. That is not an act of the Local Government which is protected by the section.

[WOODROPPE, J.—Assuming for the sake of argument that Mr. Norton was right in his contention and could show that these rules are ultra vires, would you still contend that section 27 stands in his way?]

Mr. Mitter.—I will deal with this point.

Mr. Norton.—Your Lordships have power to ascertain whether an act done was done in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Act. If your Lordships find that it is not so, then you have power to interfere.

Under the Act, the Returning Officer has no discretion. If a man has got the qualification required by the Statute, he is bound to return him.

For the meaning of final and conclusive, see Board of Education v. Rice (3). Discretion must be exercised genuinely: Leslie Williams v. Haines Thomas Giddy (4), Stiles v. Galinski (5).

It has been said that the question whether I was qualified under the English Medical Act (1886) was considered and decided against me. Your Lordships will see that the decision was arrived at arbitrarily. I was not heard, no explanation was taken from me. I was entitled to be heard. Refers to the English Act.

Mr. Mitter.—This point was not pressed in the Court of first instance. I do not mind if your Lordships decide the point, but it is inconvenient if points not pressed in the first Court, are taken and pressed in the Appeal Court.

The objection is that the rules are bad, because published under sub-section (2), section 33, and cannot have any application to the first election under the Act.

[WOODROPPE, J.—The application is on the assumption that the rules are good.]

Yes. In that case, he must submit to his application being dismissed and then apply for an injunction restraining any election.

In a writ of mandamus, the duty must be clearly incumbent on the public officer.

The question of the validity or otherwise of the rules is hardly a matter within section 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

The present rules are copied from the rules framed by the Government of India to regulate elections to the Supreme Legislative Council, so your Lordships' decision, if you so decide, that these rules are ultra vires, would in one sense affect the Government of India rules. Your Lordships will not go into that, for in that case, the Government ought to have notice and for the matter of that, the Government of India should also be before you.

The whole scheme of the Act is that the jurisdiction of the Courts is ousted.

NARENDRA NATH V. STEPHENSON.

Sections 17, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27. These are the sections it will be necessary for me to refer to.

Under the Act, the Courts have no jurisdiction. Secondly under the rules, if they are valid rules, the Courts have no jurisdiction in respect of anything done under the rules.

If rule 16 is a valid rule, the argument on the other side at once falls to the ground.

[Mr. Chakravarti.—Assuming that the rules are valid, rules 15 and 16 do not apply to the proviso to section 6 or to rules 3 and 4, but they apply specifically to rule 6, clause (2), and rule 10, clause (4).]

There is no limitation as to the application of the rules.

The Returning Officer had no power to correct the mistake. The only course left to them was to go to the Local Government.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Could they go to the Local Government? Under what section?]

Under section 16 of the rules.

So far as the Returning Officer is concerned, section 4 is conclusive. The words "deemed to be final and conclusive" are stronger than "final and conclusive." Whether final and conclusive or not, they shall be by a fiction deemed to be final and conclusive. Cites In re Hadleigh Castle Gold Mines Ltd. (6).

Mr. Chakravarti in reply.—My friend assumes that we have been proceeding on the validity of the rules. That is not so.

My application is—put me on the list under the proviso to section 6.

The rules have been set up in defence by the other side.

Section 27 can only apply after the Council has come into existence and a Registrar has been appointed.

I do not rely on the rules, but even regard being had to rules 15 and 16, it appears that they were necessary because section 27 did not apply.

As regards appealing to the Local Government, where is the provision within the four corners of the Act of appealing to the Local Government in case there has been a violation of the proviso to section 6?

The Local Government has power to appoint any one to make up a list under the proviso to section 6 and if my name is omitted therefrom, I can come to your Lordships and pray for relief.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—It has been pointed out to us on behalf of the appellant that the rules were published under section 33 (2) (a), and it has been argued that clause (a) refers to the election after the Medical Council has come to existence, and not to the election for the purpose of bringing the Council into existence. Therefore, it has been argued that the rules were "ultra vires," although it is conceded that they would have been valid, had the notification purported to proceed under the first clause of section 33. This argument was not raised in the first Court. But if we assume without deciding that the rules were ultra vires as is contended, then the application must fail; for it is clearly based on the assumption that the rules were not ultra vires, but that they were valid rules which had not been given effect to in one particular by the Returning Officer; for, what the application asked for is an order on the Returning Officer to publish, by notification in the Calcutta Gazette as a part of the Election Roll published in the Calcutta Gazette on the 15th July 1914, the name of the applicant as a person qualified to vote and to do all acts and things necessary in that behalf. Whereas, if there were no valid rules under which the election took place, the remedy would not be mandamus, but if there were a remedy at all, it would be in the nature of an injunction staying proceedings which were challenged on the ground of their invalidity. It is quite obvious to me that when this notice of the applicant was issued on the 24th July 1914, it was not intended to dispute the validity of these rules, but to proceed upon the assumption that valid rules had not been given effect to. I need not further consider this matter, because it was not argued in the Court of first instance, and the Local Government who would be affected by any decision as to the validity of the rules which they have published are not before the Court. This argument, in my opinion, fails. I do not wish to express any opinion upon the argument itself as to whether the rules are or are not ultra vires, for it is not necessary to do so. I may note, however, that it is pointed out on behalf of the respondent that these rules in the Bengal Medical Act are in the same terms which govern the election in the Council of the Government of India. Assuming then that the rules are valid, the question is whether the applicant has made out a case. Now under rule 15, the decision of the Local Government on any question that may arise as to the intention, construction or application of these rules shall be final, and under section 27 of the Act, no suit or other legal proceedings shall lie in respect of any Act done in the exercise of any power conferred by the Act on the Local Government, or the Council or the Registrar. The act which is there referred to is not one done by the Local Government, but done in exercise of any power conferred by this Act on the Local Government. Moreover, what is referred to in the notice is not an omission, even if there is any force in the contention which distinguishes between the words "act" and "omission." It has been conceded on behalf of the applicant that the object of the Act was to oust the jurisdiction of the Court. But it has been submitted to us that this was the intention of the Act when and after the Bengal Medical Council was constituted and that the Courts were to exercise jurisdiction up to that point. I cannot myself believe that this was the intention. I need not dwell upon this part of the case, because I agree with Mr. Justice Chaudhuri who would have been, as he says, willing to have acceded to the application, if he thought that he could under the law possibly do so. I agree with him that it is not open for us to interfere. On the facts, it has been conceded that the case is a hard one, because there is no doubt that the applicant is a person who is qualified to be registered under the Act. It is admitted that he is a Licentiate in Medicine and Surgery of the University of Calcutta. The fact that he was a Licentiate in Medicine and Surgery of the University of Calcutta was not considered, with the result that his name was excluded from the list. As Mr. Justice Chaudhuri has pointed out, it was owing to inadvertence that the name of the applicant had been omitted from the list. I think, however, that there is much force in the contention that after the list had been published under rule 4, it was final and conclusive, and the Returning Officer was functus officio.

Mr. Mitter, who appeared on behalf of the respondent, pointed out to us that under rule 16, the Local Government has power to decide questions arising as to the intention, construction or application of these rules, and certainly it is a question of construction of these rules as to whether or not there can be said to be a final and conclusive publication under rule (4), so far as the applicant is concerned, seeing that there has been no consideration of his case, as I have already described, under clause (3). For, it may be reasonably contended that clause (4) is to be read as subject to clause (3), if effect is to be given to both provisions. The only remedy which appears to me to be open to the applicant is to represent his case to the Local Government. So far as we are concerned, we have no jurisdiction to interfere. The result is that this appeal must be dismissed. No costs are asked for.

COKE, J. I agree.

Second appeal from an order of the Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division, dated the 14th May 1914.

ORDER.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—I am unable to agree with the finding of the Commissioner that "specific plots held in under-proprietary tenure on which no revenue is assessed and which are not part of a mahal on which revenue is assessed, cannot be partitioned under section 138, Land Revenue Act; but that application for partition should have been made in the Civil Court."

The procedure for conducting applications for partition of under-proprietary mahals is laid down in section 138, and says that such partitions shall be carried out according to the provisions of Chapter VII, so far as they are applicable. The first section of that chapter says that "partition" means the division of a mahal or of a part of a mahal into two or more portions, and that in "imperfect partition" the several portions remain jointly responsible for the revenue assessed. I cannot, therefore, see why part of an under-proprietary mahal should not be imperfectly partitioned under this section, the under-proprietors being jointly responsible for the rent of the part partitioned.

There is no dispute in this case as to what the area or rent is of the portion for which partition is applied for, and the details of the fields affected are supplied from the khatauni on the record. The partition is also not objected to by the superior proprietor.

That such partitions among under-proprietors have hitherto been allowed in Oudh is, I think, clear from Saddiq Husain v. Mir Fida Husain (1). In his judgment in that case Mr. D. C. Baillie wrote: "Applications for partitions by co-sharers in an under-proprietary mahal are made as a matter of course, and it has never been disputed that an under-proprietor is entitled to partition as against his co-sharers in the under-proprietary title."

I would, therefore, set aside the order of the Commissioner and restore the order of the Collector sanctioning the partition. I would hold respondent liable for appellant's costs both in the Commissioner's and this Court, and order him to pay Rs. 32 as Pleader's fees in each Court.

HOLMS, S. M.—I have looked further into the question, and adhere to my finding as Commissioner quoted by my colleague. In 1874 the Commissioner of Fyzabad referred the question to Government in the Oudh Revenue Department, whether or not sir and other forms of under-proprietary tenure could be partitioned by the Revenue Courts under the then Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876. The reply was that "as section 100 (to which section 138 of the present Act of 1901 corresponds) gives a right to partition in under-proprietary mahals, i. e., sub-settled estates and these alone, section 69 section 68 and section 69 correspond to sections 106 and 107 of the present Act) cannot be construed into covering the case of other forms of under-proprietary tenure." The Board in their decision of 21st December 1905 on petition No. 3 of 1904-5 came to the same conclusion under the present Land Revenue Act. Mr. Hooper wrote: "The property of which partition is sought is an under-proprietary holding of 22 bighas 1 biswa paying a rent of Rs. 55. It is no doubt included in the area of a mahal, as are all other lands in the village in which it is situated, but that does not make it a 'part of a mahal' in the sense in which the phrase is used in section 106. The part must be of the same nature or tenure as the whole. Section 138 provides for the partition of under-proprietary mahals and of mahals held by lessees whose rent has been fixed by a Settlement Officer or other competent authority; and in this connection the words 'part of a mahal' must be read as meaning 'part of an under-proprietary mahal,' that is, if they apply at all, a point on which I give no opinion. In the present case there is no under-proprietary mahal of which the holding forms a part, and the provisions of Chapter VII of the Revenue Act do not apply."

The partitioning of subordinate rights, except in the case of sub-settled under-proprietors and persons holding under heritable non-transferable leases, who owing to their peculiar position in Oudh were treated as quasi-proprietors, is not provided for in the Act. I have ascertained that as a rule in Oudh partition of under-proprietary holdings consisting of specific plots is not entertained in the Revenue Courts, and apart from any legal difficulty there would be great administrative inconvenience if this were done. In the last year or two, hundreds of small rent-free grants have been converted into under-proprietary holdings by the operation of the law of resumption, and the imperfect partition of these among numerous owners would often result in fields so small that they could not be shown on the village map.

Apart from the question discussed in the Board's Decision of 1905 referred to above of an under-proprietary holding in specific plots not being 'a part of a mahal' under section 106, some other provisions of Chapter VII of the Land Revenue Act seem to me of importance in this connection. The application for partition must be presented by two or more of the recorded co-sharers in a mahal, and this must be accompanied by a certified copy of the annual register of proprietors prescribed by section 33. This in the case of sub-settled under-proprietors or those holding under heritable non-transferable leases would be the register prescribed by section 32 (b), in which section persons holding mahals or pattis on such tenures are termed under-proprietary co-sharers or co-lessees. The head-note of Saddiq Husain v. Mir Fida Husain (1) is worded in too general terms, and that decision should not be taken as deciding anything more than the questions which arose out of the somewhat peculiar facts of that case. It does not seem to me to support the proposition that a co-sharer in an under-proprietary holding of specific plots is a co-sharer in an under-proprietary mahal.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—I see that such great experts on Oudh Law and Custom as the late Mr. J. Woodburn and Mr. J. Hooper are opposed to my view of the law and I feel bound to defer to their views. I think that the matter should be definitely cleared up when the Revenue Act next comes under revision. The question has been the subject of repeated differences of opinion during the past 30 years.

As the case now stands, this appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20, proviso—Payment by cheque, if would save limitation—Continuous account—Cause of action.

If a cheque be delivered to a payee by way of payment and is received as such by him, it operates as a payment and is an extinguishment to that extent of the debt, subject to the condition that if upon due presentation the cheque is not paid the original debt revives. [p. 629, col. 2; p. 630, col. 1.]

Such cheque signed by a debtor and given in part-payment of the principal and received by the creditor as such would save limitation as contemplated by the proviso to section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act. [p. 630, col. 1.]

FACTS.—This appeal arose out of a suit for the recovery of a sum of money claimed to be due for the price of timber sold by the plaintiffs-respondents to the defendant-appellant, including a sum of interest. The facts which are not disputed are that between the 7th of January 1903 and the 23rd of September 1911, the plaintiffs sold to the defendant various quantities of teak wood, sal

wood, iron wood, etc., for prices agreed upon between the parties aggregating the sum of Rs. 9,997-7, and the defendant from time to time paid to the plaintiffs between the 5th April 1903 and the 27th of March 1912 various sums of money on account and in part-payment of the price of the goods so sold and in some instances returned to the plaintiffs some of the goods so sold for which he was duly credited with the price thereof, the total credits and receipts amounting to Rs. 6,289-13-6. After deduction there remained a balance of Rs. 3,707-9-6 due and owing from the defendant to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs appropriated earlier payments to certain debits in order of time, so that the earlier debits were paid and satisfied, and as to the later debits part-payments or payments on account were made in each and every year in most cases by cheques drawn and signed by the defendant or his agent duly authorised in that behalf. Such payments appeared to be in the handwriting of the defendant or his agent. The defendant was advised to submit that the claim to recover the prices of goods supplied to the defendant up to the 16th of December 1909 was barred by the law of limitation by reason of the fact that on the 12th of April 1907, there was an adjustment of account upon which a sum of Rs. 6-30 was found due and that since that date other goods were supplied under separate orders on various dates up to the 28th of September 1911. The defendant was agreeable to pay all accounts after the 24th of December 1909.

On the 16th of March 1914 the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chandhuri decreed the suit and in doing so delivered the following Judgment:—

"This is a suit for the recovery of a certain sum of money claimed to be due for the price of timber sold by the plaintiffs to the defendant, including a sum for interest. The facts of this case are not disputed, except with regard to the agreement for payment of interest. The plaintiffs annex to the plaint a statement of the goods sold and of the payments received. There is no dispute as regards them. The defendant, however, says that there was no agreement for payment of interest as alleged in the plaint, and also relies on the Statute of Limitation in respect of the price of goods sold between Asarh 1314 B. S. up to the 1st Pous 1316. This portion of the claim is said to be barred. There was undoubtedly an adjustment of accounts on the 29th Chaitra 1313 corresponding to the 12th April 1907. Payments on account, however, continued to be made by the defendant by cheques, which, I find, was the ordinary method of payment up to Chaitra 1318. I am excluding from these payments of small sums of money on the new-khata day. On the adjustment mentioned about Rs. 650 was found due by the defendant. This amount was paid in instalments beginning from the 12th April 1907 up to 1st October 1908. There are, therefore, two questions to determine, namely, (1) was there any such agreement for payment as alleged by the plaintiffs, (2) is the claim between Asarh 1314 and the 1st Pous 1316 barred by the Statute of Limitation, that is to say, do the payments by cheques operate in favour of the plaintiffs under the provisions of section 20 of the Limitation Act and keep alive his claim for the price of the goods supplied during this period? So far as the question of interest is concerned, the specific case made in the plaint is that there was an express agreement that interest would be charged after 60 days of delivery at the rate of 12 per cent. The first point one has to remember in this connection is that this was not a transaction as between traders. The defendant is a big land-holder in Calcutta and bought timber for his own houses. The evidence in support of the agreement alleged in the plaint has, however, varied. It was stated by the witnesses for the plaintiffs that it was subsequent to the earlier transaction that the matter of interest was discussed, after the adjustment of Chaitra 1313, namely, in or about the month of Bhadra or Aswin 1314. Having regard to this discrepancy, I am not prepared to hold that there was any such agreement, as alleged in the plaint. In the books of the plaintiffs no entry appears showing that interest was ever charged. Reliance has, however, been placed upon the fact that in the chalans of the plaintiffs, a printed copy of which has been put in, there is mention of the rate of interest as claimed in this plaint, the plaintiffs saying that whenever goods were sent, such chalans used to accompany the goods. The defendant has not produced any of these chalans, but I consider that even if it were held that chalans such as have been produced or similar chalans reached the hands of the defendant they are not sufficient to charge him with interest. This would be varying the express agreement to pay interest pleaded in the plaint. At no time was any account sent to the defendant mentioning the matter of interest. If the plaintiffs were entitled to interest or if they considered that they were entitled to it and if there was an express agreement for charging interest, the books would certainly have contained entries relating to it. The plaintiffs' witness also mentioned a figure in the witness-box as due for interest which was different from the figure mentioned in the plaint. He said that the figure in the plaint was wrong. It was perhaps calculated on a different basis. Taking all these circumstances together, I am unable to hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to the interest as claimed in the plaint.

"The next point is as regards the question of limitation. Payments were admittedly made by cheques as alleged by the plaintiffs, and the question for my determination is whether a person drawing a cheque in favour of his creditor, by the fact of drawing such a cheque, can be said to be making a payment the fact of which appears in his handwriting. Now so far as the word 'payment' is concerned, Lord Campbell in construing 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, section 1, held that the word 'payment' was used by the Legislature in a popular sense and cited Justice Maule's dictum in the case of Maillard v. Duke of Argyle (1): 'Payment is not a technical word; it has been imported into law proceedings from the exchange, and not from law treatises.' So far as the Contract Act is concerned, payments may be made in various ways. See section 50 of the Contract Act and the illustrations. It was held in Sukhamoni Chowdhurani v. Ishan Chunder Roy (2) that there was no particular mode or form of payment which was specified in the Limitation Act, that there were many modes in which payments might be made. In Kariyappa v. Rachappa (3), it was held that a settlement of account was a payment. The question is whether a cheque so drawn, paid and honoured can be considered a payment, and if it is a payment, does the fact of the payment appear in the handwriting of the debtor? I would not have entertained much doubt about this point, had it not been for the decision of a very eminent Judge in Madras in Mackenzie v. Tiruvengadathan (4) where it was held that a cheque was only an order for payment, that it did not evidence any payment at all, nor did it show for what purpose the payment was made. This case, I find, was considered by this Court in Mandhardhar Aitch v. Secretary of State (5), when Mr. Justice Banerjee said that he was not prepared to go quite so far as the Madras case did. So far as the payment by cheque is concerned, it has been held in a great many cases to be a payment when the cheque is honoured. In Currie v. Misa (6), it was held that a security of that character was taken as money's worth. In Irving v. Veitch (7), it was held that the date of payment by a bill drawn is the date of the delivery of the bill by the debtor, not the time of its payment. In various cases it was considered to be a conditional payment in the event of its being dishonoured. I will only refer to the case of Trney v. Dodrell (8) in this connection. I consider that a cheque drawn by a debtor in favour of his creditor specifying the amount to be paid which is in part of the claim then outstanding against him, is a payment the fact of which appears in the handwriting of the debtor and, therefore, I will allow the plaintiffs' claim to the extent of Rs. 3,707-9-6, the amount of principal with interest at 6 per cent. on decree and costs on scale No. II, 4 per cent. on the amount pending suit. Interest will cease to run on the amount paid into Court from the date of such payment."

KEDAR NATH V. DENOBANDHU SHAWA.

Against this judgment the defendant appealed.

Mr. S. R. Das (with Mr. A. Rusul), for the Appellant.—A cheque is not a payment, it is a mere order for payment: Mackenzie v. Tirurengadathan (4) and Ram Chandar v. Chandi Prasail (9). At any rate it cannot be relied upon as a part-payment within the meaning of section 20, Limitation Act, because payment by cheque is not an out-and-out payment but at most a conditional payment. The true test is whether it will support a plea of satisfaction if a suit were brought for the recovery of the amount [Maber v. Maber (10) and Mylan v. Annabi Madan (11)]. A cheque may be a good payment for certain purposes, but it is not a payment for the purposes of section 20.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Is there not a distinction between payment by way of advance as loan and payment in discharge of a debt?]

Mr. S. R. Das—None on principle.

Marreco v. Richardson (12) can be distinguished, as there the Judges were considering the meaning of payment from the point of view of limitation which prevails in England, which only requires such a part-payment as would imply a promise to pay.

The next point is that the proviso to section 20 requires a fact of payment appearing in the handwriting of the person actually making the payment. Here the person actually making the payment was the Bank, and not the defendant.

The next point is that a tradesman's account of goods supplied is not one account, but each item constitutes separate contract [Satowrie Singh v. Kristi Bangal (3)].

[JENKINS, C. J.—Do you say that the tradesmen could bring as many suits as there are items in the account?]

Mr. S. R. Das.—Yes.

Mr. M. Zorab (with him Mr. B. L. Mitter) for the Respondents.—A cheque is payment unless dishonoured: Marreco v. Richardson (12), In re Boswell, Merritt v. Boswell (14) and Felix Hadley Company v. Hadley (15). In this case the cheques were honoured; therefore, payment was made on the dates the cheques were made over and accepted. A fresh period of limitation ran from each of the said dates. The making over and acceptance of the cheques constituted the payment. The defendant made over the cheques and, therefore, he was the person making the payment, and not the Bank which paid the amounts of the cheques. The defendant's signature on the cheques satisfied the requirements of the proviso to section 20.

The payments by cheques were not appropriated by either party. They were general payments on account and reduced the balance of the account. All the unpaid items in the account were saved by such payments [Walker v. Butler (16)].

In Mackenzie v. Tirurengadathan (4), the endorsement was not proved and it was not necessary to decide whether payment by cheque was a payment. The opinion expressed was mere obiter and is erroneous.

Mr. Das, in reply, referred to Garden v. Bruce (17) and section 61, Indian Contract Act.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—The only question that arises in this appeal is whether a cheque given in part-payment of principal is sufficient to take the case out of the Indian Statute of Limitation having regard to the terms of section 20 of that Act.

The facts are not in dispute. And if the cheque is sufficient for the purpose of section 20, then this appeal must fail.

It seems to me clear that if a cheque be delivered to a payee by way of payment and is received as such by him, it operates as payment and is an extinguishment to that extent of the debt, though this is no doubt subject to a condition subsequent that if upon the presentation the cheque is not paid the original debt revives. There is no suggestion in this case that the cheque upon presentation was not paid, in fact, it was : and so there was payment in the fullest sense of the term, and thus a part of the principal of the debt has, before expiration of the prescribed period, been paid by the debtor to the creditor.

Then, it is said that the proviso to the section has not been complied with. That proviso is that in the case of a part-payment of the principal of a debt the fact of the payment must appear in the handwriting of the person making the same. If I am right in the view that the cheque actually was a payment, the very payment was in the handwriting of the person making the same. I cannot for a moment suppose that this proviso was inserted as a sort of a trap to enable debtors to escape from the result of what they have done, and yet that would be the practical result of the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant. It seems to me that the words of the Act are amply satisfied by the circumstances of this case, and I say this notwithstanding the decision in the case of Mackenzie v. Tiruvengadathan (4) which is capable of distinction from the present.

A point was made before us as to the appropriation of payment and the nature of the plaintiffs' claim. This has not been made a ground of appeal. But even if it had been, it seems to me that it is valueless. It rests upon the supposition that where, as here, there is a continuous account, there is a separate cause of action in respect of each item. That seems to me to be quite opposed to the proper character of such accounts. In Bonsey v. Wordsworth (18), it is said on the strength of the previous authorities that "where a tradesman has a bill against a party for any amount, in which the items are so connected together that it appears that the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous, so that one item, if not paid, shall be united with another, and form one continuous demand, the whole together forms but one cause of action and cannot be divided."

In my opinion the learned Judge was right in the conclusion at which he arrived. This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Tenancies created by a mortgagee in possession are binding on the mortgagor even after the redemption of the mortgage in so far that the relationship of landlord and tenant continues. [p. 631, col. 2.]

A person, therefore, who is in possession as a tenant from year to year under a mortgagee and who continued in possession after the mortgage is redeemed by the owner, should be deemed to be a tenant from year to year under the owner thereafter instead of under the mortgagee. [p. 631, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendants are the appellants. The plaintiff is the jenmi of the plaint lands. Anganna Mudali became the lessee in 1882 under Exhibit C from the jeemi's mortgagee, Chinnasawmy Pillai. The jeemi redeemed the mortgage in 1893 (see Exhibit G executed by Chinnasawmy Pillai), the mortgagee having continued in possession even after the redemption of the jeemi title by the jeemi in 1893. The defendants set up title by adverse possession from 1893. The question, therefore, is whether persons who were in possession as tenants from year to year under a mortgagee and who continued in possession after the mortgage was redeemed by the owner should be deemed to have been in adverse possession from the date of the redemption by the owner, or should be deemed to be tenants from year to year under the owner thereafter instead of under the mortgagee. In Seshamma Shettati v. Chickaya Hegade (1), the following passages occur at page 512:

"In the present case, on the footing that the defendants were let into possession by the mortgagee, whether as tenants from year to year or professedly as tenants with a permanent right of occupancy, the tenancy between them and the mortgagee would have continued until the redemption of the mortgage in 1894, and such possession cannot be adverse either to the mortgagee or much less to the mortgagor, and the plaintiff's cause of action would have accrued and the period of limitation commenced to run only in 1894, if such tenancy ceases by the mere fact of redemption, or subsequent thereto, when the term of notice to quit had expired, if the right view should be that a lease given by the mortgagee, as being incidental to the managements of the mortgaged property, is binding upon the mortgagor—at any rate, as a lease from year to year, until he determines the same." Though the alternative view put forward in the italicised portion is not stated definitely to be the right view, the inclination of the learned Judges seems to tend in that direction. Section 76 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act also says that a mortgagee in possession must manage the property as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own, and the granting of puttoms by an usufructuary mortgagee is not contended to be imprudent management in Malabar. In

Collector of Basti v. Sarnam Gharak (2), Piggott, J., says at page 506: "I do not see how it can be held that the defendant in the present case became a trespasser liable to ejectment... from the date of redemption of Mr. Churcher's mortgage, unless the Court is prepared to hold that the same would be the case with any tenant of agricultural land to whom a usufructuary mortgagee had granted a lease during the period of his mortgage. In my opinion the correct view is that tenancies thus created by a mortgagee in possession are binding on the mortgagor after redemption of the mortgage, in so far that the relationship of landlord and tenant continues, and that if the mortgagor desires to bring the tenancy to a close, he must do so by a regular suit under the Tenancy Act."

In the decree passed in a redemption suit (see section 92, Transfer of Property Act) the mortgagee is directed to deliver up to the mortgagor on redemption all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property. In the present case, it appears from Exhibit G itself that the mortgagee assured the mortgagor that all his (the mortgagee's) rights in the mortgaged property had been extinguished and that thereafter the mortgagor (owner) was to obtain rents from the tenants who had been let into the lands by the mortgagee. Thus under the terms of Exhibit G itself the right of the mortgagee as the defendants' lessor became transferred to the jeemi.

The lower Courts having found that the jeemi (plaintiff's predecessor-in-title) had no notice of the defendants' setting up of adverse possession within 12 years before suit, the suit is not barred by limitation, even if it is held that a tenant by setting up adverse possession to the knowledge of the landlord can prescribe for an adverse title from the date when the landlord gets such a definite notice.

The decrees of the lower Courts are, therefore, confirmed and this second appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I agree.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 2111 OF 1913.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 15th July 1913, dismissing the claim.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the late Mr. Pestonji Dudabhoy, and Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Broadway and Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an action brought by the appellant, Barkat Ram, against the respondent, Anant Ram, for the dissolution of partnership and the rendition of accounts. The learned District Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that the contract relied upon by the plaintiff is void for uncertainty, and the main question for determination in this appeal is whether that finding should or should not be upheld.

The document evidencing the contract is set out at pages 2 and 3 of the printed paper-book and it is unnecessary to encumber this judgment with a lengthy quotation from it. The deed was executed by Anant Ram in favour of Barkat Ram and though there is no counterpart by the latter in favour of the former, it appears that Barkat Ram by accepting the document impliedly agreed to its terms. Now assuming that it created between the parties the relationship of partners, the question arises whether the terms of the partnership can be ascertained with reasonable certainty. The answer to this question depends upon the construction to be placed upon two clauses relating to profits and losses respectively.

The stipulation in regard to profits, which is contained in the earlier part of the deed, runs as follows:—

"I am only entitled to a part of the profits for my services, that is, I shall accept such amount or part of the profits which the Lala Sahib (i. e., Barkat Ram) will allow me."

This is obviously an uncertain term, and in view of the principle, which finds expression in the maxim certum est quid certum reddi potest, we have carefully examined the terms of the document and are unable to find therein anything which would help us in determining the share of the profits which was agreed to be given to the defendant. The learned Pleader for the appellant wants to get over the difficulty by referring us to the vague statement of the witness Amar Nath, but it seems to us clear that when the terms of a document are ambiguous on the face of it, parole evidence is inadmissible to prove the intention of the executant (vide, section 93 of the Indian Evidence Act).

We are unable to accept the contention urged by Mr. Moti Sagar that a covenant giving one party the right of specifying the share of profits to be assigned to the other is not open to the objection of uncertainty. It is beyond dispute that the plaintiff has not up to this time exercised his option in accordance with the agreement, and it cannot, therefore, be contended that the term of the contract, which was uncertain in itself, has been rendered certain.

BARKAT RAM V. ANANT RAM.

But the insurmountable obstacle in the way of the plaintiff is created by the covenant relating to losses. Here the difficulty is increased rather than decreased, and our observations in regard to the covenant dealing with profits apply with greater force in this connection. The stipulation in regard to the share of losses is contained in the penultimate sentence of the document and is to the following effect:

"If, in any work, any loss is incurred, I shall be liable therefor at the most to the extent of 4 annas" in the rupee. Now we entertain not the slightest doubt that this provision, which stands by itself and is not, therefore, liable to be controlled by the agreement as to profits, cannot give the Court the slightest indication as to the proportion of losses which the defendant was to bear in the partnership. It is observable that the clause does not even confer upon the plaintiff the right of specifying the share of losses and it is, therefore, impossible to determine this vital term of the contract.

Our conclusion is confirmed by the principle of the judgment in Ramasami v. Rajagopala (1), which lays down that an agreement in a patta to pay whatever rent the landlord may impose, is bad for uncertainty. The decisions in Sree Sankarachari Swamior v. Varada Pillai (2) and New Beerbhoom Coal Company v. Bularam Mahata (3) deal with cases in which the terms of the contract were capable of being made certain, and they have, therefore, no bearing upon the point in controversy in this appeal.

The doctrine of law, which makes vague contracts incapable of enforcement and which finds expression in section 29 of the Indian Contract Act, rests upon practical common sense. It is obviously impossible for a Court of Justice to give effect to a contract, the meaning of which it is unable to find out with reasonable clearness. The principle is firmly established that a Court cannot undertake to supply defects or ambiguities according to its own notions of what is reasonable; for this would be not to enforce a contract made by the parties but to make a new contract for them. As observed by Lord Justice Fry in Davies v. Davies (4), "it is the function of the Courts of Law to interpret contracts to say whether a contract is or is not reasonable, to say whether it is or is not void, but that it is not the duty of the Courts to make contracts between parties."

It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff that if the case on partnership fails, he is, in any case, entitled to the rendition of accounts from the defendant and it is argued that the defendant stood to the plaintiff in the relation of agent to his principal. This contention we are unable to accept. The document P-1, discussed above, shows that a partnership was apparently contemplated, but the terms thereof cannot be ascertained. We do not think that the defendant ever became the agent of the plaintiff, and the alternative relief on the ground of agency was, in our opinion, rightly refused by the District Judge.

Finally, Mr. Moti Sagar argues that the defendant, having received benefit under a void contract, should be ordered to restore it to the plaintiff. The provisions of section 65 of the Contract Act undoubtedly empower the Court to direct restitutio in integrum, but it is plain that in the present case, it cannot be done without amending the plaint and directing the trial of the suit de novo. The plaintiff in the Court below did not claim any relief upon that ground and even the memorandum of appeal to this Court does not contain a prayer to that effect. We cannot, therefore, consider a point which is raised for the first time in this Court at the time of the hearing. The plaintiff may, if so advised, institute a suit to enforce his rights under section 65, but we cannot obviously pronounce an opinion upon the merits of that claim.

The result is that we affirm the decree of the District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs. The cross-objections by the respondent against the order of the lower Court directing the parties to bear their own costs, have not been argued before us and we see no valid reason to interfere with that order. We, therefore, reject the cross-objections.

Appeal and cross-objections both rejected.

NARPAT RAI v. DEVI DAS.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1434 OF 1912.

April 28, 1915.

Present:—Sir Donald Johnstone, Kt., Chief Judge and Mr. Justice LeRoussignol.

NARPAT RAI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versusDEVI DAS AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Joint family—Son, vested right of—Partition—Burden of proof.

According to the Law of the Mitakshara where a son is born to a man governed by Hindu Law, he and that son at once form a joint undivided Hindu family, and anybody later on asserting that they were not at any given time such a family, must prove disruption before that time. (p. 635, col. 1.)

Tulsi Ram v. Shib Das, 19 Ind. Cas. 11; 228 P. L. R. 1913; 5 P. R. 1913, explained.

First appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 16th July 1912, decreeing possession of 1/6th of the house.

Mr. Nanak Chand and Lala Hukam Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kirkpatrick and Nihal Chand and Bhagat Govind Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a father sued his five sons for possession of a house and for Rs. 250 on account of profits of, which he had been wrongfully deprived through their unauthorised trespass. This house was purchased on 20th December 1904 from Bahadur Ali Shah (see Exhibit P1) for Rs. 1,100, and the deed is in favour of plaintiff alone. In the rokar bahi of that date Rs. 1,100 is debited to plaintiff—see Exhibit P4—and again in Exhibit P3, which is a sort of ledger account of plaintiff's, the transaction is again shown as one affecting plaintiff. Then on 20th March 1907, one Malak Shah executed in favour of plaintiff alone—Exhibit P2—a lease of the house. In August 1908, when plaintiff called upon Malak Shah to vacate, defendants took forcible possession. This is in brief plaintiff's case.

Defendants (except No. 5, who took sides with his father) pleaded Order II, rule 2, and section 11, Civil Procedure Code, in connection with certain earlier litigation. On the merits they contended that the purchase was made in the name of plaintiff merely for convenience, he being the head of the family, and similarly he leased it out and so forth; that the purchase was made out of joint family funds; that they (defendants Nos. 1 to 4), when the house fell down, re-built it at their own expense after the family separated (January 1905), that at most plaintiff was entitled to 1/6th of the site and not at all to the house or the mesne profits.

In the end the lower Court found against defendants on their technical pleas. It then went on to hold that the house was bought with joint family money; that the value of the old malba utilised by defendants was some Rs. 40; that defendants spent Rs. 4,087 in all on the new building and that the fair solution of the dispute was to let plaintiff have joint possession with defendants of house and site to the extent of 1/6th share on condition of his paying 1/6th of Rs. 4,087, minus Rs. 40, i.e., Rs. 674-8, to defendants Nos. 1 to 4; and he directed the parties to bear their own costs.

Mr. Kirkpatrick for defendants-respondents has not revived the technical pleas under the Civil Procedure Code referred to above, but has been content to meet plaintiff-appellant on his own ground and to contend that the property in suit is at the worst joint property of all the parties. His clients merely wish that the decree of the lower Court should stand.

The memorandum of appeal is very long and contains some irrelevant matter and some contentions which Mr. Nanak Chand has not seen fit to touch upon; but Mr. Nanak Chand's contentions in actual argument before us, can be reduced to a very small compass and may fairly be stated thus:—

(i) admittedly none of the property came down to plaintiff from an ancestor.

(ii) It was all acquired by plaintiff.

(iii) No doubt when this house was acquired, the defendants were adult and were still living in commensality with plaintiff—it being admitted that disruption of the family took place in January or February 1905; but according to correct views of Hindu Law for the Panjab, a man's sons have no title to share with their father in aught but "ancestral" property.

(iv) Though there was some joint property up to January-February 1905, the family was not in December 1904, a true joint undivided Hindu family.

HARBHAGAT v. KALA.

(v) Indications on the record—see facts and incidents stated in the latter part of the first paragraph of this judgment—point to this that as a matter of fact this house was bought by plaintiff for himself out of separate funds, and not for the family or out of family funds.

To take up (v) first, the lower Court has disposed of part of the argument in discussing Exhibit P3, see page 113 of paper-book, lines 9—13. No doubt, the item on the debit side of Rs. 1,100, price of house, and the heading of the account are pro tanto in favour of plaintiff's contention, but it must never be forgotten in such cases as this, who was the head and manager of the family and what the common practice is in such cases; and further, scrutiny of the items Rs. 125, Rs. 168-2-10 and Rs. 119-6-7 on the credit side destroys the allegations that this is really plaintiff's private account. In the previous case the arbitrators found the Rs. 125 item to be joint family property—cf. page 38, paragraph 20, serial Nos. 5 and 6, and page 57, 2nd item; and the other two items Rs. 168-2-10 and Rs. 119-6-7 are shown in a manner that indicates that the practice was to give the names of members of the family immediately concerned with each particular piece of business. Similar arguments suffice to dispose of Exhibits P2 and P4.

Turning to (iv) we are inclined to dissent. It requires no reference to authority to lay it down that according to the Law of the Mitakshara, when a son is born to a man governed by Hindu Law, he and that son at once form a joint undivided Hindu family, and anybody later on asserting that they were not at any given time such a family, must prove disruption before that time. In the previous litigation, it was definitely held that this family was joint until early in 1905, and, whether that matter is now res judicata or not, we can find on the present record no proof of any earlier disruption. Mr. Nanak Chand, however, argues that Tulsi Ram v. Shib Das (1) is authority for the proposition that this branch of Mitakshara Law does not hold good in the Punjab, and that here a son of a Hindu as such has no indefeasible rights in his father's estate; but we cannot help thinking that that ruling has been misunderstood. It merely lays down that among Punjabi Hindus a son cannot compel his father to partition, and it quotes Jowahir v. Musammam Chandi (2) (Stogdon and Bullock, JJ.). Neither of those learned Judges supports Mr. Nanak Chand's contention. Thus Stogdon, J., says: "A son is born with a share," and the ambiguity arises from the peculiar wording of a long "note" by Plowden, J.—page 311 of the volume—in which, after stating the restrictions among Brahmins of a male proprietor's powers of alienation, the learned Judge went on to say—"In the Punjab, at least generally, the Mitakshara doctrine of a son being born with a share is not known, nor has a son a right to compel partition." It is clear to us that a mere ex parte note of this kind by a Judge, however eminent, not followed by the Bench dealing with the case as a whole, cannot be taken as an authority. Mr. Nanak Chand also refers us to Jagan Nath v. Tulsi Das (3), which, however, seems to us beside the mark.

We, therefore, overrule contention (iii) and this really disposes of the whole case, but in conclusion we may note that, even if the family was not, in the strict sense, a joint undivided Hindu family in December 1904, at least it was a family joint in food and business generally and that the presumption even so is in favour of joint acquisition of this house.

The defendant's case, therefore, abundantly succeeds, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 20th May 1913, decreeing the claim.

Messrs. Beni Parshad Khosla and Roshan Lal, for the Appellants.

Dr. Mohammad Iqbal and Lala Har Gopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 30th of August 1912 Lachhmi Narain sold the land in dispute, 72½ bighas 10 biswas pukhta, by registered deed of sale to defendants Nos. 2 to 7 and to the father of defendants Nos. 8 to 10 for a sum of Rs. 14,500 as entered in the deed. Kala, a biswadar in the village in which the land was situate, sued for pre-emption and was given a decree conditional on payment of Rs. 8,000. The defendants-vendees have appealed to this Court. Only three points have been argued before me by Counsel.

The first point argued was whether defendants Nos. 2 to 7, who are biswadars in the village, lost their right of pre-emption by joining with themselves in the purchase the father of defendants Nos. 8 to 10, who is only a tenant with a right of occupancy. In the deed of sale the shares of the vendees are specified, but it is not stated what proportion of the price has been paid by each of them. In Maghi v. Narain (1), it was held that where the purchase-money for a sale is paid in a lump sum without specification of the amounts paid by the various vendees, the transaction must be regarded as indivisible, though the shares to be taken by the various vendees may have been specified in the deed. I agree with the lower Court that in accordance with this ruling it must be held that the defendants Nos. 2 to 7 by joining with themselves the father of defendants Nos. 8 to 10 whose right was inferior to that of the plaintiff and themselves, have lost any right of pre-emption which they had. Maghi v. Narain (1) is exactly on all fours with the present case. Counsel for the appellants has referred me to Dulla v. Hari Kishen Das (2), but the facts of that case are clearly distinguishable, and were distinguished by the learned Judges, from those in Maghi v. Narain ().

The next point urged is that the plaintiff Kala by selling the land subsequent to the decree to Yakin-ud-Din has lost his right of pre-emption. I am unable to accede to this proposition. As laid down in Mahmud Bakhsh v. Hassan Bakhsh (3), "a man who has a right to pre-empt has merely to produce the money just as any other purchaser; he can no more be asked 'what are you going to do with the land,' or 'where did you raise the money,' than any purchaser in a shop could be asked such questions by the shop-keeper. The pre-emptor has nothing to do but to prove his right to take over the bargain and when he has proved this right all that he has left to do is, to produce the money within the time fixed by the Court." I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff Kala has not lost his right of pre-emption merely by the fact that subsequent to the decree he sold the land to Yakin-ud-Din. The present appellants, if so advised, could have brought a suit against the latter for pre-emption. I am informed that other persons have already done this and that the suit was compromised.

The third point argued is that of price. The first question in regard to this is whether the sum of Rs. 14,500 entered in the deed of sale was actually paid.

CHUAH HOOI GNOH NEOH v. KHAW SIM BEE.

Out of this two items of Rs. 1,001 and Rs. 2,354 respectively are said to have been paid on two different occasions prior to the execution of the deed of sale. The exact dates on which the payments were made have not been disclosed and there is no documentary proof in support of either of them. One witness only has deposed to the payments. I agree with the lower Court that his evidence is quite insufficient to prove the payments. The item of Rs. 1,001 is said to have been paid some two months prior to the sale. It cannot be believed that such a large sum would have been paid without taking a receipt or getting a bond executed. A third item, namely, one of Rs. 145, which is said to have been advanced for the purchase of stamp on which the deed was written, may very well have been so advanced. The balance of Rs. 11,000 was paid before the Sub-Registrar. It is alleged that Rs. 3,000 out of this was returned when the parties to the sale came out of the Sub-Registrar's Office. One witness Phooa has been called by the plaintiff in support of this allegation. He states that the bargain of sale was made through his agency for Rs. 8,000. Evidence of this sort is very easy to give, and though it does not appear that the witness is interested in the plaintiff, it is doubtful whether much reliance should be placed upon him. It is, however, proved that the price entered in the deed of sale was not fixed in good faith and it was, therefore, necessary for the Court to consider the market value of the land. This it has done and it has come to the conclusion that it does not exceed the sum of Rs. 8,000 which is admitted to have been paid. The patwari gave a list of 13 sales which the lower Court has examined in detail. Certain sales it has excluded from its consideration for various reasons, and I am not prepared to say that it has excluded them without sufficient reason. I am inclined to agree with the lower Court that the market value as evidenced by these sales certainly does not exceed Rs. 8,000. The patwari's evidence shows that out of 723 bighas 10 biswas sold 06 bighas 6 biswas preeti are in the possession of occupancy tenants whose rent is equivalent to the land revenue. The proprietor practically gets nothing out of this portion of the land. The land revenue assessed on the land is less than annas 3 per bigha, which shows that it must be of very inferior quality. The price of Rs. 8,000 is more than 80 times the land revenue assessed on the land.

Counsel for the appellants asks that if I am not disposed to fix Rs. 11,000 as the price to be paid, I will order a further inquiry into the market value. It is, however, not suggested that there have been numerous sales in this village which would assist in arriving at a conclusion as to the real value. The patwari was examined in Court and gave a list of 13 sales. He was not asked whether there had been any other sales in recent years in this village. Under the circumstances I do not consider that a sufficient case has been made out for a remand.

I have considered all the evidence produced and am of opinion that the market value does not exceed the sum fixed by the lower Court. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Respondents' costs will be borne by the appellants.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from a decision of the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements.

JUDGMENT.

SIR ARTHUR CHANNELL.—This is an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal of the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements, dated 21st August 1911, whereby it was ordered that an action brought by the appellant in the Supreme Court should be dismissed with costs. This order in substance, although on different grounds, affirmed the judgment of Mr. Justice Thornton before whom the cause had been tried so far as that judgment related to the matters in dispute in the Court of Appeal and here, one matter dealt with in the judgment below having been disposed of by a cross-appeal allowed by consent.

¶ The action was brought by the appellant, a married woman, for the administration of the estate of one Khaw Soo Chang, her great grandfather (hereinafter called the testator), who had died possessed of considerable property at Penang in the Straits Settlements and also at Renong in the kingdom of Siam. By his Will he directed that his business should be carried on for 16 years after his death (which took place on the 25th May 1882) and that there should then be a distribution, and he gave to one of his sons Khaw Sim Chuan, the grandfather of the appellant, five-sixtieths of the residue. The Will contained a clause to the effect that if any son should die in the testator's life-time or before the period of distribution, such son's share was to go to his issue. The appellant's grandfather did so die, and she claims through him five-sixtieths of the residue. The Will is in several respects far from clear, and amongst other things the translation of the clause under which the appellant claims her grandfather's share was in doubt. Proceedings in Court were taken by originating summons before the present action, which resulted in a decision in the appellant's favour on the construction of this clause, and it is not now disputed that she did become entitled to the five-sixtieths of the residuary estate. This makes it unnecessary to consider further the family pedigree.

The estate of the testator was not wound up at the end of 16 years, and so far as appears, the estate at Renong has not been wound up yet, but the Penang property was in fact distributed in 1904.

The appellant, who had been married to her present husband in December 1901, executed on the 15th January 1904 a power-of-attorney whereby amongst other things she authorised her husband to represent her in all matters connected with the estate of the testator and to execute deeds in her name. Her husband to some extent at any rate investigated the accounts, and ultimately on the 18th May 1904 executed a release to the executors. The estate had been divided into portions, and it had been arranged that the beneficiaries should draw lots for the order of choice of the portions.

The appellant was fortunate enough to get first choice, and she, or her husband for her, chose a lot including a valuable hotel which she afterwards sold for considerably more than it had been valued at in the apportionment. No complaint was made by or on behalf of the appellant as to this distribution until the 1st September 1910 (after the sale of the hotel), but the appellant had on the 25th April 1908 commenced the present action for administration of the testator's estate. She, however, then complained only of the Renong estate not having been distributed, and in her first statement of claim she alleged that the executors had duly distributed the Penang property and that a release had been executed.

On the 1st September 1910 she delivered an amended statement of claim alleging for the first time that she was under 21 years of age at the time of the execution by her of the power-of-attorney, and that by reason of her infancy she was not bound by it, or by the release executed on her behalf under it. She and her husband alleged that although they knew her age, they had only just discovered the legal effect of it, as there was a Chinese custom to treat a married woman who had borne a child, as the appellant had, as being of full legal capacity whatever her actual age. They also alleged that the husband had been induced to execute the release by misrepresentations made to him by one of the executors, and that there had been wilful misconduct and breaches of trust in the administration.

These allegations were denied by the respondents, and the case went to trial before Thornton, J. The trial lasted nine days, and there was a large body of evidence, the effect of which, so far as now material, can be stated quite shortly. On the question of infancy the principal witness was the appellant's grandmother, who stated that the appellant was born on the 19th December 1885. She was present at the birth, and gave as the reason for remembering the date that it was her first and only grandchild. She seemed not very accurate in her estimates of the periods which elapsed between various events of which she spoke. In particular she spoke of one period as "several months," when if all her other statements of periods and the date of her grandchild's birth were correct, the period described as several months must have been about four years. Two so-called birth-day books were produced, each of which contained an entry of the appellant's birth at the date spoken to by the witness. The evidence showed a practice to make entries of dates of births in books more or less of this character, in order to obtain the opinion of astrologers as to good or ill fortune, but one at least of the two books was of a somewhat suspicious character, and neither seems of very great weight.

The appellant's husband also gave evidence as to his wife's age, which obviously was in the nature of hearsay, and there was produced, and received in evidence, subject to an objection to its admission, which does not appear to have been afterwards argued or dealt with, an affidavit by the husband sworn on the 16th August 1902, in which he stated that his wife, the appellant, was then a minor of the age of 17 years only, which of course corresponded with the date spoken to of her birth.

There was no evidence on the other side on this point of date of the appellant's birth, and on this Thornton, J., found that the appellant had proved that she was an infant in 1904. He found on the evidence before him that the alleged misrepresentation was not proved, and he held that notwithstanding her infancy, no ground was shown for disturbing the distribution of the Penang property which had been made in 1904. He, however, made an order as to the Renong property. The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal, and the respondents gave notice of a cross-appeal as to the Renong property, on the ground that the property was out of the jurisdiction of the Court and also on the merits, and the appellant consented to the cross-appeal being allowed.

The Court of Appeal differed from the finding of Thornton, J., as to the infancy, holding that it was not satisfactorily proved. There is no contemporaneous note of the reasons for the judgment of the Court of Appeal, but there is a note made by one of the Judges from his recollection about a year after the judgment was delivered. The Judges seems to have considered that the judgment below was open to review on the question of fact on the ground, first, of wrong admission of evidence, and, secondly, because the learned Judge stated his conclusion without giving reasons in detail.

The Board have a difficulty in holding these grounds to be sufficient for setting aside the finding of the Judge who had heard the witnesses. There does not seem to have been any evidence wrongly received. The objections go rather to the weight of the evidence than to its admissibility, and the learned Judge had expressly stated that he relied little on the documents in question. The Straits Settlements Ordinance No. 3 of 1893 is identical, so far at any rate as the sections material in the present case are concerned, with the Indian Evidence Act, and under it the birth-day books, if the parol evidence concerning them was accepted, appear clearly admissible.

The parol evidence of the appellant's husband was also admissible under that Code. The affidavit could not have been admissible as a material document if the deponent had not been called or if his parol evidence had not been admissible, but as he was called and his statement as to his wife's age was admissible for what it was worth (which of course was very little), he could not have been prevented from saying that he had sworn to the same date before the question now in issue arose, and that of course was the materiality of the affidavit. The Board have not heard Counsel for the respondents on the question of the admissibility of evidence or on the proof of infancy generally, but if it had not been for the view they entertain on the remaining questions, they must have done so, as they are not satisfied that the Court of Appeal was right in the reasons given for dismissing the appeal to them.

Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that, assuming the fact of infancy to be proved, the appellant failed to show sufficient ground for re-opening the settlement of the Penang property, and in substance they agree with the judgment of Thornton, J., on this point, which was not gone into in the Court of Appeal. There can of course be no ratification by the infant after coming of age of the invalid power-of-attorney, but the infant may have, and in their Lordships' opinion has, after coming of age, adopted the division of the property which was in fact made, and made by independent arbitrators. She had valuable property allotted to her under it, which she sold at a profit some time after she came of age, and it was only when the greater part of what she had received had been dissipated that she complained. She has been acting throughout with her husband and has not complained of his acts, and as pointed out by Thornton, J., if the infancy had been known, the husband would no doubt have been appointed guardian of his wife instead of attorney, and as guardian would have acted exactly as he did as attorney.

It is impossible now for the appellant to restore the property she has received, and a general re-distribution of the property divided could not possibly be ordered. In fact the appellant's Counsel did not argue strongly for a general administration, but pressed this Board to make an order that the executors should account for profits they had made by carrying on the testator's business under the name of a Company, or that they should be charged with some sum which in fact they had never received, for the good-will of the business taken over by the Company. Taking the translation which is on the record of the Will of the testator, a doubt arises as to whether the strict carrying out of the testator's directions in the 4th clause to "stop" the Penang business, and specifically divide the assets, would not destroy any good will, but it would not be right to decide against the appellant's contention on that ground, without some inquiry as to the exact effect of the Chinese words used. The answer to the appellant's contention is that the transaction under which the Company was formed, without making any specific payment for good-will, was not concealed in any way, and was part of the settlement by which the appellant must be held bound. It does not appear how the good-will of the hotel which the appellant took was dealt with, but it is stated that the valuation of the hotel was a low one, and there is nothing to show that the distribution as a whole was an unfair one.

It appears to their Lordships that there is no more ground for re-opening the part of the arrangement now complained of than there is for re-opening the settlement generally.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

ORIGINAL REVISION PETITION No. 1849 OF 1914.

LEHNA SINGH—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195, sub-sections (1) (c) and (2)—Offence committed in course of proceedings before Revenue Officer—Sanction, whether necessary—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 465, 468, 471.

Where the offence of forgery was committed in the course of mutation proceedings held by a Naib Tahsildar in his administrative capacity of a "Revenue Officer."

Held, that the proceedings were not those of a "Revenue Court" within the meaning of section 195 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code and that the previous sanction of the Naib Tahsildar was not essential to the institution of criminal proceedings under sections 465, 468 and 471, Indian Penal Code. [p. 641, col. 2.]

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, with his No. 561-J. of 1914.

FACTS.—In some mutation proceedings there was a dispute as to certain entries in a bahi, which were to prove whether the land had been redeemed or not. The present accused, Lehna, was referred to a Civil Court by the Revenue Officer where the matter could be threshed out. But before he started his civil suit, the other party Rahmat Ali lodged a criminal case under section 465, Indian Penal Code. This was heard and a charge framed under section 465, Indian Penal Code.

The accused was charged by Shahzada Sultan Asad Jan exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the first Class in the Ferozepore District, and was sentenced, by order, dated 10th August 1914, under sections 465, 468-471 of the Indian Penal Code. The accused is on bail.

GROUND.—An application for revision has now been presented. It is no doubt unusual to interfere at such a stage, but it seems clear that sanction should have been granted by the Revenue Officer before whom the document was produced under section 195, Indian Penal Code. And it is also undesirable that when parties have been expressly referred to a civil suit one of them should try and get an advantage by starting a criminal suit of this description. I, therefore, send the case to the Chief Court with the recommendation that the criminal proceedings so far as they have gone, be set aside.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sham Lal, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The mutation proceedings, dated the 22nd April 1913, in the course of which the petitioner Lehna Singh produced his bahi which contains the entry that is alleged to have been forged, were held by the Naib Tahsildar in his administrative capacity of a "Revenue Officer", and not in his judicial capacity as a "Revenue Court;" and, therefore, under section 195, sub-section (1) (c), read with section 195, sub-section (2), the previous sanction of the Naib Tahsildar was not essential to the institution of criminal proceedings against the petitioner under sections 465, 468 and 471, Indian Penal Code.

Section 4, clause (14) of the Punjab Tenancy Act draws a distinction between a "Revenue Officer" and a "Revenue Court," and the distinction is clearly observed in the provisions of the Act that follow; and in section 3, clause (12), of the Punjab Land Revenue Act the expression "Revenue Officer," as used in any provision of the Act, is defined as meaning "a Revenue Officer having authority under the Act to discharge the functions of the Revenue Officer under that provision." The Naib Tahsildar before whom the bahi was produced on the 22nd April 1913, was acting under the provisions of sections 34 and 36 of the Land Revenue Act and his proceedings were those of a "Revenue Officer" and not of a "Revenue Court" within the meaning of section 195 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The ruling in Queen-Empress v. Munda Shetti (1) on which the petitioner's Counsel has relied, had reference to the provisions of the Madras Act III of 1869 and cannot help us in the decision of the question whether in this province, a Naib Tahsildar acting in the exercise of his powers under Chapter IV of the Punjab Land Revenue Act is a Revenue Officer or a Revenue Court.

In this case, we have to look to the provisions of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, and according to that Act, the Naib Tahsildar,

(1) 24 M. 121; 2 Weir 170.

In re RANGASAMI PADAYACHI.

in the circumstances stated above, was dealing with the matter before him in his capacity as a Revenue Officer only and not as a Revenue Court.

I, therefore, hold that the previous sanction of the Naib Tahsildar concerned, was not a condition precedent to the institution of the criminal prosecution against the petitioner, and I decline to interfere.

Revision rejected.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, Messrs. V. L. Ethiraj and T. Muthiah Pillai, for the Petitioners.

Mr. O. Sidney Smith, for the Government.

ORDER.—The way in which Rao Sahib Raja Chariar, the first Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate, has disposed of this case is hardly satisfactory. The accused were charged with offences under sections 148, 426, 506 and 326 of the Indian Penal Code. The 3rd accused is 18 years old, and 5th accused is 16 years, 6th and 7th accused 14 years and 8th accused 20. They are ignorant coolies. The Magistrate framed charges under the above sections on the 27th April 1915 in camp at Tranquebar and immediately asked the accused to cross examine the prosecution witnesses. They expressed inability to do so as their Vakil was not there and wanted time. The Magistrate insisted on their going on and there was no cross-examination. Only prosecution 3rd witness was asked a few questions by 2nd accused. On the 29th April 1915, their Pleader put in a petition to be allowed to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. The Magistrate deferred passing orders for one month and on the 29th May, he passed the following order: "I do not think it necessary to call these witnesses again as they have been cross-examined already." He does not state that the application was vexatious or for the purpose of causing delay, and it is impossible to see how he can with any sense of fairness, have refused the application on the ground that the witnesses had been cross-examined already. The charges were complicated and it is difficult to see how the accused could have cross-examined the witnesses with any effect. The whole procedure adopted by the Magistrate is, in my opinion, not only harsh but against the spirit of the provisions of sections 256 and 257 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which give the accused an undoubted right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after a charge is framed.

Where charges framed are complicated and the accused are ignorant persons, a reasonable time should be given to the accused to get proper legal advice and assistance before they are called upon to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. As observed in Arumugam Pillai v. Emperor (1), it is not giving an accused person reasonable opportunity to ask him immediately after the charge is framed, to cross-examine witnesses and a reasonable time should be granted to enable the accused to engage a Pleader. The conviction in that case was set aside.

I think the accused were seriously prejudiced by the way in which the Deputy Magistrate acted. The Sessions Judge set aside the conviction on the charges under section 506, in respect of all the accused except 3rd accused and under section 326 in respect of accused Nos. 3 to 8 and converted the conviction under section 148 into one of section 147. If the Vakil for the accused had cross-examined the prosecution witnesses, it may well be that circumstances would have been brought to light which would have resulted in their acquittal.

I set aside the conviction and sentence. So far as the accused except 2nd accused are concerned, the learned Public Prosecutor does not press for a re-trial and I think he is perfectly right. I do not think it necessary to order their re-trial.

The 2nd accused will be tried for an offence under section 325 by some other Magistrate.

Conviction set aside.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 65, 70—Failure to affix stamp to receipt—Sanction of Collector, if necessary for prosecution.

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try a person in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed under section 65 of the Stamp Act, 1899, without the sanction of the Collector being first obtained to the institution of the prosecution.

Queen-Empress v. Jethmal Jayraj, 9 B. 27, followed.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Rohtak, with his No. 30-G of 8th January 1915.

FACTS.—Mehun, complainant, owed some money to the accused Ramji Lal, whom he paid a sum of Rs. 36 in the month of Bhadon last. The accused gave him the receipt, Exhibit PA, written by himself in Hindi, but which he did not sign, nor affix a receipt stamp to. The complainant's suspicions having been roused by the nature of the receipt, he instituted a complaint under section 420, Indian Penal Code, and section 65 of the Stamp Act.

The accused, on conviction by Sheikh Khurshaid Muhammad, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class in the Rohtak District, was sentenced, by order dated 23rd November 1914 under section 65 of the Stamp Act, to pay a fine of Rs. 25 or to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month in default.

GROUND.—The Court of the Revenue Assistant convicted the petitioner under section 65, Stamp Act, although the Collector had not sanctioned the prosecution as required by section 70, Indian Stamp Act. The irregularity is according to Queen-Empress v. Jethmal Jayraj (1), material. I, therefore, forward the record to the Hon'ble Judges, Chief Court, in order that the conviction may be set aside.

Mr. Brij Lal, for the Accused.

ORDER.—As held in Queen-Empress v. Jethmal Jayraj (1) the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the petitioner in respect of the offence alleged to have been committed by him under section 65 of the Indian Stamp Act, II of 1899, without the sanction of the Collector being first obtained to the institution of the prosecution. The conviction is, therefore, bad in law and is set aside. The fine must be refunded to the petitioner.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—In this case, the question is whether the Court of the Sub-Magistrate of Bantwal which granted sanction for prosecution was within the meaning of section 195, Indian Penal Code, the same Court before which one of the statements with reference to which the petitioner has been prosecuted, was made. It appears that, by a notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, dated 10th September 1910, the office of the Deputy Tahsildar at Bantwal was abolished. That means that there was no Sub-Magistrate at Bantwal as a result of the notification. Then, there was certain shuffling of the jurisdiction of the villages covered by the original Bantwal Court. We need not go into that.

The next fact which is of relevance is that on the 15th June 1912, the Bantwal Court was restored with some slight modification, that is to say, its territorial jurisdiction was somewhat curtailed. The Deputy Tahsildar was vested with 3rd class powers on 22nd June 1912. It appears, therefore, that there was an interval of two years during which time, there was no Sub-Magistrate's Court at Bantwal at all. The old Sub-Magistrate's Court ceased to exist, and if it was revived two years afterwards, it is difficult to say that there was any such continuity as would enable us to hold that the Court that was re-constituted in 1912, was the same as of 1910.

I, therefore, hold that the sanction granted was without jurisdiction. The order of the Sessions Judge directing re-trial, is set aside.

AYLING, J.—The point is not free from difficulty, but I am inclined to agree with the view taken by my learned brother.

JUDGMENT.—This case relates to a charge brought against a Police Constable under section 163 of the Indian Penal Code. He was convicted by the first Court, but the learned Sessions Judge on appeal set aside the conviction on the ground that the appellant had already been punished for the offence by his departmental superiors. From that decision, the Crown has preferred this appeal, which in our opinion cannot but succeed. Mr. Muhammad Saleem on behalf of the respondent attempts to support the decision of the learned Sessions Judge by quoting section 36 of the Police Act. The learned Sessions Judge has not quoted that section but has referred only to section 7 of the Police Act. It appears to us that the learned Sessions Judge has entirely misunderstood the matter. Section 7 of the Police

VELYUDA KONE v. NARAYANA KONE.

Act does not deal with the punishment of offences made punishable by this Act. Section 7 deals merely with the powers of superior Police Officers in regard to the control of their subordinate officers. Under that section, the controlling authorities are empowered to punish not offences but acts of negligence. Section 36 on the other hand, deals with offences which might be punishable either under Act V of 1861 or some other Act, such as the Indian Penal Code. For example, an individual convicted under section 34 of Act V of 1861 for furious riding, is secured from further prosecution in respect of the same offence under section 279 of the Indian Penal Code.

For these reasons, we accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge direct that he should re-hear the appeal and decide it on the merits.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—The Magistrate after perusing the Police report, passed an order on the 5th February 1915, holding that there was a likelihood of breach of the peace and issued notice to the parties. On the 27th February 1915, the Magistrate without any evidence and without any enquiry held that there was no likelihood of any breach of the peace. It is represented by petitioner's Vakil that his client was ready with evidence to show that he was in possession and that he apprehended that he would be ousted by force. The mere fact that a prior application was dropped by a Magistrate prior to the order passed by the Magistrate on the 5th February 1915, is no ground for refusing an inquiry. In spite of the prior proceedings, the Police reported that there was a likelihood of breach of the peace and the Magistrate was of opinion that a breach of the peace was likely.

Having come to that conclusion and having issued notice, the Magistrate ought to have held an enquiry as provided by clause 4, section 145, of the Code of Criminal Procedure and examined witnesses called by both or either of the parties. His failure to do so, has been held to be illegal and to afford grounds for interference by the High Court: *Sreeman Kumara Tirumalraja Bahadur, Rajah of Karvetnagar v. JUDGMENT.—On the 10th June 1914, Allah Dad, a Biloch resident of the Leiah Tahsil, Muzaffargarh District, presented a complaint against Bhola Ram and Juman Ram Chawlas, residents of the same Tahsil, alleging offences committed by them with regard to his wife, Musammat Zainab, and praying for their punishment under sections 497, 498 and 109, Indian Penal Code. On the 16th of June, he presented a further complaint praying that action might be taken against his said wife under section 30 of the Frontier Crimes Regulation, 1901. The complaints were preferred to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who after a preliminary enquiry, submitted the record to the Deputy Commissioner with a view to the case being referred to a jirga under section 11 of the Regulation. The Deputy Commissioner accepted the suggestion, by order dated the 18th August, and authorised the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to make the reference and nominate the members. The reference was accordingly made and after enquiry and trial the jirga reported against all accused persons. The Deputy Commissioner considered the report and by his order, dated 21st October, acquitted Juman Ram and convicted Bhola Ram under section 497 and sentenced him to three years' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 100.

He also convicted Musammat Zainab under section 30 of the Regulation and sentenced her to rigorous imprisonment for one year.

Bhola Ram, through his Pleader Mr. Govind Das, has applied for revision of the Deputy Commissioner's order on the following three grounds:—

(a) Regulation III of 1901 was no longer in force in the Leiah Tahsil, which now forms part of the Muzaffargarh District.

(b) The said Regulation does not apply to Hindus, but only to Biloches and Pathans.

(c) The Leiah Tahsil having never been severed for the purposes of the said Regulation from the Dera Ismail Khan District to which it belonged at the time of coming in force of the Regulation, the only Deputy Commissioner who had jurisdiction to hear the case was the Deputy Commissioner of Dera Ismail Khan.

Game Shah v. Emperor (1) is sufficient authority to justify my entertaining this petition, and it is also authority for overruling ground (a) as above set forth. It is a Division Bench ruling and as such binding on me.

As regards the second objection, Mr. Petman has referred me to Punjab Government Notifications Nos. 720-A, dated the 9th of July 1887, and 1156, dated the 15th of November 1887, both issued under the provisions of the Frontier Crimes Regulation of 1887. By the first of these notifications, the provisions of the Regulation of 1887 were (with certain irrelevant exceptions) extended to the Banna, Dera Ismail Khan and Dera Ghazi Khan Districts, and by the second, the provisions of the Regulation as a whole were extended to all persons, not being European British subjects, born or ordinarily residents in those districts. Regulation IV of 1887 has been repealed by Regulation III of 1901, and though no new notification has been issued under section 1 (4) of the latter Regulation, the notifications issued under Regulation IV of 1887 must be deemed to be still in force by virtue of section 24 of the General Clauses Act, 1897. Mr. Govind Das very properly admitted that his second objection failed and could not be supported.

The third objection, like the first, is covered by the decision of the Division Bench in Game Shah v. Emperor (1).

(1) 8 P. R. 1903 Cr.; 102 P. L. R. 1903.

SHEONANDAN V. EMPEROR.

I appreciate the force of Mr. Govind Das's argument that if the Regulation be held to be still in force in the Leiah Tahsil, as if it had never been severed from the Dera Ismail Khan District, the logical inference is the Deputy Commissioner of that district and not the Deputy Commissioner of Muzaffargarh District had jurisdiction to refer this case to the jirga. This contention is, however, opposed to the ruling cited and I must, therefore, overrule it.

The result is that the petition fails and is rejected.

Revision rejected.

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 380, 201, 511—Theft—Causing disappearance of document, attempt of.

The accused brought a civil suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr on the basis of a forged promissory note. The file of the case was sent for and kept in the Court of the Additional Munsif of Jaunpur being required in connection with a suit pending in that Court and it somehow found its way to the house of an official of the Court. The accused got into the inner verandah of the house and removed the forged promissory note from the file. From that place, on being pursued, they tore it to pieces:

Held, that they were guilty of an offence under section 380, Indian Penal Code. [p. 649, col. 1.]

Held, further, that they were also guilty under section 201/511 of the Penal Code. [p. 649, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Jaunpur.

Mr. Hamilton, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The two appellants, Sheo Nandan and Babu Nandan, were committed for trial on charges alleging against both of them, the commission of offences punishable under sections 380 and 201, Indian Penal Code. The charges were amended by the Sessions Judge, although under the circumstances, it does not seem to me that there is any clear reason why he should not have been content to proceed with the charges as originally framed, unless indeed, as I shall have occasion to remark presently, he was prepared to add a further charge against Sheo Nandan alone. However, in the result both the accused were convicted on the charge under section 380, Indian Penal Code and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three years each. Babu Nandan alone was convicted on the charge under section 201, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to a further period of rigorous imprisonment for three years. The essential facts put forward by the prosecution in this case, may be stated thus. There was in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr the record of a certain suit filed on the basis of a promissory note. That promissory note was forged and the accused Sheo Nandan, who instituted the said suit, had been guilty in so doing of an offence punishable under section 471, Indian Penal Code, namely, using as genuine a document which he knew to be a forged document, and possibly also of the substantive offence of forging the said document, punishable under section 467, Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as the promissory note in question purported to be a valuable security. Under circumstances which need not be set forth in detail, the record in question was sent from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr to Jaunpur, where it was eventually placed in the custody of the Additional Munsif of Jaunpur being required as an Exhibit in connection with a suit pending in that Court. On the 3rd of May 1915 the file received from Monghyr Court, somehow found its way to a certain house in the city of Jaunpur which was jointly inhabited by two officials belonging to the Court of the Additional Munsif, namely, Babu Lal, suits clerk, and Sheo Dyal, decree-writer. The accused Sheo Nandan and Babu Nandan are alleged to have gone to the said house, to have obtained access to the Monghyr file and to have removed from it two papers, namely, the forged promissory note and the list of documents along with which the pro-note had been filed in the Monghyr Court. They ran away from the house with these two papers in their possession. Being pursued, they endeavoured to destroy the same by tearing them. They were, however, captured, and the two papers were recovered. In the Sessions Court, the case was tried at length on the facts, the accused persons denying practically all the allegations against them and producing evidence in support of an alibi. The only admission of any consequence made by either of the accused, was that Sheo Nandan did finally admit the promissory note before the Court to be the one which he had produced in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Monghyr in support of the claim made by him in that Court. On the evidence before him, the Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that both the accused had been guilty of theft of these two papers and had committed this offence in a building used as a human dwelling, namely, the house occupied by the witnesses Babu Lal and Sheo Dyal. He held on the strength of various reported decisions of this Court that Sheo Nandan, being proved by the evidence to have committed the offence of forgery or of using as genuine a forged document in connection with which the charge under section 201, Indian Penal Code, was framed, could not himself be tried or convicted of causing evidence to disappear under the provisions of the latter section. He held this offence to be proved against Babu Nandan, convicted him on the charge under section 201, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to a further period of rigorous imprisonment for 3 years. In support of the appeal filed in this Court, I have not been asked to examine in full detail the evidence with regard to most of the questions of fact which were contested in the Court below. I accept the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the alibi evidence produced by the accused in his Court is unworthy of credit. I hold it to be proved by overwhelming evidence that, on the date set forth in the charge, the accused Sheo Nandan and Babu Nandan were seen running away from the house already referred to with the witnesses Babu Lal and Sheo Dyal in pursuit of them. They were captured and the two papers set forth in the charge, namely, the forged promissory note and the list of documents were recovered from the possession of one or other of them. With reference to the charge under section 201, Indian Penal Code, I have further examined the evidence on the strength of which the learned Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that the offence of forgery, and, therefore, also the offence of using as genuine a forged document, had been committed in respect of the promissory note in question, and I concur in the finding arrived at by the Court below on this point. It remains for me, however, to consider a number of arguments which have been addressed to me with regard to the propriety of the convictions affirmed by the Court below, and with a view mainly to obtaining a substantial reduction of sentence by reducing the offence of which the appellants have been convicted either to one of simple theft under section 379, Indian Penal Code, or possibly to one of simple mischief under section 426, Indian Penal Code. In this connection it has been necessary to examine with care the evidence given by the witnesses Babu Lal and Sheo Dyal. These men were in a difficult position, undoubtedly the record in question, namely, the file of the suit received from the Monghyr Court ought not to have been in the place where it was at the time referred to in the charge. Neither Babu Lal nor Sheo Dyal had any business to remove that record from the safe custody of the Court of the Additional Munsif, and one or the other of them was guilty of misconduct and liable to departmental punishment for having so removed it. It is not to be wondered at under the circumstances that each of these men endeavoured in his evidence to throw the blame upon the other, and that the statements of neither of them as to the precise circumstances under which that record came to be at their house, or I may add, to the precise circumstances under which the accused Sheo Nandan and Babu Nandan put in their appearance, can be accepted as reliable. After allowing all due weight to these considerations, I am nevertheless fully satisfied that the offence of theft in respect of these two papers was committed by the appellants Sheo Nandan and Babu Nandan acting in concert, and was so committed that it is not material for the Court, in view of the provisions of section 34, Indian Penal Code, to determine with certainty which of the accused actually removed either or both of the documents. There is clear and satisfactory evidence, apart from the statements of Babu Lal and Sheo Dyal, that the two accused ran out of the house with the aforesaid witnesses in pursuit, that they were captured at no great distance of the said house and that the two papers which formed the subject-matter of the theft, were recovered from the possession of one or either of them in a damaged condition. I, therefore, regard the evidence

as proving that the papers in question had been taken from the possession of Babu Lal, or of Sheo Dyal, or of both of them, without the consent of either of them; and taking the circumstances of the case as a whole, I have no doubt that they had been taken dishonestly. With regard to the applicability of section 380, Indian Penal Code, rather than section 379, Indian Penal Code, it does not appear to me that the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses in the Court below was very specifically directed to the point which has been made before me in argument. So far as the evidence goes, it seems to me to show that the theft took place in a verandah of the house situated on the inner side of the main door, and obviously forming part of a building used as a human dwelling within the meaning of section 380, Indian Penal Code. A further question has been raised as to whether theft of property from the person of the complainant would be liable to enhanced punishment provided by section 380, Indian Penal Code, merely because the complainant in question happened at the time to be in some building. As a matter of fact, in the great majority of cases, such a question would be otiose, because if a Court felt any doubt about applying section 380, Indian Penal Code, it could feel no hesitation in convicting under section 451, Indian Penal Code. In the particular case now before me, I am content to say that, although the evidence of Babu Lal and Sheo Dyal as to the precise circumstances under which the accused succeeded in effecting the removal of these papers, is conflicting and unreliable, it is certain on the evidence as a whole that the papers were removed from the file while the file was in the verandah of the house, and cannot reasonably be said to have been removed from the person of Babu Lal or of Sheo Dyal. I am satisfied, therefore, that the conviction under section 380, Indian Penal Code, was right and proper. With regard to the conviction of Babu Nandan under section 201, Indian Penal Code, a number of questions have been raised. I think the Court below in trying this charge was bound to come to a finding as to whether an offence under section 467 or section 471, Indian Penal Code, had or had not been committed. As already stated, I concur in the finding which the learned Sessions Judge has arrived at on this point. It is, however, clear to me that no offence punishable under section 201, Indian Penal Code, was actually completed. The evidence, the disappearance of which it was desired to cause, consisted of the two papers in respect of which the accused have been convicted of theft, and then the papers cannot be said to have disappeared within the meaning of section 201, Indian Penal Code. They were recovered in a damaged condition, but for evidential purposes, so far as concerns the alleged offences under sections 467 and 471, Indian Penal Code, they are complete and fully available for the purposes of justice.

I should not be prepared to say that in this case, there had been even a temporary disappearance, setting aside the further question of law whether a temporary disappearance would be sufficient to fulfill the requirements of the section. Babu Nandan, therefore, can only be convicted on this part of the case of having attempted to cause the disappearance of these papers, that is to say, of an offence punishable under sections 201/511, Indian Penal Code, and I am satisfied that the maximum punishment which could be inflicted upon him under these sections, would be one of rigorous imprisonment for a period of one and a half years. The question whether Sheo Nandan could or should at this trial have been further charged with offences under sections 471 or 467, Indian Penal Code, and of the legal effect of his not having been so charged or convicted, does not now arise; but I am satisfied that there had been misjoinder of persons or charges in the Court below so far as the trial actually went. The position is perhaps a little awkward, in view of the fact that Sheo Nandan could not be convicted of any offence under section 201, Indian Penal Code, while he was undoubtedly guilty of the offence under section 380, Indian Penal Code, jointly committed by himself and Babu Nandan in the course of the same transaction. At any rate there was nothing illegal about the joint trial as held. I shall have to interfere with the conviction and sentence in the case of Babu Nandan for the reasons already stated; and taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, I am ot prepared to say that a severer punishment than rigorous imprisonment for a total period of three years seems to be required against this man in the interests of justice. The result is that I dismiss the appeal of Sheo Nandan. In the case of Babu Nandan, I affirm the conviction and sentence under section 380, Indian Penal Code. On the other charge I direct that the conviction be altered to one under sections 201/511, Indian Penal Code, and the sentence reduced to one of rigorous imprisonment for one year, and I further direct that this latter sentence shall run concurrently with the sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment passed on the conviction under section 380, Indian Penal Code.

Convictions affirmed.

Queen-Empress v. Chagan Dayaram, 14 B. 331, not followed.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the District Magistrate of Bellary, in Calendar Case No. 3 of 1915.

FACTS of the case appear from the order.

Mr. S. Ranganatha Iyer, for the Accused, raised a preliminary objection that the revision was incompetent inasmuch as the Sessions Court was not moved and relied on Shafaqatullah v. Wali Ahmad Khan (1), Bhuyan Abdus Sobhan Khan, In re (2) and Queen-Empress v. Chagan Dayaram (3) and upon the practice of the Court. He also relied upon the fact that in section 498, where the same words occur, the High Court has held that the Sessions Court must first be approached before the High Court is moved.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Petitioner, contended there was nothing in the Code warranting such a procedure.

ORDER.—The petitioner, who is the Reddy of the village and a man of means, filed a complaint before the District Magistrate charging the Acting Tahsildar of Siruguppa with having beaten him with a slipper. The District Magistrate dismissed the complaint under section 203 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The sworn statement of the complainant and the deposition of the witnesses examined before the District Magistrate in the enquiry held by him under section 202, have been read and commented upon and I am of opinion that the evidence recorded certainly affords good grounds for further enquiry. I am unable to see any material discrepancy, or anything on the face of the record to warrant a summary dismissal of the complaint. There can be little doubt from the evidence that the Tahsildar wanted the Reddy to supply him with milk. The evidence of the Revenue Inspector is to the effect that "there was some trouble between the Tahsildar and the Reddy about the milk." He professes to have left the place just then. The petitioner speaks to the assault and two of his witnesses state that the Tahsildar beat the complainant with a shoe and the discrepancies do not affect their credibility in any material way. There has not been any long delay—at least no such delay as would warrant the throwing out of the case in limine.

I am of opinion that this is a case that requires a full and thorough investigation. It is argued that no revision petition will lie to the High Court unless the party has first applied to the Sessions Court and reference has been made to Shafaqatullah v. Wali Ahmad Khan (1), Bhuyan Abdus Sobhan Khan, In re (2) and Queen-Empress v. Chagan Dayaram (3).

The jurisdiction conferred by the Criminal Procedure Code on the High Court is wide and I do not think it ought to be fettered by any hard and fast rule. All that is laid down in Bhuyan Abdus Sobhan Khan, In re (2) is that the High Court will not ordinarily interfere except on special grounds, when a party does not exhaust his remedy by applying to the Sessions Court. This decision was followed in Shafaqatullah v. Wali Ahmad Khan (1). I do not think the cases cited lay down any inflexible rule. Nor do I think it desirable that any such rule should be laid down. In the present case, the petition was admitted by Mr. Justice Ayling and the papers have all been printed. I see no grounds for refusing to act and to send the parties back to the Sessions Court to begin the whole proceedings de novo.

I set aside the order of the lower Court and direct that the case be proceeded with according to law. I direct that the complaint be transferred to the District Magistrate of Kurnool and disposed of by him. I do not suggest that the evidence of the witnesses referred to by me above, may not in the long run turn out to be not worthy of belief, either after they are cross-examined or when other witnesses are examined. All I wish to state is that at the present stage of the proceedings there is no reason to reject their evidence.

Petition allowed.

SOHAN LAL—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 235, 236, 239—Two separate charges—One trial—Mis-judged—Burden of proof—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 403—To "appropriate", meaning of—"Mis-appropriate", meaning of.

Where an accused person is charged of having deceived a canal officer in obtaining certain papers from him and also of having misappropriated a certain sum of money, the prosecution is entitled to ask the Court to go into both the charges at a single trial, provided it takes upon itself the burden of proving that the facts alleged against the accused, are in fact so connected together as to form parts of the same transaction, or to be otherwise triable at a single trial under the provisions of section 235 and 236 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. [p. 652, col. 2.]

In connection with section 403, Indian Penal Code, the verb "to appropriate" means setting apart for or assigning to a particular person or use and to "misappropriate" means to set apart for or assign to the wrong person or a wrong use, and this act must be done dishonestly. [p. 653, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Meerut.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision by one Sobhan Lal. The applicant was tried and convicted by a Magistrate on a composite charge purporting to be laid under sections 403/417, Indian Penal Code, and received concurrent sentences of imprisonment. On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge has maintained the convictions as recorded, but has set aside the sentences of imprisonment and imposed in lieu thereof cumulative sentences of fine aggregating Rs. 250. The essential facts may be stated as follows:—Sohan Lal was the servant of a landholder named Musammatt Sarvi Begam. There had been disputes between this lady and another co-sharer in her mahal, culminating in a partition which had finally been settled by the Revenue Courts and ordered to take effect from the month of July 1915. In order to avoid disputes between the parties in the interval before the partition was to take effect, the Collector had ex-exercised his powers under section 45 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, III of 1901, and appointed the other co-sharer, Mehar Chand, an additional lambardar for the mahal in which he and Musammât Sarvi Begam were both co-sharers, and of which Musammât Sarvi Begam had hitherto been the sole lambardar. The Magistrate who tried this case in the first instance thoroughly appreciated this point, but the learned Sessions Judge seems to have been under some misapprehension concerning it. There could not be a separate lambardar for the mahal known as "Mahal Bindaban," this being the name of the mahal assigned to Mehar Chand on partition, because no such mahal had yet come into existence. The intention of the Collector, no doubt, was that Mehar Chand should exercise all the powers, perform all the duties and enjoy all the rights of a lambardar in respect of that portion of Mahal Sarvi Begam which had been assigned to him under the partition. Under these circumstances, an employee of the Canal Department went to the village, bringing with him the jamabandis or statements of account, showing the arrears of canal dues requiring to be realised from cultivators belonging to Mahal Sarvi Begam. This work of realization is ordinarily performed by the lambardars, who are enabled, by the exercise of due diligence, to earn a small remuneration in the form of a percentage on the dues collected. In accordance with the Collector's order, the effect of which had been properly appreciated by the Revenue Authorities, two separate jamabandis or statements of account had been prepared, one for that portion of the mahal of which Sarvi Begam was lambardar, and another for that portion of the mahal of which Mehar Chand had been appointed additional lambardar. The official entrusted with the conveyances of these jamabandis handed them both over to Sohan Lal. The latter proceeded to make all the necessary collections for the entire mahal in the name of his mistress, Musammât Sarvi Begam. He paid the money so collected in at the Tahsil, received the percentage due to the lambardar for collections made with due diligence, and paid over the money so received to his mistress, Sarvi Begam. There is no suggestion that he made anything for himself out of the transaction.

SOHAN LAL V. EMPEROR.

He has been convicted of having deceived the canal official and thereby obtained possession of the jamabandi which was intended for Mehar Chand, and he has been further convicted of having criminally misappropriated that portion of the canal dues which was paid to him on account of collections made in Mehar Chand's division of the mahal. It is contended before me that both convictions are bad in law, and that in any case, the trial is bad, as the two alleged offences were not part of the same transaction and should not have been tried together. With regard to the alleged misjoinder of charges, my opinion is that the prosecution was entitled to ask the Court to go into the whole matter at a single trial, provided it took upon itself the burden of proving that all the facts alleged against the accused, were in fact so connected together as to form parts of the same transaction, or to be otherwise triable at a single trial under the provisions of sections 235 and 236 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This involves the further condition that, if the prosecution failed to make this out, the joint trial would be defective in law. In the view which I take of the facts of this case, I need not labour on this point further. It seems to me that practically the prosecution assumed the burden of proving that the obtaining of a jamabandi for Mehar Chand's division of the mahal, was deliberately done by the accused Sohan Lal, in order to enable him to collect dues appertaining to the said division of the mahal and to deprive Mehar Chand of the opportunity of earning the lambardar's remuneration in respect of such dues. I do not think that anything of the sort is made out by the evidence on the record. The Magistrate who tried the case was inclined to doubt the evidence of Muhammad Sadiq, the peon who handed over the jamabandis to Sohan Lal. The learned Sessions Judge sees no reason to disbelieve the witness; but obviously his evidence does not prove anything regarding Sohan Lal's intentions at the time when he accepted delivery of the two jamabandis. When it is sought to establish the offence of cheating on the basis, not of any false representation with regard to past events or existing facts, but on the basis of a promise as to something to be done in the future, the prosecution is often faced with this difficulty, that it has to prove that the person making the promise had no intention at the time of performing it. Assuming Muhammad Sadiq's evidence to be true as it stands, it would not, in my opinion, be safe to infer from this evidence that Sohan Lal did not at the time intend to pass on one of the two jamaban-lis left with him, to Mehar Chand. As regards the charge of criminal misappropriation, I am not prepared to hold that there is on this record sufficient evidence of dishonest intention on the part of Sohan Lal to warrant his conviction. The question of the respective rights and duties of the original lambardar and the additional lambardar of Mahal Sarvi Begam is not in itself absolutely clear, and may well have seemed extremely doubtful to the persons principally concerned. Sohan Lal was, after all, a servant acting under the orders and in the interests of his mistress. I am not prepared to assume against him that he knew he was causing wrongful gain to his mistress, or wrongful loss to Mehar Chand, by collecting these canal dues and receiving the remuneration therefor. There is no question in the present case of dishonest conversion of money to his own use by the person accused. The charge is, therefore, based on the words "whoever dishonestly misappropriates". The verb "to appropriate" in this connection means setting apart for, or assigning to, a particular person or use; and to "misappropriate," no doubt means to set apart for or assign to the wrong person or a wrong use, and this act must be done dishonestly. The evidence on the record does not satisfy me that when Sohan Lal handed over to his mistress the money, which was after all only the due payment for work which he had himself performed, he was acting dishonestly within the meaning of that word as used in the Indian Penal Code. I, therefore, accept this application, set aside the conviction and sentence in this case and acquit Sohan Lal of the offence charged. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Application accepted.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and sections 15 of 24 and 25 Victoria, Chapter 104, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Nellore, in his proceedings dated the 20th October 1914 in Extraordinary Appeal No 1281 of 1914, (Small Cause Suit No. 74 of 1902) sending the petitioners to nearest First Class Magistrate on offence punishable under section 467, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Government.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—These are applications to set aside an order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. The order was passed by the District Munsif in the course of a certain execution proceeding in his Court. It appears that the property attached in execution of the decree was alleged to have been sold by the judgment-debtor to a third person and the vendee put in a claim. The consideration for the deed of sale was two promissory notes which the learned District Munsif had reasons to suspect were forgeries. The claimant did not appear in support of his claim, but the District Munsif examined the executant of the promissory notes as well as an attester of one of the promissory notes and he then came to the conclusion that the petitioners, i.e., the executant of the notes and the attestors should be prosecuted, as he was of opinion that the notes were forged documents. The question before us is whether section 476 applies at all to this matter. The section says that any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court may order prosecution with reference to any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding. The question we have to decide is whether the terms of that section are satisfied where, as here, one of the offences mentioned in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code has been committed but not by any party to any proceeding before the Court. The offences charged fall within clause (c) to section 195, which says "no Court shall take cognizance of any offence described in section 463 or punishable under sections 471, 475 or section 476 of the same Code, when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding except with the previous sanction," etc. In this case, the offence of forgery, if one was committed, was not committed by any party to any proceeding before the Court executing the decree, and if that qualification is to be imported into section 476 the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to make the order in question. The decisions on the point are conflicting. In Calcutta, the opinion is divided. The view laid down in Akhil Chandra De v. Queen-Empress (1) is that section 476 must be construed as being entirely self-contained and that we are only to refer to the offences mentioned in section 195 without any of the restrictions or qualifications that are to be found there as to the circumstances in which the offence is committed. But apparently a different view prevailed in the cases reported as Dharmadas Kuwar v. Emperor (2) and as Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (3). I may mention that the case in 22 Calcutta was under section 478, Criminal Procedure Code, and not 476, Criminal Procedure Code; but so far as the question before us, is concerned, it does not appear that that would make any difference. The cases in 7 Calcutta Law Journal and 37 Calcutta are both under section 476 and the learned Judges in the latter case seem to have gone rather fully into the matter and considered the authorities on the point. In this Court, there is only one decision which is directly in point, viz., that reported as Abdul Khadar v. Meera Sahib (4) where the learned Judges expressly lay down that section 476 applies only to the offences mentioned in section 195 if they are committed by the person or in the circumstances mentioned therein. There is, however, a dictum of Sankaran Nair, J., in a Full Bench case in Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (5). There the learned Judge observes that the operation of section 476 is not confined by the restrictions mentioned in section 195. That was a mere obiter dictum unnecessary for the decision of the question before the learned Judges. Two decisions of the Bombay High Court have been brought to our notice, viz., those reported as In re Devji (6) and as In re Keshav Narayan (7). Both support the view in favour of the wider interpretation of section 476. We have also been referred to a case in Girwar Prasad v. Emperor (8), but that case is not a clear authority in support of either the one or the other position. The question is certainly not free from difficulty, but we thought we could dispose of it at once as it was fully argued before us. On the whole, I am inclined to follow the view taken in 15 Madras. One circumstance which does not appear to have been noticed in any of the reported decisions, is that some guidance as to the scope of section 476 is afforded by the heading to Chapter XXXV, which shows the class of offences, which is intended to be dealt with in the chapter in which section 476 occurs. The heading of the Chapter is "proceedings in case of certain offences affecting the administration of justice." If the wider interpretation contended for on behalf of the Crown were to be adopted, then the section would apply to cases which have no relation whatever to the administration of justice. It might be, for instance, that a forgery was committed and brought to the notice of a Court and yet the forged document was not intended to be used and was never in fact used in connection with any proceeding. I may say that if the language of section 476 was clear, we would be bound to give effect to it apart from the heading of the chapter. But the language not being clear to show how much of section 195 is to be imported, I felt myself justified in deriving light from the description of the chapter which begins with section 476. I may observe that the learned Judges who decided the case of Akhil Chandra De v. Queen-Empress (1) remarked that if the narrower interpretation of section 478, Criminal Procedure Code, were upheld, no meaning could be given to the words of that section—the same words occur in section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, as well—"or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding." With all respect to them, it seems to me that they are under some misapprehension as to this. If an offence of the nature described, is committed by a party to a proceeding, the Court before whom the proceeding lay, can give sanction under section 195; but suppose that every matter is brought under the notice of another Court in the course of another judicial proceeding to which the offender is not a party, then the use of section 476 comes in and the Court under whose notice it is brought can make an order under that section.

I, therefore, hold that the order in both the cases must be set aside.

SPENCER, J.—The question is full of difficulty. In In re Keshav Narayan (7), Batchelor, J., observes "all that is required by section 476, is that such an offence as is there (i. e., in section 195) referred to, should be either committed before the Court or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding." I think that as far as possible, we should give effect to the plain wording of the section and not introduce anything that is not there. But in this case if we give the fullest scope to the words "brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding," it will have the effect of giving Courts a very wide power to arrest and send persons to trial even when the offences have no direct connection with any proceeding in Court, as for instance, where some statement is elicited in the cross-examination of a witness as to a previous act of forgery committed by him. In the Indian Penal Code, forgery comes under the class of offences relating to documents and not under the class of offences against public justice, which includes offences under sections 191 to 229. In this way, the powers of Courts will be enlarged beyond the scope of the heading of Chapter XXXV, Criminal Procedure Code, in which section 476 occurs. There is also considerable force in the observation in Akhil Chandra De v. Queen-Empress (1) that if section 476 is to be read as qualified by the circumstances referred to in section 195, then it is difficult to give any meaning to the words in sections 476 and 478 "or brought under the notice of any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court in the course of a judicial proceeding". But the case of Girwar Prasad v. Emperor (8) is an instance of an offence which was brought to the notice of a Civil Court in the course of a judicial proceeding, and yet, without being an offence committed in relation to any proceedings in that Court, was an offence affecting the administration of justice.

It may also be observed that when, as here, a person who is not a party to any proceeding in any Court, is accused of committing forgery in respect of a document, no sanction is required before he is prosecuted.

I, therefore, agree in the absence of any conflicting decision of this Court, with my learned brother's decision, which finds support in Abdul Khaliq v. Meera Saheb (4), the only decision directly on the point in this Court.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 479 OF 1915.

Madras Abkari Act (I of 1886), s. 56 (b)—Licensee for sale of arrack 32 degrees under proof, sale in breach thereof—Adulteration—Allowance of 2 per cent. for wastage under r. 229, Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue how far defence—Standing Orders of Board of Revenue, r. 229, scope of—Abkari prosecution—Technicality of offence, whether can be considered by Court.

Rule 229 of the Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue, which directs Abkari officers to allow wastage in bottling up to 2 per cent. is only a departmental rule for the guidance of its subordinates, the margin of 2 per cent. being fixed as an allowance for evaporation in cases where there is reason to believe that the diminution in strength is due to natural causes. It cannot be construed to mean that licensees can adulterate arrack so long as they do not exceed 2 per cent. over the strength mentioned in the permit.

The rule not having been made under section 69 of the Madras Abkari Act, 1886, has not the force of law and cannot be read as part of the Act.

Under section 55 (b) of the Abkari Act, an offence is committed the moment a person sells arrack below the strength specified in the permit, no matter what the cause of the variation may be. The fact that the offence is only technical, is not a matter for the Court, but one for the officers instituting the prosecution.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Joint Magistrate of Negapatam, in Criminal Appeal No. 25 of 1915, preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Negapatam, in Calendar Case No. 31 of 1915.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Petitioners.—The conviction is not sustainable. Rule 229 of the Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue allows a wastage of 2 per cent. The offence is after all only technical.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.—The rule in question is a departmental rule for the guidance of officers. The 2 per cent. allowed by it, is for evaporation by natural causes and not for adulteration. Further, the rule not having been made under section 69, has not the force of law, nor is it a part of the Act. Technicality of an offence is only for the consideration of officers instituting a prosecution, and not for the Court. The offence is complete the moment arrack below the strength specified in the permit is sold.

ORDER.—The terms of the license are specific and the privilege extends only to the sale of arrack 32 degrees under proof. Section 56, clause (b), of the Madras Abkari Act, 1886, renders any person who does any act in breach of the conditions of his license punishable with imprisonment which may extend to three months or with fine extending to Rs. 200 or with both.

The evidence in the case shows clearly that spirits over 32 degrees was sold and the only question is whether rule 229 of the Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue, which directs Abkari Officers to allow wastage in bottling up to 2 per cent., can be pleaded as a defence to a prosecution under section 56, clause (b).

I do not think the rule can be construed to mean that licensees can adulterate arrack so long as they do not exceed 2 per cent. over the strength mentioned in the permit. It is only a departmental rule for the guidance of its subordinates and fixes a 2 per cent. margin as an allowance for evaporation in cases where there is reason to believe that the diminution in strength is due to natural causes.

The rule was not made under section 69 of the Madras Abkari Act and is, therefore, not one having the force of law, or a rule to be read as part of the Act.

Under the Act, an offence is committed the moment a person sells arrack below the strength specified in the permit—no matter what the cause of the variation may be. It is true that the offence may be only technical, but this is a matter for the officers instituting the prosecution.

In the present case, both the Joint Magistrate and the Sub-Magistrate have believed the evidence of the Sub-Inspector and I do not think I ought in revision to go behind their findings of fact. The evidence of the Sub-Inspector shows that even the 2 per cent. margin was exceeded when he tested the arrack. I see no ground for interfering with the conviction or sentence and dismiss the petition.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—This is an appeal by two youths, who are the sons of a lady called Mahfil Nagir Bee. They bring this action against a number of relatives of the late Nawab of Masulipatam, as he was called by courtesy, to have it declared that they are the legitimate sons of the late Nawab and entitled to take part in the partition of his landed property.

The question that has to be determined can be put in two ways. In the first place, has it been affirmatively shown that Mahfil Nagir Bee was a wife of the late Nawab? Secondly, it may be put in another way—do the known circumstances of the relations of the Nawab and his family to Mahfil Nagir Bee lead to the presumption that a marriage must have taken place, though no definite date can be assigned?

The first question, therefore, is one of fact—is it true or is it proved that a marriage actually took place between the Nawab and this lady? If she was married to the Nawab, it is not contended that she was married in any other form except the lowest form of marriage known to Muhammadian Law, viz., muta marriage, which is said by some to be so low a form of union as to be practically indistinguishable from concubinage. The two known features about it are:—first, there must be a definite period for the marriage to last either in this world or in the next or in both—which in this case is said to be 99 years—and secondly, a sum of money must be paid to the bride as her dower—and it is said in this case that a sum of Rs. 525 was paid to this girl. The history of Mahfil Nagir Bee is inevitably bound up with that of another lady, called Dildar Bee, who was a witness in this case. They were acquired from their parents, who were poor and unknown, by the senior wife of the Nawab, when they were little children six or seven years old. Their parentage seems to be very vaguely known to anybody, including themselves. There were apparently Hindus and pariahs by caste, and became converted to Muhammadianism after their introduction into the zenana of the Nawab. In the year 1887, the shadi wife of the Nawab was taken ill, and after a few weeks' illness, she died in child-birth. That we know to be on the 24th November 1887. The story told by the appellants is that shortly afterwards—a few weeks after the death of the shadi wife—the Nawab proceeded in turn to contract muta marriages with both Mahfil Nagir Bee and Dildar Bee; and it seems clear that more or less about the same time, he did no doubt contract a muta marriage with another young woman in the zenana, namely Fiza Bee. Several witnesses were called for the appellants to establish the alleged celebration in Madras of the muta marriage with Mahfil Nagir Bee. Most of the witnesses identified the occasion by reference to some other events. One of the events by which some of them tried to fix it, is by reference to the marriage of a lady, called Amthus Salam Begam, who is the 5th defendant in this case. They say Dildar Bee and Nagir Bee's marriages were a little before that of Amthus Salam. But, unfortunately, the marriage register has been produced and it turns out that that marriage was not celebrated till the year 1892; and, therefore, these witnesses must, at any rate, be entirely mistaken when they imagined themselves to be consistent in fixing the occasion of the marriage of Mahsil Nigar Bee with reference to that of Amthus Salam Begam. Another method of identifying, adopted by some other witnesses, was by reference to the marriage of Fiza Bee, and those of them who adopted this method are all agreed that, of the three girls, Fiza Bee was the one married last. A letter which was produced—Exhibit XXXII—a letter written by the Nawab to a friend, is dated 17th April 1887, and it specifically recites that on that date, he had just married Fiza Bee as mula wife. After that, it becomes impossible to place any reliance on these witnesses, as it is clear on their own showing that it was more than six months out by this last method, and five years out by the other method of fixing it by the marriage of Amthus Salam Begam.

But, apart from these special difficulties, the general tenor of the story bristles with improbabilities. Although this took place in Madras, where the Nawab had a house and he was apparently very well known in the society of his equals, every single witness that speaks to the marriage comes from Masulipatam having lived there all his and her life, as the case may be, and just happening by some happy coincidence to make a journey to Madras, in time to witness this ceremony. Not a single witness is called who was present on the occasion and who is a native of Madras. For this, the explanation is suggested that natives of Masulipatam would be the only persons whom the plaintiffs would probably be in a position to influence to invent the story of the marriage. The learned Judge has heard all the witnesses and weighed all the documents and he has come to the conclusion that this alleged marriage is not proved to have taken place, and from that conclusion, I do not dissent.

Next comes the much more important question, whether, although it has not been specifically proved as at a definite date, the circumstances in this case are such that the law will presume that a marriage between these persons took place. I do not propose to deal with this matter at very great length; but we have had long and learned arguments about it; and out of respect to them, I will refer to some authorities that were cited. I refer to the authorities for the purpose of ascertaining on what conditions, what evidence and what proof rests the presumption which undoubtedly is to be found in Muhammadan Law with regard to legitimacy in certain cases. The first case is Khaiah Hidayat Oollah v. Rai Jan Khanum (1). In that case, there was cited in argument a passage from Macnaghten's Muhammadan Law, and that was emphasised in the judgment. That passage is to this effect:—"None but children who are in the strictest sense of the word spurious, are considered incapable of inheriting the estate of their putative father. The evidence of persons who would, in other cases, be considered incompetent witnesses is admitted to prove wedlock, and, in short, where by any possibility a marriage may be presumed, the law will rather do so than bastardize the issue, and whether a marriage be simply voidable or void ab initio, the offspring of it will be deemed legitimate." Having quoted this passage, their Lordships say on page 38: "The effect of that appears to be, that where a child has been born to a father, of a mother, where there has been not a mere casual concubinage, but a more permanent connection, and where there is no insurmountable obstacle to such a marriage, then, according to the Muhammadan Law, the presumption is in favour of such marriage having taken place;" and on page 322, they summarise the state of facts, which they held in that case as sufficient to invoke the presumption of law, thus: "Now all the facts which are there stated, upon the principle of assumption, appear to us to be maintained by the evidence in this case; namely, that Musammatt Raijan did associate with Fyz Ali Khan; that she did remain with the females of the house of Fyz Ali Khan; that Saadat Ali Khan was born of her ventre and as to his being the offspring of Fyz Ali Khan, we think that is a circumstance necessarily to be inferred from the previous facts."

ANKBAR HUSSAIN SAHIB v. SHOUKHAH BEGAM SAHEBA.

The next case of importance was decided in Ashrufodd Dowlah Ahmed Hossein Khan Bahadoor v. Hyder Hossein Khan (2). In that case, their Lordships considered the earlier case and considerably modified the extent of the doctrine there laid down; and they cited a passage, which has been quoted at the Bar, from a certain book on Inheritance by Mr. Bailey as making the broad assumption that "mere continued cohabitation suffices to raise such a legal presumption of marriage as to legitimize the offspring." This statement drops the important qualification "with acknowledgment." I should mention that the word 'questioning' in the report is a mistake for 'making.' Their Lordships go on: "No decision can be found there (that is, of the Privy Council) which supports so broad an assumption, or which, when rightly understood, is in conflict with the law as stated by the Priests in this case. The presumption of legitimacy from marriage follows the bed, and whilst the marriage lasts, the child of the woman is taken to be the husband's child. But this presumption follows the bed, and is not antedated by relation" and so forth. Then they go on: "These presumptions are inferences of fact. They are built on the foundations of the law, and do not widen the ground of legitimacy by confounding concubinage and marriage." Then they quote a passage from another case cited before us, Mahomed Banker Hoossain Khan Bahadoor v. Shurfoon Nissa Begum 3¹, and then they explain the passage in Khajah Hidayat Oollah v. Raigan Khanum 1¹ which I have already referred to, and they say this:—"The cohabitation alluded to in that judgment was continual: it was proved to have preceded conception and to have been between a man and woman cohabiting together as man and wife, and having that repute before the conception commenced; and the case decided that not cohabitation simply and birth, but that cohabitation and birth with treatment tantamount to acknowledgment, sufficed to prove legitimacy. The presumption throughout the whole judgment is treated as one of fact.

"It would be much to be regretted if any variance on this important matter arose between the decisions of the Courts and the text of the Muhammadan Law of legitimacy, as understood and declared by the High Priest, connected as their law and religion are. Such a variance exists between the law as expounded in this case and the position contained in Mr. Campbell's judgment, that 'mere continued cohabitation suffices to raise such a legal presumption of marriage as to legitimize the offspring;' and, therefore, they adhered to the stricter view of the law which they had understood to be endorsed by the Muhammadan Priests, namely, that besides cohabitation and besides proof of parentage, there must be something in the nature of acknowledgment, either expressly or by conduct, on the part of the reputed father, to raise the presumption of legitimacy. But, given these facts, then their Lordships are ready to apply the presumption.

The next case of importance is Ranee Khujooroonissa v. Musammal R'ushu Jehan (4). On page 311 they discuss the same question (under different circumstances) as is discussed in this case, whether a lady called Bibee Loodhan is a concubine or a wife. They say:—"It is an undisputed fact that Nuzeroodeen, the son of Bibee Loodhan, was treated by his father and by all the members of the family as a legitimate son. It is not that he was on any particular occasion recognised by his father, but that he always appears to have been treated on the same footing as the other legitimate sons. This of itself appears to their Lordships to raise some presumption that his mother was his father's wife. That such a presumption arises under such circumstances, appear to have been laid down in Khajah Hidayat Oollah v. Rai Jan Khanum (1), and then they quote a passage from that judgment; and their Lordships observe, on page 312:—"It appears to their Lordships, therefore, that the undoubted acknowledgment by the father and by the whole family of the legitimacy of Nuzeroodeen raises some presumption of the marriage of his mother. But it is said that that presumption is rebutted." Then they discuss the evidence as to that and come to the conclusion that they are not justified in holding the presumption

(4) 3 I. A. 291; 2 C. 184; 26 W. R. 36.

AKBAR HUSSAIN SAHIB V. SHOUKHAH BEGAM SAEEDA.

rebutted. That is quite consistent with the judgment of the Privy Council in Ashrafud Dowlah Ahmed Hossein Khan Bahadoor v. Hyder Hussein Khan (2), because in that case, there was evidence of acknowledgment not only by many members of the family, but by the alleged husband and father himself.

Approaching the facts of this case in the light of these decisions, what do we find? The plaintiffs' evidence is almost silent as to what happened to Mahfil Nagir Bee after the year 1887. She must have passed herself, so far as anything is known about her, either as a wife or a concubine of the Nawab. Plaintiffs, I suppose, elected to rely upon their story of a definite and specific marriage. The defendants' witnesses, when they were talking about Mahfil Nagir Bee at all, were only occupied in trying to make out a charge of adultery against the Nawab; and with regard to what took place inside the palace house of the Nawab, with regard to his treatment of the lady, with regard to his and anybody else's treatment of the children, we are left in almost entire darkness. A few sentences are laboriously picked out from the evidence of the witnesses, but they really amount to almost nothing. There is a statement by the eldest shahli son, Hussain Ali, in his deposition:—"Mahfil Nagir Bee and Dildar Bee were living with us at Madras, till my father's death." That is all that the learned Vakil for the appellants can pick out of the evidence which directly bears on the relations between these ladies and the Nawab, with one exception, and that is the evidence of Dildar Bee, the other lady, who is in the same position as Mahfil Nagir Bee, whose children are threatened with bastardy—and of course she has the strongest possible motive for making out the position as favourable to the appellants; further, she herself brought a suit on behalf of her children for exactly the same purposes as the present appellants bring this suit. Undoubtedly she says that they were treated by the Nawab as the children of his wives; because that is the plain meaning of the answer given in the examination-in-chief. That is all there is for inferring what took place between, let us say, 1887 and 1892 when the Nawab died. But there are some documents in the case which undoubtedly have a very material bearing on what conclusion we are to come to on this matter; because, although it may be difficult to act on the conduct of other members of the family without any evidence of recognition by the father, nevertheless, speaking for myself, if I find very strong and clear and consistent evidence of recognition by the other members of the family, I would be content to accept very slight evidence as to the father himself. It becomes necessary, therefore, to see how that matter stands. And the first document of importance, in my judgment, is the Government order of the 8th October 1900, which is Exhibit XI. What had happened was this. The family of the Nawab wished to have pensions allotted to them. He having himself actually got a Government political pension, his family were now anxious to get it; and claims were put in to the Collector by the various members of the family, and finally a pension list was drawn up showing what share each was to get. In that petition to the Collector, it was stated quite clearly that the late Nawab had a muta wife, called Fiza Bee, and two concubines and children. The two concubines can only mean and do mean Dildar Bee and Mahfil Nagir Bee; and in the schedule showing the amounts payable, they are, in terms, described as concubines and their children as children of concubines. It is not possible to say that Mahfil Nagir Bee must have so described herself and I do not think Mr. Rangachariar will go as far as that. But it is impossible for me to believe that the Collector would have written down a conclusion that there were two concubines, unless at any rate that was reflecting the view of the family generally. No doubt that certainly does not bind the children. I would even say that it is useless as indicating the ladies' own view of their position. But it indicates in the strongest way what must have been the general view of the family as a whole, so that we start with the very first document in the family endeavouring to explain her position and describing her as a concubine.

The next document of importance is Exhibit O, which is dated 23rd May 1902 and which is a power-of-attorney given to a trader for the purpose of getting him to manage some of the properties of the family; and that document is very much relied upon by the appellants, because they are there treated as members of the family and as heirs to the Nawab. At the same time it is just to observe that there is a distinction made in the document between children of muta wives and a word, which apparently is capable of many meanings, the word 'kavar'. That word has been the subject of great discussion and considerable amount of research has been expended by the learned Counsel in trying to see what it really means. I am not sure I am very much the wiser, but no one can read the document without seeing this—that there is a distinction between daughters of the muta wife and the children of somebody else. Let the other word be what it will, the distinctions drawn between the child of a muta the shadi wife and the nicka wife have already been mentioned and then it goes on to distinguish between children of the muta wife and children of the kavar. It is very difficult to come to any other conclusion than that the last word must be intended to mean a woman who is not married at all; and that, at any rate, is a possible meaning of the word 'khowas.'

The next document to which I would refer is Exhibit XXXIV, dated 27th May 1902. The family by this time were quarrelling, for the most part, with the eldest son, Hussain Ali, and approached the Governor with a view to get Hussain Ali out of the management of the family properties and place the management in the hands of somebody else on behalf of the family as a whole. The importance of that is that, in that document, although Akbar Hussain and Asghar Hussain are included as heirs or at any rate as claimants, they are described as being the minor sons, etc., by a concubine. Once more I do not for a moment suppose that that can, in any way, be brought home to the knowledge of Mahfil Nagir Bee. The probabilities are that she is not in any way responsible, but the second son is responsible for it. But what I once more think it important for is that it does show that at this time the family or the spokesman, for the time being, of the family seemed to take it as a matter of absolute common denomination that her position was not that of a wife, but only of a concubine. I have already mentioned the fact that about this time when the memorial was sent, there was a quarrel between Hussain Ali and the other members of the family. There are some other documents on which great reliance is placed by the appellants. In the first place, a number of persons sued the descendants and representatives of the Nawab and added the present appellants as defendants along with the other members of the family; and it is said that not only was that done—which perhaps does not go for very much—but first the eldest son, Hussain Ali, and in later litigation, the senior daughter were guardians for these minors. That is a strong circumstance, so strong that, at one time, I was almost inclined on the faith of it to accept the appellants' case. But I think it loses a great deal of its force by reason of two circumstances. The first is that when these documents are read with the other documents to which I have referred, a quite different view appears to be taken by the same people, and the plaintiffs are treated as sons of a concubine and nothing else. Still more do I think it greatly modified by the fact that this attitude begins to be taken up for the first time only after the dissensions and quarrels have arisen in the family. There is no doubt that various members of the family were on very bad terms with one another, and that the daughter who supported the two ladies' cases was ready to grasp at any support she could get from any member of the late Nawab's household. On the whole, I do not think that the evidence of subsequent recognition of legitimacy by the other members of the family is strong enough to outweigh the complete mystery in which the lives of these people are wrapped up down to the end of the life of the Nawab; and I think it quite unsafe to give the rein to mere conjecture and come to the conclusion that there is enough material to find that they are legitimate sons. I think it is unfortunate in some ways that the plaintiffs were ill-advised enough to stick to this most improbable story—which, I have already said, cannot be accepted—of a definite ceremony at Madras in November 1887 or thereabouts and so neglected to call evidence of what Nagir Bee's position was from 1887 onwards. The one person who was qualified above all others to give such evidence, the one person in the world who had the strongest interest for setting up a story of what took place, was Mahfil Nagir Bee herself and she was not called. I cannot really accept the suggestion thrown out regarding her being unable to give evidence from illness. No Judge would have wished to try this case in the absence of the evidence of Mahil Nagir Bee, if she and her side had only pressed for an adjournment. I am convinced that any Court would have adjourned the case to any reasonable extent to get that lady's evidence if she was suffering from sickness. There is nothing to show that any such application was made. In her absence, the appeal of the plaintiffs cannot succeed and the conclusion of the learned Judge must be upheld. The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This matter comes up for further direction on the Assistant Referee's report. The principal question involved in it, is one of costs. The defendant had sued the plaintiffs for arrears of salary amounting to Rs. 1,886-12-6 in the Small Cause Court of Calcutta. The plaintiffs then instituted this suit in this Court for account against the defendant. The suit in the Small Cause Court was removed to this Court for trial with this suit. The plaintiffs represent the estate of the late Mr. Lal Mohan Ghose, and it is the common case of the parties that in 1908, the defendant was the manager of the Bairagadi Estate belonging to the deceased. In answer to the claim of the plaintiffs for account, the defendant in his written statements stated that he was not accountable to the plaintiffs nor had he been accountable to the late Mr. Ghose, inasmuch as he had fully explained to the latter all his dealings with the said estate and the management thereof. The plaintiffs admitted the defendant's claim to Rs. 1,886-12-6 as arrears of salary. A preliminary decree was passed for accounts, which were directed to be taken before the Assistant Referee. In the state of facts filed by the defendant, he showed Rs. 44 or thereabouts as balance due to him. The plaintiffs disputed the accuracy of that account and sought to surcharge and falsify the defendant's state of facts and alleged that he had not accounted for various sums received by him as manager, and that he had entered certain fictitious payments in his account. After a prolonged enquiry extending over 60 days or more, the Assistant Referee has reported that the defendant has failed to account for Rs. 716 out of the moneys collected by him as manager of the said Bairagadi Estate. From the report of the Assistant Referee, which stands confirmed by effluxion of time, it appears that the book most important for the enquiry, viz., the talab-baki, was suppressed by the defendant though he had been called upon to produce it. He has been guilty of suppression of other material documents also. Judging from the Assistant Referee's report, the defendant's conduct deserves the fullest condemnation. His motives have been described by the Assistant Referee as "not honest from the outset." The Court's discretion in the matter of costs, as was explained in Sheo Dyal Tewaree v. Judoonath Tewaree (1), is to be exercised with special reference to all the circumstances of the case, including the conduct of parties. A person who takes up the management of another estate and collects and disburses moneys, has to be ready with his account. His failure to perform the obvious duty, necessitates a suit, and he must pay the plaintiff's costs [Collyer v. Dudley (2)]. In the present suit, it is not merely an unreadiness to account that stands to the discredit of the defendant, but he sets up a deliberately false defence that he was not accountable at all, and, when decreed to render account, submitted a false account and suppressed important documents, thereby hampering and prejudicing the enquiry before the Assistant Referee. In view of the bona fide and honest character of the plaintiffs' suit and the reprehensible conduct of the defendant, I am clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs should be allowed full costs, including costs of and incidental to the enquiry. The case of Ram Gopaul v. Bhojra Mohun (3) is in point. There is also a higher authority in Hurrinath Rai v. Krishna Kumar Bakshi (4), in which their Lordships of the Privy Council ordered the defendant to pay the costs inasmuch as he had taken the untruthful course of denying his receipts, his fiduciary position and his accountability in toto.

Mr. S. R. Das, on behalf of the defendant, objects to costs being allowed to the plaintiffs on the ground that the suit for account should have been filed in the Small Cause Court. He maintains that the Assistant Referee having found that only a sum of Rs. 716 had remained unaccounted for, the claim was well within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, and the plaintiffs, having obtained a decree for less than Rs. 1,000 in this Court, are not entitled to any costs under the provisions of section 22, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. I cannot accede to this contention, inasmuch as the plaintiffs could institute their suit in the Small Cause Court only if they were in a position to appraise its value within the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court, which they could not do on the facts of this case. The sum ascertained by the Assistant Referee has been arrived at by an enquiry. I do not think that a suit for account without a claim to a specific sum within the competence of the Small Cause Court, can lie in that Court. But even if it were conceded that this suit was cognisable by the Small Cause Court, I would not hesitate to certify that it was fit to be brought in the High Court.

For these reasons, I allow full costs on scale No. 2 to the plaintiffs, including reserved costs, if any. The costs will include the enquiry before the Assistant Referee and the Commission at Dacca.

The defendant will get the costs of the Small Cause Court transferred suit on the Small Cause Court scale. To the defendant is decreed the sum of Rs. 1,370-9-7½ from the plaintiffs on account of salary. Out of the said sum, the sum of Rs. 1,17-12-6 will carry interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the Assistant Referee's report till the date it came to be filed.

The amount deposited by the plaintiffs in the Small Cause Court transferred suit, or any portion of it, will not be withdrawn by the defendant till the costs of both parties have been ascertained. The plaintiffs will get the costs of this application.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—After hearing the arguments of the appellants' learned Vakil, I am of opinion that no misconstruction of any documents or the ignoring of any material evidence by the lower Appellate Court has been established. Then, it was contended that the lower Appellate Court had failed to give effect to the doctrine that where a public path is admitted to be the boundary between two estates, the presumption is that the soil up to half the breadth of the road belongs to each estate. Assuming that that presumption is applicable in India, it must be confined to cases where it is clearly proved, or both sides are agreed, that the limits of each village do not extend beyond the offside of the path. In this case, the plaintiffs claimed in their plaint that besides the whole width of the path, something beyond to the west of that breadth belonged to their village and the defendants made a similar claim as regards some breadth east of the path and the Courts could not come to any conclusion on the point. The lower Appellate Court was, therefore, not wrong in refusing to raise any such presumption in this case. This second appeal and the connected second appeal are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

NAPIER, J.—There is no evidence of the date of the origin of this so-called highway. It is a path it may be, a cart track—running between two villages. At one time it must have been within the area of one village or the other as the villages were contiguous. There should have been no difficulty in procuring evidence from the zamin-dari records of the true facts of the case, but no attempt has been made to do this. It is sought to apply the ad medium filæ doctrine in the absence of evidence. I decline to apply it, first, because there is no evidence of any defined limits of this so-called highway and secondly, because the pathway must have been there at the time that both villages were in the same owner and, therefore, the artificial presumption of a grant of half by contiguous land holders, has no application.

Appeal dismissed.

Public Demands Recovery Act (I of 1895), s. 9—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 64, O. An attachment creates no charge or lien upon the attached property, it merely prevents private alienation, but does not confer any title on the attaching creditor. [p. 646, col. 1.]

Where the parties have gone to trial knowing what the real question between them was, the evidence has been adduced and discussed and the Court has decided the point as if there was an issue framed on it, the decision will not be set aside in appeal simply on the ground that no issue was framed on the point, in other words, the mere omission to frame an issue is not fatal to the trial of the suit. [p. 663, col. 2.]

Where, however, the failure to frame the issue has led to an unfair trial or miscarriage of justice, the case will be remanded for re-trial. [p. 666, col. 2.]

MOHIUDDIN V. PIRTHICHAND LAL.

In a suit for a declaration that a certificate sale held under the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act was invalid and of no effect and that the defendants-purchasers had acquired no title to the property, the title of the defendants was expressly attached in the plaint but the issue as framed did not directly and specifically raise the question of the legality of the certificate proceedings. It appeared that the defendants were not taken by surprise in the Courts below but had adduced a considerable body of evidence in support of their title. In appeal, the defendants-appellants urged that the legality of the proceedings under the Public Demands Recovery Act was not raised in the issues framed in the suit and should not be investigated:

Held, that the defendants were not prejudiced in any way and that the objection, as it was neither taken in the Court below nor in the memorandum of appeal, was wholly unsubstantial. [p. 667, col. 1.]

A non-compliance with every requirement of a Statute does not universally make the proceedings a nullity. No hard and fast line can be drawn between a nullity and an irregularity, and when the provision of a Statute has been contravened if a question arises as to how far the proceedings are affected thereby, it must be determined with regard to the nature, scope and object of the particular provision violated. [p. 667, col. 2.]

An Appellate Court should not dismiss a suit on the ground only that the plaint was not duly signed and verified, such a defect does not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. [p. 667, col. 2.]

Therefore, when a requisition under section 9 (1) of the Public Demands Recovery Act is not duly signed and verified under section 9 (2) of the Act, the certificate issued on the basis of such requisition is not void in law. [p. 668, col. 1.]

The obvious intention of section 9 (3) of the Public Demands Recovery Act is that a certificate officer shall use his discretion as to the issue of a certificate, to determine whether the case is a proper one for it, whether the money be due or not. [p. 670, col. 1.]

A certificate in which the amount was not specified and the space intended for the insertion of the figures was left blank and which the certificate officer appeared to have mechanically signed without personal and consideration, is not duly made under the provisions of the Act and a sale held under such a certificate is not valid. [p. 670, col. 2.]

The mere entry in the order sheet of the certificate case that notice has been served is no proof that service was effected. [p. 670, col. 2.]

When the circumstances of the case show that the certificate proceedings have been carried on in a careless or slovenly manner, the Court will be slow to apply the maxim Omnia presumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. [p. 671, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the first party defendants in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The lands in dispute originally belonged to one Syed Ashgar Reza, Khan Bahadur, and the plaintiff as also the first party defendants claim to have acquired his interest, the former by purchase at a sale in execution of a money-decree, the latter by purchase at a sale in execution of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895. The history of the devolution of the interest of the original admitted owner, as alleged by each of the rival claimants, may be briefly stated. Pirthichand, the present plaintiff, in execution of a decree for money against Ashgar Reza made under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, attached the disputed lands on the 6th November 1905. At the execution sale, which followed in due course, he became the purchaser on the 5th February 1907; the sale was confirmed on the 11th May 1907 (Exhibit 5). Meanwhile, the manager of the Khagra Estate under the Court of Wards had, on the 10th October 1904, made a requisition to the Collector of Purneah, under section 9 (1) of the Public Demands Recovery Act, for a certificate with a view to recover from Ashgar Reza a sum of Rs. 4,723 on account of arrears of rent. The Certificate Officer made what purports to be a certificate on the 11th October 1904. Notice under section 10 was thereupon ordered to issue upon the defaulter, and, it is said, was served on him on the 28th October 1904. Before the lands could be sold, Ashgar Reza died, and, on the 16th June 1905, notice was directed to issue on his heirs, his brother and his widow, who are the second party defendants in this litigation. What was intended to be a notice to the heirs of the deceased defaulter but was framed as a notice of a fresh certificate issued against them, is said to have been duly served before the 1st July 1905. The lands were sold to the proprietors of the Khagra Estate for Rs. 800 on the 9th January 1906, and the sale was confirmed on the 12th March 1906. The purchasers are the first party defendants in this suit. It will be observed that the attachment under the decree held by the plaintiff as also the sale held in execution thereof were subsequent to the attachment and sale respectively under the certificate. But when the sale under the certificate was held, there was a valid subsisting attachment on the lands under the decree of the plaintiff. This, however, is of no assistance to the plaintiff, because the purchasers at the sale under the certificate, have not acquired the property subject to the right of the plaintiff, if any, under his attachment. It is well settled that the attachment creates no charge or lien upon the attached property; it merely prevents private alienation; it does not confer any title on the attaching creditor: Idoti Lal v. Kurrabuddin (1), Raghunath Das v. Sunwar Das (2), Soolul Chunder v. Russick Lal (3), Mandalaswara Katari v. Prayag Dossji (4). Consequently as the first party defendants purchased the property on the 9th January 1905, if the sale was validly held under the Public Demands Recovery Act, there was no interest subsisting in the judgment-debtor when the plaintiff purchased at the sale held in execution of his decree on the 5th February 1907. Thus the substantial question in controversy between the rival claimants is, whether the sale held on the 9th January 1905 was valid and operative under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The Subordinate Judge has answered this question against the defendants and has decreed the suit. On the present appeal the point for consideration is, whether the certificate sale, which is the root of the title of the defendants, is valid and operative in law. But before we examine this question, it is necessary to advert for a moment to a preliminary point urged by the appellants.

The appellants have contended that the question of the legality of the proceedings under the Public Demands Recovery Act was not raised in the issues framed in the suit and should not be investigated. It may be conceded that the issues as framed, do not directly and specifically raise the question of the legality of the certificate proceedings; that fact, however, does not necessarily show that the point is not open for consideration. The principle applicable in these circumstances was formulated by Sir James Colville in Musammam Mitua v. Fuzl Rub (5). That principle is that where the parties have gone to trial knowing what the real question between them was, the evidence has been adduced and discussed, and the Court has decided the point as if there was an issue framed on it, the decision will not be set aside in appeal simply on the ground that no issue was framed on the point; in other words, as Selwyn, L. J., observed in Katchekalyana v. Kachicayaya (6), the mere omission to frame an issue is not fatal to the trial of the suit. On the other hand, as Lord Westbury held in Baloo Revun Pershad v. Jankee Pershad (7), where the failure to frame the issue has led to an unfair trial or miscarriage of justice the case will be remanded for re-trial. These principles have been repeatedly applied, as illustrated by the cases of Soorjomonee v. Suddanund (8), Chandra Kunwar v. Narpal Singh (9), Perladh v. Bronghton (10), Muttayan v. Sangili (11), Mohomed Basiroollah v. Ahmed Ali (12), Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Muhammad (13), Secretary of State v. Dipchand (14), Balmakund v. Dalu (15). Tested in the light of these principles, the objection urged by the appellants proves to be wholly groundless. The title of the defendants was expressly attached in the plaint, and the plaintiff specifically sought a declaration that the certificate sale was invalid and of no effect and that the defendants had acquired no title to the properties in suit. The course of the trial in the Court below gives ample indication that the parties have directed evidence to this point and the matter has been elaborately discussed by the Subordinate Judge. There is no trace of any objection taken by the defendants to the investigation of this question, and it is remarkable that the objection does not find a place in any of the twenty grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court. Consequently, under Order XLI, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, the appellants are not entitled to urge this ground, except by leave of the Court. This Court might in its discretion have refused such leave, but the point was allowed to be argued as it was felt that if the defendants were really taken by surprise in the Court below, the case might be re-tried. On investigation, however, it appears that not only were they not taken by surprise, but they adduced a considerable body of evidence in support of their title. We hold accordingly that the defendants have not been prejudiced in any way, that the objection, neither taken in the Court below nor in the memorandum of appeal here, is wholly unsubstantial.

In the investigation of the question of the legality of the certificate proceedings, on which the title of the defendants rests, the successive stages may be usefully recapitulated. In the first place, a requisition for a certificate is made under section 9 (1). In the second place, a certificate is made by the Certificate Officer under section 9 (3). In the third place, a copy of the certificate and a notice in the prescribed form are required to be issued to the judgment-debtor under section 10 (1) and to be served upon him in the manner specified in section 31. In the fourth place, the certificate is enforced under section 19 (2) and executed in the manner provided by the Code of Civil Procedure for the enforcement of decrees for money. We shall now investigate what steps were taken to comply with the statutory requirements at each of these stages, and the legal effect of the omission, if any, to carry out strictly the directions given by the Legislature.

As regards the first step, it has been pointed out by the respondent that the requisition is not signed as required by section 9 (2), and it has also been contended that it was not verified by the manager of the Khagra Estate, though this latter assertion has not been made out. Section 9

(2) provides that every requisition mentioned in sub-section 1 shall be signed and verified by the officer in authority or manager making it in accordance with the provisions of Order VI, rules 14 and 15, of the Civil Procedure Code as to the verification of plaints. In the present case, the requisition is not signed by the manager, as is clear if Exhibit K is contrasted with Form No. 3 in the Schedule appended to the Public Demands Recovery Act. It has been argued that the requisition was neither signed nor verified by the manager or by any duly authorised person on his behalf and that consequently all subsequent proceedings on the basis of the requisition must be deemed a nullity, as the requisition takes the place of a plaint in a regular suit. We are not prepared to give effect to this contention. It was pointed out in the case of Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal (16) that it cannot be affirmed as a proposition of law of universal application that non-compliance with every requirement of a Statute makes the proceedings a nullity, and illustrations were given of cases where the violation of an express provision of a Statute may not nullify the proceedings as also of cases in which failure to comply with statutory directions may completely vitiate the proceedings. No hard and fast line can be drawn between a nullity and an irregularity, and when the provision of a Statute has been contravened, if a question arises as to how far the proceedings are affected thereby, it must be determined with regard to the nature, scope and object of the particular provision violated. Now in the case of a plaint which is required to be signed and verified, it has been held that if it has not been duly signed or verified, the plaintiff may be allowed to remedy the defect, if discovered, at any stage in the primary Court or in the Appellate Court, but the Appellate Court should not dismiss the suit on the ground of such defect; the reason is that the defect does not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court: Mohini Mohun Das v. Bungsi Budhan Saha (17), Basdeo v. Smilt (18) Rajit Ram v. Atesar Nath (19) and Fateh

MOHIUDDIN T. FIRTHICHAND LAL.

Chand v. Mansab Rai (20). There is no good reason why a different principle should be applied to requisitions under section 9 (1). The provision in section 9 (3) that the Certificate Officer may take action "on receipt of such requisition," that is, a requisition duly signed and verified under section 9 (2), does not necessarily show that if he proceeds on the basis of a defective requisition, the certificate he makes is void in law. If the contrary view were adopted, it would follow by analogy that the decree in a suit instituted on a defective plaint is a nullity. We must consequently overrule the contention of the respondent that the defect in the requisition in this case affected the jurisdiction of the Certificate Officer and nullified all the proceedings taken by him. It cannot be disputed, however, that the defect in the requisition was but the initial step in a series of deviations from the requirements of the Statute.

As regards the second step, it has been argued that no valid certificate was made by the Certificate Officer in this case. Section 9 (3) provides that on receipt of the requisition the Certificate Officer, if satisfied that the demand mentioned therein is justly recoverable, may make, under his hand and in Form No. 2 in the Schedule annexed to the Act, a certificate of the amount of such demand remaining unpaid, together with the cost of any Court-fee paid in respect of the requisition under sub-section 2, and shall cause the same to be filed in his office. The form mentioned shows that the name and address of the debtor, the amount of the public demand for which the certificate is made, together with the particulars thereof and the name of the person deemed to be the decree-holder are to be set out in a tabular statement; then follows the actual certificate in these terms:—"I hereby certify that the above mentioned sum of Rs..... is due to the Secretary of State for India in Council, or to A B, a Ward of Court, or a minor or a lunatic by his next friend C D, or, as the case may be, from the above-named. Dated this..... day of..... 19. A. B, Certificate Officer (20) 20 A. 442; A. W. N. (1898) 110.

of....." It is plain³ that the space left blank for the insertion of the amount for which the certificate is to be made, must be filled up before the certificate is signed: the various alternatives given for the person from or to whom the amount is due, must also be struck out, except the one applicable to the circumstances of the particular case. In the case before us, the certificate was signed as given in the printed form as follows:—"I hereby certify that the amount specified above Rs..... is justly due to the Secretary of State for India in Council or manager of Estate Board Adulat or minor or lunatic or, as the case may be, from the above-named person." The certified copy of the certificate on the record does not specify the amount for which it is made nor the persons to whom it was due. The respondent has suggested that although the blank space left for the insertion of the amount was not filled up, the amount might, as a matter of fact, be ascertained from the information given in the tabular statement. On careful examination of the figures given in the fourth and fifth columns of the tabular statement, this turns out, however, to be impracticable. The fifth column shows that the total amount of arrears of rent and cess is Rs. 4,190-11-2, while the aggregate amount due for rent, cess, dak-cess and interest is Rs. 4,723-5-8½. This figure also appears at the top of the right hand portion of the fourth column, which is headed "Amount of the public demand for which this certificate is made." Then follow several entries on account of process-fee, stamp and Court-fee, which make up a total of Rs. 208-7-0. This, added to the figure brought from the fifth column, gives an aggregate of Rs. 4,931-12-8½. Then follow four other items on account of stamp and paper, which make up Rs. 61-1-3. This gives a total of Rs. 4,992-13-11½. It is impossible from the certified copy to say how many of these entries had been made before the certificate was signed by the Certificate Officer. There are also other entries in the fourth column, some of which at any rate must have been made after the certificate had been signed, for instance, items as to interest which had accrued due during the year 1905-07. It is consequently impossible to say to what precise figure in the tabular statement reference was intended to be made by the expression "the above-mentioned sum of Rs." in the certificate. It is remarkable, however, that none of the possible figures, namely, Rs. 4,190-11-2, Rs. 4,723-5-8 $\frac{1}{2}$, Rs. 4,931-12-8 $\frac{1}{2}$ and Rs. 4,992-13-11 $\frac{1}{2}$ agrees with what would be the correct figure according to the law. Under section 9 (3), the certificate is to be made for the amount of demand remaining unpaid together with the cost of Court-fee paid in respect of the requisition under section 9 (2). If it be assumed that the amount of demand unpaid was Rs. 4,723-5-8 $\frac{1}{2}$ as to which, however, we have no information, the amount for which the certificate could be validly made was Rs. 4,988-5-8 $\frac{1}{2}$, inasmuch as Rs. 265 was the Court-fee paid on the requisition. It is thus plain that from the certified copy of the certificate it is impossible to determine the precise amount for which the certificate was intended to be made. In these circumstances, we decided to send for the original certificate from the Collectorate with a view to ascertain the condition of the certificate when it was first made, by discriminating, if possible, the entries originally made from those subsequently added. The original certificate which has been received after considerable delay, is, however, of no assistance, for, as we shall presently explain, it bears indication of interpolations made very probably after the close of the arguments in this appeal. What is shown in the certified copy as blank space for insertion of the amount, has been filled up by the figures Rs. 4,623-5-9 $\frac{1}{2}$. There is little room for doubt that these figures were not in the certificate when first drawn up. In the first place, as already stated, the space is blank in the certified copy which was prepared on the 19th August 1909, compared with the original on the 17th March 1910 and certified to be a true copy on the 18th March 1910. The copy was filed by the plaintiff and was used as evidence on behalf of the defendants. They would never have relied on the certified copy as correct, if there had been a variation in such a material particular between the copy and the original. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge shows that before him the validity of the certificate was attacked on the ground that it did not specify the amount; the defendants would surely have asked the Court to send for the original if the latter did in fact specify the amount, or have procured a correct copy of it. In the second place, the amount as inserted in the certificate reads as Rs. 4,623-5-8 $\frac{1}{2}$ which does not agree with Rs. 4,723-5-8 $\frac{1}{2}$ shown in columns 4 and 5 of the tabular statement. If the figures in the certificate be read as Rs. 4,723 instead of Rs. 4,623, it is obvious that they could not have been written by the same person as made the entries in columns 4 and 5. The figure "7" occurs in several places in column 5, and is uniformly different in form from the second figure in the amount in the certificate. On the other hand, it has some similarity with "7" as written by the copyist who prepared the certified copy on the record. In the third place, the figures inserted in the certificate, if read as Rs. 4,623, not only do not agree with any of the totals mentioned in columns 4 and 5, they are different from what would be the correct sum due. We must consequently proceed on the assumption on which the case was tried in the Court below, namely, that as shown by the certified copy of the certificate, it did not specify the amount and left blank the space intended for the insertion of the figures; it is also impracticable to ascertain the original condition of the certificate. It is plain from the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Abdul Hai v. Guiraj Sahai (21), which affirms the decision in Guiraj Sahai v. Secretary of State (22), and Bair Nath Sahai v. Ramgat Singh (23), which affirms the decision in Bair Nath Sahai v. Ramgat Singh (24), that a certificate drawn up as the present one has been, cannot be made the foundation for valid proceedings against the property of the defaulter. Lord Davey, in the case last mentioned, after referring to the provisions of the Act and holding that if no certificate is given in accordance with the Statute, the whole basis of the proceedings for the sale is cut away, observed as follows :—"It is obvious that those are very stringent provisions. The proceeding in the first instance is apparently ex parte. The certificate is to be made by the Collector in a certain form and filed, and when the certificate is filed, it has the effect of a decree against the persons named as debtors in the certificate so far as regards the remedies for enforcing it, and when served, it also binds their immoveable property. It is unnecessary to point out the necessity there is, when power is given to a public officer to sell the property of any of Her Majesty's subjects, that the forms required by the Act, which are matters of substance, should be complied with, and that if the certificate is to have the extraordinary effect of a decree against the persons named in it as debtors and to have the effect of binding their immoveable property, at least it should be in a form, such as provided by the Act, which enables any person who reads it to see who the judgment-creditor is, what is the sum for which the judgment is given, and that those particulars should be certified by the hand of the proper officer appointed by the Act for the purpose. If no such certificate is given, then the whole basis of the proceeding is gone. There is no judgment, there is nothing corresponding to a judgment or decree for payment of the amount, and there is no foundation for the sale. The authority to proceed to the sale is based on the certificate which has the effect of a judgment or decree, and if no judgment or decree is given, and no certificate is filed having the force or effect of a judgment or decree, there can be no valid sale at all." It is further clear that the Certificate Officer must have, in the present case, mechanically signed the printed form without perusal and consideration. In this connection, the observations of Pigot, J., in Bajinath Sahai v. Ramkut Sin h (24) are relevant: "The sub-section does not require the Certificate Officer to issue the certificate, the word used is 'may'. The obvious intention is that he shall use his discretion as to the issue of a certificate, to determine whether the case is a proper one for it, whether the money be due or not." There is little doubt that in the present case, what Pigot, J., describes as the "chief safeguard of the Act, the personal care of the officer entrusted with this duty" had failed. It follows that there was no valid sale, as there was no certificate duly made under the provisions of the Act. In this view, it is needless to examine in detail the other objections which have been taken to the regularity of the certificate proceedings, but a brief reference may be made to them to illustrate the carelessness which throughout characterises these proceedings.

As regards the third step, it is necessary to observe that after the certificate has been filed in the office of the Certificate Officer, he is required to issue to the judgment-debtor a copy of the certificate and a notice in Form No. 4 prescribed in the Schedule to the Act. The papers as to return of service in the certificate case have been destroyed in accordance with the rules for the destruction of Court records. The defendants have consequently been constrained to adduce oral evidence to prove that service was effected in the manner laid down in section 31. The defendants are bound to prove service of notice and copy of certificate, because the mere entry in the order-sheet of the certificate case that notice has been served is no proof that service was effected: Mir Tapura v. Gopi Narayan (25), Radhay Koer v. Ajodhya Das (26) and Ananda Kishore v. Daiji Thakurain (27). The Subordinate Judge has disbelieved the evidence of service of notice. We are not disposed to agree with him on this point. The witnesses pledge their oath that the notice was taken to Ashgar Reza, who directed it to be taken to his principal officer. There is no good reason why this testimony should be discredited. No weight can be attached to the circumstance that a claim was not put forward to the attached property by the wives of the judgment-debtor, in whose favour he had executed deeds in lieu of their dower. The story of service, as narrated by the witnesses, seems probable, and we are not prepared to reject it as mythical. Nor are we prepared to agree with the Subordinate Judge that personal service was not effected in accordance with section 31 on Ashgar Reza. What happened was that the notice was tendered to him by one of his servants to whom it had been made over by the Collectorate peon. He directed the notice to be taken to his officer, Nasiruddin. The notice was then handed over to Nasiruddin, who gave the usual receipt. This was clearly full compliance with the requirements of section 31, which provides that service shall be made by delivering or tendering a copy of the notice to the judgment-debtor; this was done in the present case. But it cannot be overlooked that there is no evidence that a copy of the certificate itself was, as required by section 10 (1), served upon the judgment-debtor. Even the entry in the order-sheet makes no mention of the issue of a copy of the certificate. The defendants have contended that a presumption should be made in favour of the regularity of the proceedings; but, as was pointed out by Pigot, J., in Guiraj Sahai v. Secretary of State (22) and by Lord Watson in Mahomed Abdul Hai v. Guiraj Sahai (21), when the circumstances of the case show that the proceedings have been carried on in a careless or slovenly manner, the Court will be slow to apply the maxim omnia presumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. If the copy of the certificate was not served as required by section 10, there could be no valid sale: Puran Chandra v. Dinabandhu (28). The requirements of section 10 must be strictly carried out to give the Certificate Officer jurisdiction to sell the property of the defaulter, because it is only after they have been fulfilled that a sale can be held.

As regards the fourth step, it is plain that the notice issued upon the heirs of the judgment-debtor was irregular. Exhibit 22 purports to be a notice to the heirs of the judgment-debtor under section 10 and recites that a certificate for Rs. 5,345 had been made against them on the 16th June 1905. This was a mis-statement, for which there was no foundation whatever. There is no trace of a certificate made against the addressees on the 16th June 1905. Consequently, though it is recited in the notice that a copy of the certificate mentioned was annexed, none could have been sent. As Lord Davey said in the case already mentioned, notice that a certificate has been made, is not equivalent to a certificate having been made, and if there was no certificate, then notice to the proprietor (28) 11 C. W. N. 756; 34 C. 511; 5 C. L. J. 696; 2 M. L. T. 871.

that a certificate had been made and filed could not be a compliance with the Act. It is a matter for surprise that even long after the strong condemnation of irregularities in certificate proceedings by this Court and by the Judicial Committee in the cases mentioned, they should be characterised by carelessness as evidenced in the case before us.

We hold accordingly that there was no valid and operative certificate made in compliance with the statutory requirements and that the sale at which the defendants made their purchase did not affect the right, title and interest of the judgment debtors, which subsequently vested in the plaintiff. The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1871), s. 92, proviso 1—Mutual mistake as to description of land in registered mortgage-deed, whether can be proved by oral evidence—Construction of deed Rights of bona fide purchasers for value.

Oral evidence is admissible under proviso 1 to section 92 of the Evidence Act to prove a mutual mistake made in the description of a piece of land in a registered mortgage-deed. [p. 672, col. 1.]

A Court can, on reception of such evidence, treat the instrument as rectified, and proceed on that assumption, though no suit for rectification of the instrument is brought under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act, provided that the rights of third persons acquired in good faith and for value, are not prejudiced thereby. Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that a mutual mistake made in describing a piece of land in a registered mortgage-deed can be proved by oral evidence (section 92, proviso 1, of the Evidence Act) and that when such a mistake is so established, the deed can be construed by the Courts as if the mistake had been rectified, without the instrument having been actually ordered to be rectified in a suit brought for the purpose under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act, subject to the condition that the rights of third persons acquired in good faith and for value should not be prejudiced thereby. [See also Mahadeva Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar (1).] We, therefore, uphold the learned Subordinate Judge's decision in establishing the rights of the 3rd and 4th defendants as mortgagees of D. No. 196 seri land. But he should not have released the entire interest in the land, and we modify his decree by giving a declaration to plaintiff that he is entitled to attach and sell it subject to the mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 3 and 4. We shall make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Waiver—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 75—Instalment bond, consent not to sue on failure to pay instalment, if would amount to waiver.

Waiver is consent to dispense with or forego something to which a person is entitled. [p. 674, col. 1.]

Where it was proved that demand was made in three successive years in respect of three instalments due upon an instalment bond, but the plaintiff consented not to sue for the whole amount, as he was entitled to do under the bond, for default on the first two occasions but refused to consent on the third:

Held, that this amounted to a waiver of the payment of the two earlier instalments. [p. 674, col. 2.]

When the instalment bond was executed on the 6th of November 1908 and provided payment of Rs. 10,000 by annual instalments of Rs. 400, commencing from the 30th of September 1909, and further that in case of default the whole amount payable on the bond was to fall due, and the plaintiff waived the payment of the first two instalments as aforesaid and filed a suit for the recovery of the whole amount on the 12th of November 1914:

Held, that his suit was not barred by limitation and it was decreed for Rs. 9,200. [p. 674, col. 2.]

Mr. Rasul, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit on an unregistered instalment bond executed by the defendant on the 6th November 1908. It is for a sum of Rs. 10,000 payable in annual instalments of Rs. 400, commencing from the 30th September 1909 (not 1899 as appears by mistake in the bond), it being agreed between the parties that in case of default of payment of the instalments, there was to be "immediate payment of the sum of Rs. 10,000, or the unpaid part thereof or the unpaid instalment with interest from the date of default." After reciting the agreement aforesaid, the third clause of the bond runs thus: "In case the said yearly payments of principal shall from any cause whatever not be paid upon the day hereinbefore mentioned for such payment, the said Rawatmull, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns shall forthwith pay to Golab Roy, Bhuramull and Ghanesham Dass, their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns the whole balance then remaining unpaid of the said sum of Rs. 10,000 or at the option of the said Golab Roy, Bhuramull and Ghanesham Dass, their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns the unpaid instalment with interest thereof at the rate of nine annas per cent. per annum."

The plaintiff states in the third paragraph of the the plaint that "the defendant failed and neglected to pay any of the said instalments. The plaintiff firm did not claim with the knowledge and consent of the defendant the whole of the said sum of Rs. 10,000 on failure to pay the first and second instalments in respect thereof, and they submit that they are entitled to recover the said sum of Rs. 10,000 with interest thereon at the rate aforesaid on the failure on the part of the defendant to pay the third instalment in respect thereof under this bond."

* The report of this case has been taken from the Calcutta Weekly Notes with permission.—Ed.

RAM CHANDER BANERJEE P. RAWATMULL.

The defendant in his written statement denies the agreement, and says that he signed the bond "under mental and bodily distress and under the coercion or influence of the plaintiff firm without understanding its purport or contents." In answer to the third paragraph of the plaint, the defendant denies that he consented "that the plaintiff firm should not claim the whole of the sum of Rs. 10,000 on his failure to pay the first and second instalments." He alleges that no demand was ever made from him and submits that under the circumstances, the plaintiff's claim should be held barred by the Statute of Limitations. The only issue raised by him at the hearing was as regards limitation, the suit being filed on 12th November 1913 after the re-opening of the Court after the long vacation. It was argued on his behalf that under Article 75, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act, the period of three years ran from the date of the first default, namely, the 30th September 1909. It was argued that this was not a case of waiver at all as no payment of any overdue instalment had been alleged, and that according to the rulings of this Court in Hurri Pershad Chowdhry v. Nasib Singh (1) and Jadab Chandra Bakshi v. Bhairab Chandra Chuckerbutty (2), amongst others, there could be no waiver so as to affect limitation save by payment and acceptance of an overdue instalment. A large number of other cases was referred to. It is only necessary to refer to some of them. Mon Mohun Roy v. Durga Churn Goose (3), sums up the current of decisions up to that date. Wilson, J., in discussing the case of Cheni Bask Sha'a v. Kudum Mundel (4) held "it was unnecessary and unprofitable to enquire how he might decide a question of the kind if it were a new question, as it was a question which had arisen many times in the course of a number of years; that it was all-important in a matter of this kind that the current of decisions should be uniform and consistent and should be strictly adhered to." Then he discussed various cases and held that under Article 179 of the old Limitation Act, limitation ran from the time when default in payment of the first instalment was made, in consequence of which, the whole amount became due basing his decision on the Full Bench ruling in Hurronath Roy v. Mahesoolah Mollah (5). The learned Judge further said "there has, however, been engrafted upon that general rule an exception in certain cases. That exception I understand to be this, that if the right to enforce payment of the whole sum due upon default being made in the payment of an instalment, has been waived by subsequent payment of the overdue instalment on the one hand and receipt on the other, then, the penalty having been waived, the parties are remitted to the same position as they would have been in if no default had occurred." The next case I shall deal with is that of Girindra Mohun Roy Chowdhury v. Bocka Das (6) which discusses all the earlier cases including the case above referred to. The learned Judges sum up the discussion in these words: "The preponderance of the authorities supported by the decision of the Full Bench quoted above, Hurronath Roy v. Mahesoolah Mollah (5), is to the effect, that in the case of instalment bonds with the stipulation of the whole debt becoming due on the failure of payment of a certain instalment, limitation would begin to run from the date of the non-payment of that instalment, unless there has been a waiver by the decree-holder by the acceptance of the overdue instalment. In view of the conflicting rulings on the subject of waiver, we feel bound to follow the decision of the Full Bench in Hurronath Roy v. Maheroollah Mollah (5)... We hold that mere abstinence on the part of the plaintiff in this case from bringing a suit for the recovery of the whole amount due on the failure of the payment of the first two instalments, did not amount to waiver." That sums up the state of the law on the subject to far as our Court is concerned. In Hurri Pershad Chowdhry v. Nasib Singh (1) and in Jadab Chandra Bakshi v. Bhairab Chandra Chuckerbutty (2) the learned Judges have, however, held that "there cannot be any waiver so as to affect limitation save by payment and acceptance of an overdue instalment." This seems to me to unduly restrict the meaning of the term "waiver." It is an expression of wide application and significance, therefore, difficult to define. It is quite clear, however, upon the authorities that mere abstinence from suing is not waiver; but that there may not be any other means of waiving, except by acceptance of an overdue instalment, I am not prepared to accept until there is such uniformity in the decisions on that point as to compel adherence. In dealing with the question of the waiver of a notice under a covenant in a mortgage-deed in Selwyn v. Garfit (7), Bowen, L. J., defined waiver in this way: "What is waiver? Delay is not waiver. Inaction is not waiver, though it may be evidence of waiver. Waiver is consent to dispense with the notice." This may be paraphrased thus. Waiver is consent to dispense with or forego something to which a person is entitled. It seems to me that such consent may be by express agreement between the parties, or implied from the receipt of an overdue instalment. See also Kankuchand Shir Chand v. Rustomji Hormusji (8). In Abinash Chandra Bose v. Bama Bewa (9), Chitty and Carnduff, JJ., did not "concur in the opinion which had been expressed in one or two of the cases cited before them", referring to Hurri Pershad Chowdhry v. Nasib Singh (1) and Jadab Chandra Bakshi v. Bhairab

Chandra Chuckerbutty (2), "that waiver can be effected only by acceptance of subsequent instalments. Waiver of such condition may be effected in a variety of ways and may be inferred from various circumstances. It must, however, always depend on some definite act or forbearance on the plaintiff's part." I respectfully agree with that opinion. Here the plaintiff has examined three witnesses as to what happened when demand was made from the defendant on three occasions. The plaintiff firm consented to waive their benefit under the instalment bond, namely, consented not to sue for the whole sum on default on the part of the defendant of the first two instalments. They did so in two successive years, but that on the third occasion, the firm refused to consent any further. The defendant has sworn to the contrary, but I am unable to accept his evidence. Waiver of this character ought no doubt to be proved by satisfactory evidence. I hold that there is such satisfactory evidence in this case, but having regard to the fact that the payment of the first two instalments was waived, I give a decree in favour of the defendant for the sum of Rs. 9,200 with interest at 9 per cent. from 1st October 1911 to date of suit and with costs on scale No. II.

JUDGMENT.

IN APPEAL NO. 47 OF 1913.

WALLIS, C. J.—The only question of any difficulty in this case is whether Exhibit VI is to be construed as effecting a division in status as well as a division of the specific properties with which it deals expressly. This appears to me to be mainly a question of the construction of the document. In Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar (1), where a partial partition of property was held to raise a presumption of division in status, there was no deed of partition and I do not think that case is an authority for holding that wherever the co-parceners execute a document dividing a particular item of property that raises a presumption that they intended to become divided in status. If such a presumption is to be raised, there must, in my opinion, be something else in the document to raise it. This was a case of partition between the 1st defendant and his father, the 1st defendant being the son by the second of the father's three wives, and the partition was brought about by the father who was ill and anxious to make provisions for his first and third wives, as he did immediately afterwards in the Will, Exhibit VII, which he executed on the 3rd of September, the partition deed, Exhibit VI, having been executed on the 25th August. Whereas the partition deed appears to have included expressly all the joint family properties except the outstanding decrees and debts which were not mentioned and were considerable, the Will bequeathes to the two wives not only the moveable and immoveable properties taken by the testator under the partition deed, Exhibit VI, but also "all the moveable and immoveable properties, outstanding loans and properties belonging to me at present but not included in this Will and the moveable and immoveable properties and outstanding loans and properties which I may hereafter acquire." This shows, if proof were necessary, that at the time of Exhibit VI all parties must have been perfectly well aware of the existence of other joint family properties which were not included in the partition deed and the question, in my opinion, is whether from the terms of the deed we can gather that it was the intention of the parties to remain joint or become separate as to these items also. I do not think any strong presumption arises from the situation of the parties who were father and son. If the father was anxious to partition all the joint family properties with a view to leaving his share to his two wives, it is strange he did not do so expressly and it has been argued that such was not his intention and that he probably thought that the Rs. 20,000 he took under the deed, would be sufficient for these wives, and was willing that his son should take the rest by survivorship. As against this, there is the recital in the deed that there had been differences between the 1st defendant and his father as well as between the women of the family. On the whole, I do not think it is safe to draw any inference as to the motives actuating the parties. The partition deed, however, after providing for the division of the scheduled properties, goes on: "as we have effected partition in this manner," and provides that the 1st defendant's mother who had been living in his family, should be maintained by him and not by her husband. I have come to the conclusion, though not without hesitation, that these provisions are sufficient to enable us to raise a presumption that the parties intended to become divided in interest and that the decrees and outstanding debts were not divided then simply because they had not been collected and it was not possible to make a satisfactory division then, as it could not be foretold what they would realize. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

IN APPEAL NO. 243 OF 1914.

This case follows my decision in Appeal No. 47 of 1913, and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

IN APPEAL NO. 47 OF 1913.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree. Mr. Rangachariar frankly conceded that in the face of the overwhelming evidence there is regarding the consent of his client to the division, he is not prepared to argue that the partition was brought about by undue influence.

The only question remaining for consideration is whether the father and son were divided in status with reference to the outstandings not specifically mentioned in the deed of partition. In my opinion, the language of the document shows that the parties to it were no longer to remain joint. It says, (a) we have lived hitherto as members of a joint family; (b) that owing to differences among females, it has become necessary to effect a partition; (c) we shall effect a partition in respect of the undermentioned properties. The list of outstandings is not among the properties mentioned in the schedule. It has also to be mentioned, as pointed out by Mr. Rangachariar, that the usual clause "that from this day forward there shall not be property relationship, but only blood relationship" is not to be found in this document. Nonetheless, I am of opinion that the intention of the parties was to get separated from each other; the reason for the necessity is given in the document. The 1st defendant is the son by one of the wives who was not living with her husband, and the pleadings and the evidence in this case show that the father effected the partition with a view to devise his share of the properties to his other two wives. I am unable to see that the father had any object in allowing particular portions of the property to continue as joint property. The explanation suggested by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar for their omission from the schedule is the most natural one. There were debts and decrees. It was apparently thought that the moneys should be apportioned as they were recovered. Some may have been or proved to be bad debts and it was not thought expedient to divide the debts at that time.

On principle, I am clear that the father and son became divided in status. It is pointed out by Mr. Ghose in his Hindu Law that there is nothing in the Smritis to encourage a partial partition. The practice has grown up in recent years. Mr. Mitra in his Tagore Lectures dealing with this special question quotes from the Smritis and commentaries to show that partial partition was unknown to Hindu Law. I do not think it necessary to quote excerpts from the texts to substantiate this position (see Mitra on the Law of Partition, pages 330 and 331).

As regards the decided cases Sir Richard Garth in Radha Churn Das v. Kripa Sindhu Das (2) says: "It seems indeed very doubtful whether by the Hindu Law any partial partition of the family property can take place except by arrangement." The decisions in Satya Kumar Banerjee v. Satya Kirpal Banerjee (3), Bhowani Prosad Shaha v. Jagannath Shaha (4) and Ajodhya Pershad v. Mahadeo Pershad (5) prove that with the consent of the co-parceners a partial partition is possible. The decisions in Timmie Reddy v. Achamma (6) and Kandasami v. Doraisami Aiyar (7) only say that there can be a partial partition. On the other hand in Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Aiyasami Aiyar (1), it was clearly laid down that when once a partition was made, the presumption is that it effected a complete severance of interests. This was followed in Sundaramma v. Kamakotiah (8). In Anandibai v. Hari Suba Pai (9), Chandavarkar, J., says: "If it is proved that there has been a breach in the state of union, the law presumes that there has been a complete partition both as to parties and property."

BISWA NATH SINHA v. BIDHUMUKHI DAS.

The presumption in question continues until it is rebutted by proof of an agreement, which means proof of intention on the part of some to remain united as before and to confine the partition to the rest, or, if the partition was intended to extend to the interest of all individually, there must be proof that some of them re-united." I entirely agree. The recent decision of the Judicial Committee in Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (10) indicates that when one member intimates his willingness to get separated from the others, that would effect a division in status. In the present case, there was an agreement to become divided in consequence of misunderstandings among the female members of the family. I am unable to hold that the status of co-parcenary was intended to be continued with regard to the properties not specifically dealt with in the partition deed. It is conceded that apart from the language of the document there is no evidence to prove that the parties intended to remain joint with reference to the properties not specifically mentioned. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 54, 31—Order by District Judge allowing Hindu widow to take out compensation money deposited by Collector—Appeal, if maintainable.

No appeal lies under section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act from an order made by the District Judge allowing a Hindu widow to take out compensation money deposited in the District Judge's Court by the Collector under section 31 of the Act. [p. 677, col. 2.]

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A dwelling house belonging to a Hindu widow was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. The compensation money amounting to Rs. 5,800 odd was sent by the Collector to the District Judge under section 31 of the Land Acquisition Act. Upon the lady making the application for taking out that money for the purpose of building a house to live in, there was an objection at first on behalf of the reversioner; but ultimately, the reversioner gave his consent to the money in deposit being invested by the Court under section 32 (a) of the Land Acquisition Act for the construction of a suitable building. This consent was given upon an application of the lady for paying out the money to her. The order No. 14 shows that "the Pleader for the opposite party intimated that he had no objection to the permission being granted to the petitioner to withdraw the money in deposit for the construction of a suitable building for the petitioner." After this order was made to pay out the money, there was an application for review by the opposite party, but that was disallowed, and ultimately the money was paid out upon taking a surety bond from a third person and from the lady. Against this order allowing the lady to take out the money in this way, there was an appeal to this Court and also an application for revision. A preliminary objection was taken on the ground that an appeal was incompetent, and we think the preliminary objection is sound because under section 54 of the Act no appeal lies from an order of this nature made by the District Judge. Dealing with the case, however, under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we think that there have been some just reasons for complaint in the proceedings of the Court below. Although a large amount of money has been paid out for the purpose of a building, no plan or estimate has been taken and the surety bond that has been taken is worded so indefinitely that in case of loss there may be no chance of recovering any amount that may be lost. As the reversioner consented to the money being paid out, we are not inclined to alter the order that has been passed for paying the money.

We must, however, arrange for a safeguard against the misapplication of the money. We, therefore, direct that the learned Judge will enquire into the title in respect of the land that has been acquired by the lady for building a house in the presence of the reversioner. Then the lady will put in a plan and an estimate which will be passed by the learned Judge in the presence of the reversioner. Then a new surety bond will have to be filed within a time fixed by the Court, and the sufficiency of the security is to be tested in the presence of the reversioner; and the surety will be made liable for the misappropriation of the money and for the construction of the building according to the plan and estimate to be filed within a time to be fixed by the Court. When the house is completed, the lady should report the completion of the building to the Court and also file the accounts; and if there is any objection as to the plan not being properly carried out in accordance with the estimate, the Judge will hear the objection, decide the same and pass proper orders. If there is any money left, it will be deposited in Court for being dealt with in accordance with law.

In view of the results of the two proceedings, we make no order as to costs.

The appeal is dismissed and the rules are disposed of as stated above.

Appeal dismissed; Rules made partly absolute.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92 Oral sale in discharge of mortgage-debt whether admissible in suit for redemption—Nature of possession by mortgagee—Prescription.

The plaintiff sued for redemption of a mortgage and for accounts from the defendants as mortgagees in possession. The defendants set up an oral sale by the mortgagor in discharge of the mortgage-debt, and adverse possession for more than the statutory period. The plaintiff's suit having been dismissed, he appealed on the grounds that the plea of oral sale was res judicata by reason of the decision in a previous suit and that oral evidence of the alleged sale was inadmissible.

Held, (1) that the existence of the oral sale not being directly and substantially in issue and not having been finally decided in the previous suit, the question was not res judicata; [p. 680, col. 1; p. 682, col. 2.]

(2) (Spencer, J., dissenting) that the oral agreement was sought to be proved not as modifying the mortgage, but in order to prove the nature of possession taken by the mortgagee and oral evidence, therefore, was admissible; [p. 68, col. 2.]

(3) that the defendants' possession had been all along adverse as against the mortgagor and that they had acquired a title by prescription. [p. 681, col. 2.]

Per Phillips, J.—Oral evidence of a sale by the mortgagor to the mortgagee in discharge of the mortgage-debt is admissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act to prove discharge, although the sale itself is invalid and does not effect any legal transfer of the property, even though it is accompanied by delivery of possession. Sales and mortgages of immoveable property are both transfers of intangible rights, but one is a transfer of ownership and the other is a transfer of an interest in the property concerned. The possession of a purchaser is of a full proprietary character, while the possession of a mortgagee in possession is of a limited nature. Both transactions are required to be registered, if the property is Rs. 100 in value or over. An extinguishment of a mortgage by the mortgagee's rights being merged in those of an owner, involves an alteration of the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee into one of seller and purchaser. When each of these transactions requires a registered document to make it valid, the law does not permit the substitution of one for the other to be effected in a less formal manner. [p. 684, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—Plaintiff-appellant is the assignee of the equity of redemption in the plaintiff lands, which were mortgaged in 1882 to the grandmother of defendants-respondents. It is respondents' case that in 1884 four items of the mortgaged property were sold orally to the mortgagees in discharge of the mortgage-debt. This case has been found to be true by the lower Appellate Court. It is also found that the alleged sale being oral is invalid, as the property is worth over Rs. 100, but as defendants and their grandmother have been in adverse possession from 1884 until date of suit in 1910, they have acquired a title by prescription. Plaintiff's suit for redemption and for accounts from defendants as mortgagees in possession has been dismissed. The appeal is pressed on three main grounds:—

(1) that the plea of oral sale has been negatived and that the matter is res judicata by reason of the decision in Original Suit No. 19 of 1890 in the Peddapur District Munsif's Court,

(2) that the possession obtained by defendants' grandmother in 1884 was that of a mortgagee, and cannot, therefore, be adverse to the mortgagor, and

(3) that oral evidence of the alleged sale in 1884 is inadmissible under provision (4) of section 92 of the Evidence Act.

2. On the first point, I do not think that appellants' plea is sustainable. In 1890, plaintiff's predecessor-in-title sued to evict defendants' grandmother, Achamma, as a trespasser on four items of the land now in suit. Achamma in defence put forward the mortgage-deed of 1882, which it is now sought to redeem, and pleaded that as the mortgagor had made default in payment, he had given up these lands to her "as sold for the whole amount" of the mortgage-debt and Rs. 25 (twenty-five) paid by Achamma for Government dues. The mortgage-deed of 1882 contains a proviso that if the mortgagor makes default, he shall put the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property, and it is contended that issue No. 1 in Original Suit No. 19 of 1890, must be read in the light of the mortgage-deed. Issue No. 1 runs as follows:—

"Whether the plaintiff lands were wrongfully usurped by defendants from plaintiff's possession or were delivered over by plaintiff to first defendant in the terms of the registered mortgage-deed dated the 9th November 1882?" This issue was presumably framed on the pleadings and, therefore, "delivered over by plaintiff in the terms of the registered mortgage-deed" must refer to defendants' allegation that on default of payment of the mortgage amount by plaintiff, the lands were delivered to her "as sold," and the issue merely is as to whether plaintiff's or defendants' case is true. The plaintiff's second witness in that case admitted the existence of the mortgage and said that defendants got into possession under the mortgage and subsequently continued in possession in accordance with the decision of a panchayat. Acting upon this evidence, the District Munsif appears to have thought that defendants were in possession under the mortgage, and dismissed plaintiff's suit. The only finding on the point is that plaintiff delivered the plaint lands to defendants under "an" arrangement and that defendants did not wrongfully usurp the plaint lands. The District Munsif also adds: "It seems that plaintiff has no cause of action to recover until he settles the matter of the mortgage-deed"; but he does not find this as a fact. Plaintiff's suit was dismissed and defendants could not have appealed, but that does not affect the case here, for I am of opinion that the existence of the oral sale to defendants was not directly and substantially in issue and finally decided in that suit. There is certainly nothing in the judgment which amounts to a finding that the oral sale was untrue, and the suit was dismissed apparently because according to plaintiff's own evidence defendants were in possession, not as trespassers as alleged in the plaint, but under some arrangement under the mortgage-deed, the nature of the arrangement not being specified. The question is, therefore, not res judicata.

3. The second point raised is that Achamma's possession from 1884 was possession as a mortgagee and cannot, therefore, be adverse to the mortgagor. The finding of fact is that she did not get into possession as a mortgagee but as a purchaser in an invalid sale. This finding is impeached on two grounds, firstly, that the oral evidence of the sale on which it is based, is inadmissible in evidence, and secondly, that when a mortgagee gets into possession during the continuance of a mortgage, his possession cannot be adverse to the mortgagor. This latter argument pre-supposes that the mortgage was continuing when possession was obtained, whereas the oral evidence is that the mortgage had been discharged. It will be better, therefore, to decide the third point, i. e., whether the oral evidence of the sale is admissible in evidence, before dealing with the points that depend upon a decision of this question. No doubt the oral sale is invalid, and evidence is inadmissible to prove it as an agreement to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract from the terms of the mortgage. (Section 92 of the Evidence Act.) Similarly under proviso 4, the existence of a distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify its terms cannot be proved. Can the sale in this case be held to be an agreement contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from the terms of the mortgage or as rescinding or modifying the mortgage? I think not. The effect of the agreement is to discharge the mortgage, i. e., to put an end to the contract by fulfilment, and although the oral sale accompanied by delivery of possession does not effect any legal transfer of the property, yet there is nothing in section 92 to exclude evidence of the transaction as showing discharge of the mortgage debt. No doubt in Ariyaputhira Padayachi v. Muthukumarsamy (1) it was held by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., that oral evidence of discharge by an invalid transfer was inadmissible in evidence and he goes so far as to hold that oral evidence to prove a conveyance as equivalent to payment of money, could not be allowed. In that case, the facts were very similar to the present one, i. e., the mortgagees alleged an oral sale of part of the mortgaged property in discharge of the whole mortgage; and the transaction sought to be relied upon had the effect of changing the possession of a mortgagee as such to possession as owner. But that case was a case of an usufructuary mortgage, and this I think is an important difference. Miller, J., does not discuss the admissibility of the evidence in any event in considering whether the transfer of property can be proved as showing the intention of the parties to discharge the mortgage and so, as showing change in the mortgagee's possession, to make it adverse to the mortgagor. He merely says that the intention to discharge the mortgage involves the intention to make certain transfers, and it is impossible to say that if those transfers failed, both parties nevertheless intended to discharge the mortgage. He does not hold that in no circumstance would oral evidence of the arrangement be inadmissible, and I think that in accordance with the views expressed in Nam Awatar v. Tulsi Prosad Singh (2), Kattika Bapanamma v. Kattika Kristnamma (3), Karampalli Unni Kurup v. Thekku Vittel Muthorakutti (4), Goseti Subba Row v. Varigonda Narasimham (5), such evidence is admissible for proving discharge although the sale by which the discharge was intended to be effected, is invalid. In Ram Awatar v. Tulsi Prosad Singh (2) an oral arrangement whereby a mortgagor was put in possession of part of the mortgaged property in discharge of the liability of the usufructuary mortgagee to pay him surplus profits, was allowed to be proved by oral evidence and this in effect was allowing oral evidence of an agreement varying the terms of the mortgage to be adduced for the purpose of showing payment of money due under the terms of a registered mortgage-deed. In Kattika Bapanamma v. Kattika Kristnamma (3), in a suit for arrears of maintenance defendant pleaded that, in discharge of his obligation to pay maintenance due under a registered deed, plaintiff had been put in possession of certain lands under an oral agreement. It was then held that the subsequent oral agreement being an agreement to rescind or modify the original registered agreement was not receivable in evidence, but that it was open to defendant to prove that the arrears claimed were actually discharged by the plaintiff taking possession, although the agreement to discharge cannot be proved. The other two cases, Karampalli Unni Kurup v. Thekku Vittel Muthorakutti (4) and Goseti Subba Row v. Varigonda Narasimham (5), are not so much in point, but there also evidence of an invalid oral agreement was allowed in order to prove discharge of the prior registered agreement. These rulings appear to me to be opposed to Sadasiva

Iyer J.'s opinion in Ariyaputhira Padayachi v. Muthukumarasamy (1), that oral evidence to prove a conveyance as equivalent to payment of money cannot be allowed. This opinion was not expressed by Miller, J., in the same case and is really an obiter dictum, and I prefer to follow the principle set forth in the other four cases above, which does not seem to me to be opposed to the provisions of section 92. In this case, then, the oral agreement is sought to be proved not as modifying the mortgage, but in order to prove the nature of possession taken by the mortgagee and I hold that the oral evidence is admissible, and on this evidence we have the finding of fact that the mortgage-debt was discharged and that defendants' predecessor got into possession of the mortgaged properties not as mortgagee, but as owner, and that the possession as owner was adverse to the mortgagor and recognized by him to be so. Although the oral sale cannot in itself operate as an extinguishment of the mortgage, yet the proof of the payment of the mortgage-debt thereby is sufficient to prove the nature of possession by the mortgagee. In this view, I would follow the ruling reported as Usman Khan v. Nagalla Dasanna (6), and hold that defendants' possession has been all along adverse as against the mortgagor, and they have now acquired a title by prescription. [Vide also Kone Goundan v. Bola Narcken (7) and Venkataramudu v. Subbamma (5).]

4. As regards the question of whether the possession from 1884 was that of Achamma or of her son-in-law Ammanna, it must be noted that defendants are sons of Ammanna and grandsons (daughter's sons) of Achamma. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to hold that Ammanna's possession was on behalf of Achamma, and although he does not record a definite finding on the point, his whole judgment proceeds on the assumption that the possession was that of Achamma. Defendants also claim under Achamma, and not from their father Ammanna. The question was only raised incidentally in second appeal and I must uphold what I take to be the Subordinate Judge's finding, i.e., that the possession was that of Achamma.

(5). Holding as I do on this question of adverse possession, it is unnecessary to discuss the further question as to whether a simple mortgagee who comes into possession of the mortgaged property during the continuance of the mortgage, can set up adverse possession notwithstanding the provisions of section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act, a question which was also strenuously argued in this appeal.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

SPENCER, J.—On the first point, I consider that the appellant is not entitled to succeed by relying on the decision in Original Suit No. 19 of 1890 as being res judicata on the question of the alleged oral sale. In that suit, the appellant's predecessor-in-title set up a case of trespass in March or April 1883. Achamma, who was first defendant in that suit, and is respondents' predecessor-in-title, denied the trespass and set up a case of sale in February 1884. The District Munsif found against the trespass. This finding was sufficient for the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit for recovery of possession of immoveable property, and it was dismissed. He also found incidentally that defendants' possession was traceable to an arrangement whereby through the intervention of mediators, it was settled that the defendants should have possession under a term of the mortgage-deed which provided that, in default of the regular payment of the taxes to Government, the land should be put in possession of the mortgagee. This was nobody's case in the pleadings. It seems to have been a third version put forward for the first time at the settlement of issues and to have been established by the evidence of plaintiff's witness. As I read issue No. 1, it refers to the above-mentioned condition of the mortgage-deed, and not to first defendant's allegation that the lands were delivered to her as sold. The decretal portion of the judgment was entirely in defendants' favour, as it simply directed the dismissal of plaintiff's suit and the payment by him of the defendants' costs. There was no issue as to the alleged sale, nor was that transaction either directly affirmed or negatived. The defendant thus had no ground for appealing against the decree. Under these circumstances, I do not think it can be said that the matter was directly and substantially in issue in that suit; and, therefore, it is not res judicata. [vide Secretary of State v. Swaminatha Koundan (9).]

The second question is whether a simple mortgagee who gets into possession of immoveable property of Rs. 100 (one hundred) in value can prove an oral sale as a starting point of adverse possession against his mortgagor, so as to acquire a prescriptive title by remaining in possession for over the statutory period. This question has been answered in the negative by Miller and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., in the case of a usufructuary mortgagee in Ariyputhira Padayachi v. Muthukumarasawmy (1), the reason being that section 92, clause (4), of the Evidence Act renders inadmissible oral evidence of any distinct subsequent oral agreement rescinding or modifying a contract or disposition of property embodied in a document which has been registered according to law. The plaintiff's mortgage-deed (Exhibit A) is such a document. I am of opinion that the same answer must be given in the case of a simple mortgagee who gets into possession of the mortgaged property during the continuance of his mortgage.

The law casts on him the same responsibility of managing the property with prudence, of protecting his mortgagor's interests in it against interference by strangers, and of paying the surplus of the receipts accruing from the mortgaged property to the mortgagor after deducting the interest on his mortgage-money together with a fair occupation rent and all necessary expenses. (Vide section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act). He cannot alter the legal character of his possession by his own act or assertion so as to convert possession as mortgagee into possession as absolute owner [vide Usuman Khan v. Nagalla Dasanna (6)]; Although, if there is a term in the original mortgage-deed providing in a certain event that the mortgagee will hold possession as absolute owner and if the parties subsequently by their mutual conduct and admissions show that they have acted on that provision in the deed, the character of the possession will, by agreement, be altered from that date. A mortgagee's possession does not become adverse to the mortgagor merely by his styling himself as proprietor of the mortgaged property [vide Ali Muhammad v. Lalta Buksh (10)], or by the mortgagee's denial of the mortgagor's right to redeem [vide Thopara Mussaul v. Collector of Malabar (11)].

(9) 12 Ind. Cas. 167; 37 M. 25; 10 M. L. T. 291 (1911) 2 M. W. N. 303; 21 M. L. J. 647.

It has been strenuously argued that, as a discharge of a mortgage is not a rescinding of the contract, evidence could be admitted to prove that the mortgage was discharged by the oral sale. But this was not the defendants' case in their written statement, nor will it help them towards a decision in their favour; for, if the encumbrance has been discharged, the owner of the equity of redemption is entitled to recover possession of his property free of encumbrance. Mere possession coupled with an oral agreement could not be pleaded in defence against one having a legal title to recover. [Vide Kurri Veera Reddi v. Kurri Bapi Reddi (12).] Mr. Narayanamurthi conceded that he did not want to prove extinguishment of the mortgage by oral evidence, but only that his client came into possession under an oral sale which had the effect of discharging the mortgage and creating a title by prescription.

Of the authorities cited by him, that of Ram Awatar v. Tulsi Prosad Singh (2) was a case in which the status of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties was not put an end to by the transaction whereby the mortgagees came into possession. In Karampalli Unni Kurup v. Thekka Vittil Muthorakutti (4), the subsistence of the lease was expressly admitted by the defendants. In Kattika Bapanamma v. Kattika Kristnumma (3) it was held that an oral agreement under which plaintiff was given possession of certain lands in lieu of maintenance could not be proved as a variation of the original registered instrument, but it was admissible in proof of discharge of arrears of maintenance. This only amounts to saying that the partial or complete discharge of a debt is not equivalent to a variation or rescinding of the deed by which the debt is secured. In Gosai Subba Row v. Varigonda Narasimham (5) it was laid down that the rescission or modification of a contract of usufructuary mortgage in a registered-deed, could only be proved by the production of an agreement of the like formality and not by an oral agreement, but it was held that some of several parties to the contract were not precluded from proving an oral agreement under section 44 of the Contract Act to release them from personal liability, while the original contract remained unimpaired against the other joint promisors.

In the present instance, the defendants can only succeed by proving that the encumbrance has been extinguished in the manner described in section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act, viz., by their becoming absolutely entitled to the property.

But the possession of these mortgagees was obtained under circumstances which were not incompatible with the mortgagor's interests being kept alive in the property. Their possession was capable of being referred to other causes besides a transfer of ownership, such as a temporary occupation under a condition of the mortgage-bond for the purpose of recovering from the proceeds of the land the kists paid by the mortgagees to Government, or a conversion of a simple mortgage into a usufructuary mortgage for failure to pay the instalments of the debt as agreed upon by the parties, or a submission to arbitration as stated in the prior suit. When a lawful origin can be inferred, the Courts will not assume that possession originated in an arrangement which cannot legally be proved. The possession of the mortgagees does not become adverse unless the mortgagor has reason to suppose that his rights have been invaded. [Vide Ittappan v. Manavikrama (13) and Tarubai v. Venkatrao (14).] Proof of an oral agreement to consider the mortgage at an end is shut out by section 92, clause 4, of the Evidence Act. [Vide Srinivasa Swami

Aiyangar v. Athmarama Iyer (15), which follows Mayandi Chetti v. Oliver (16).]

Sales and mortgages of immoveable property are both transfers of intangible rights, but one is a transfer of ownership and the other is a transfer of an interest in the property concerned. The possession of a purchaser is of a full proprietary character, while the possession of a mortgagee in possession is of a limited nature. Both transactions are required to be registered, if the property is Rs. 100 in value or over. An extinguishment of a mortgage by the mortgagee's rights being merged in those of an owner involves an alteration of the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee into one of seller and purchaser. When each of these transactions requires a registered document to make it valid, the law does not permit the substitution of one for the other to be effected in a less formal manner.

I am, therefore, of opinion that this appeal should be allowed and the suit remanded for taking an account of the profits derived from the said lands and in respect of the mortgage-debt. The Subordinate Judge's finding as to the value of items Nos. 2 to 6, which defendants allege to have been sold, is only that a sale of them "without a registered-deed" might not be valid," the allegation in the written statement being that they were not worth more than Rs. 70-8. It is, however, unnecessary to call for a finding on this point as it is sufficient for the purpose of section 92, clause (4), of the Evidence Act that Exhibit A has been registered.

The Subordinate Judge has not decided the second issue which related to the possession of Ammanna, who was son-in-law of Achamma and 2nd defendant in Original Suit No. 19 of 1890, but he incidentally observes that Ammanna was managing the affairs of Achamma. The District Munsif found that the possession of Ammanna for over 12 years prior to suit was adverse to both parties and barred the suit. Ammanna is not a party to these proceedings. If his possession was adverse to both parties, the defendants clearly could not take advantage of it and use it as a defence in a suit for redemption brought against them as mortgagees in possession.

As my learned brother considers that the lower Court's judgment should be confirmed, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA
April 20, 1915.

Present:—Lord Chancellor (Viscount Haldane), Lord Dunedin, Lord Parmoor, Sir George Farwell and Sir Arthur Channell.
THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

ALBERT NELSON ROBINSON—PLAINTIFF RESPONDENT.

Carrier—Railway Company Negligence—Action for personal injuries—Condition relieving from liability—Special contract—Railway Act of Canada (Rev. Stat. 1906, c. 37), s. 340.

A carrier is liable for injury arising from negligence in the execution of his contract to carry unless he has effectively stipulated that he shall be free from such liability. [p. 655, col. 2.]

Under section 340 of the Canada Railway Act, no contract restricting liability for carriage is to be valid unless it is of a kind approved by the Railway Board. [p. 685 col. 2.]

If a passenger has entered a train on a mere invitation or permission from a Railway Company without more, and he receives injury in an accident caused by the negligence of its servants, the Company is liable for damages for breach of a general duty to exercise care. Such a breach can be regarded as one either of an implied contract, or of a duty imposed by the general law and in the latter case as in form a tort. [p. 687, col. 1.]

But in either view, this general duty may, subject to such statutory restrictions as may be, be superseded by a specific contract, which may either enlarge, diminish, or exclude it. If the law authorises it, such a contract cannot be pronounced to be unreasonable by a Court of Justice. The specific contract, with its incidents, either expressed or attached by law, becomes in such a case the only measure of the duties between the parties, and a party cannot by any device of form get more than the contract allows him. [p. 687, col. 2.]

If the contract is one which deprives the passenger of the benefit, of a duty of care which he is prima facie entitled to expect that the Railway Company has accepted, the latter must discharge the burden of proving that the passenger assented to the special terms imposed. This he may be shown to have done either in person or through the agency of another. Such agency will be held to have been established when he is shown to have authorized antecedently or by way of ratification the making of the contract under circumstances in which he must be taken to have left everything to his agent. In such a case, it is sufficient to prove that he has been content to accept the risk of allowing terms to be made without taking the trouble to learn what was being agreed to. [p. 687, col. 2.]

In such cases the Railway Company may infer his intention from his conduct. If he stands by under such circumstances that it will naturally conclude that he has left the negotiation to the person who is acting for him, and intends that the latter should arrange the terms on which he is to be conveyed, he will be precluded by so doing from afterwards alleging want of authority to make any such terms as the law allows. [p. 687, col. 2.]

Moreover, if the person acting on his behalf, has himself not taken the trouble to read the terms of the contract proposed by the Company in the ticket or pass offered, and yet know that there was something written or printed on it which might contain conditions, it is not the Company that will suffer by the agent's want of care. The agent will, in the absence of something misleading done by the Company, be bound and his principal will be bound through him. [p. 687, col. 2.]

Under these principles, the only right to be carried will be one which arises under the terms of the contract itself, and these terms must be accepted in their entirety. The Company owes the passenger no duty which the contract is expressed on the face of it to exclude, and if he has approbated that contract by travelling under it, he cannot afterwards reprobate it by claiming a right inconsistent with it. [p. 688, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a passenger who is to be carried upon special conditions at a reduced fare, has allowed terms to be made for him by an agent, the presumption is that the passenger was content to accept the risk without enquiring what the terms agreed upon by his agent were. [p. 688, col. 2.]

Appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario and restoring the judgment of Latchford, J., at the trial.

Mr. D. L. McCarthy, K. C. (of the Canadian Bar) and Mr. E. F. Spence, for the Appellant.

Messrs. R. Younger, K. C., and T. H. Willes Chitty, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

LORD CHANCELLOR (VISCOUNT HALDANE).—The question raised in this appeal relates to the right of the respondent, who was plaintiff in an action in the High Court of Justice for Ontario, to recover damages against the appellants for injuries suffered by him in an accident on the appellants' railway. He was travelling in charge of a horse consigned under what is known as a "Live Stock Special Contract" in a form authorised by the Railway Commissioners for Canada. The terms of the contract purported to relieve the appellants from liability for injuries arising from accident, even where caused by negligence, to a person travelling with the live stock, in case he had been permitted to travel at less than full fare.

The course of the litigation disclosed much difference of judicial opinion. The Court of first instance decided in favour of the respondent. The Court of Appeal for Ontario by a majority (Mr. Justice Garrow, Mr. Justice MacLaren and Mr. Justice Meredith) reversed this decision, Mr. Justice Magee and Mr. Justice Lennox dissenting. There was an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, and in that Court, by a majority (Mr. Justice Davies, Mr. Justice Idington, Mr. Justice Duff and Mr. Justice Anglin; the Chief Justice dissenting), the judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario was reversed. On an application for special leave to appeal to the King in Council, this Board thought fit, in view of the importance of the question raised, to recommend that special leave should be given, but, in the circumstances only on the terms that the appellants should, whatever the result of the appeal might be, pay the whole costs of this appeal as between solicitor and client.

Before adverting to the facts out of which the litigation arose, it will be convenient to refer to certain provisions of the Railway Act of Canada. Apart from Statute, a carrier is liable in Canada, as in England, for injury arising from negligence in the execution of his contract to carry, unless he has effectively stipulated that he shall be free from such liability. The freedom so to stipulate, has been restricted in Canada by the Railway Act. Under section 340, no contract restricting liability for carriage is to be valid unless it is of a kind approved by the Railway Board, which is empowered to determine the extent to which such liability may be impaired, restricted, or limited, and generally to prescribe by regulation the terms and conditions under which any traffic may be carried. Standard and special freight tariffs are to be filed with the Board and to be subject to its approval, and are to be published and made open to the inspection of the public at the Railway Companies' stations and offices. Under the Act, the Companies are, by section 284, put under a general obligation to carry and deliver with due care and diligence, and any one aggrieved by a breach of this duty is to have a right of action, from which the Companies are not to be relieved by any notice, condition, or declaration if the damage arises from negligence or omission. It is, however, to be observed that this right is expressed by the section to be given "subject to this Act." Their Lordships think that where, under section 340 and the other sections which deal with special tariffs, forms of stipulation limiting liability have been approved by the Board, and the conditions for making them binding have been duly complied with, the Companies are enabled in such cases to contract for complete freedom from liability for negligence.

In 1904, the Board approved a form of Live Stock Special Contract, and the order approving it was duly published. The appellants adopted this form, and, so far as appears, have complied with the conditions prescribed for its use. It is out of a contract in the approved form that the present question arises.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows: The respondent lives in the town of South River, in Ontario. He undertook to Dr. McCombe, who resides in that town, to go to Milverton and bring back a horse by rail from there. Dr. McCombe had arranged with Dr. Parker, of Milverton, to buy the horse for him. When the respondent arrived at Milverton, he went with Dr. Parker to see the horse, and it was thereafter brought to the appellants' siding to be put on one of their cars under arrangements made by Dr. Parker with their local agent. The respondent and Dr. Parker placed the horse in the car. Dr. Parker had originally been under the impression that the horse could travel without any one accompanying it, but he had been informed by the agent that, for a long journey, it must be accompanied by some one. Arrangements had, therefore, to be made between Dr. McCombe, Dr. Parker and the respondent that the latter should travel with the horse. After putting it on the train, Dr. Parker went with the respondent to the agent's office, and Dr. Parker and the agent signed a contract in the presence of the respondent. Dr. Parker folded it up and said that he should send it to Dr. McCombe by mail, but the agent told him in the respondent's hearing to give it to the latter to carry with him as it showed that he was travelling with the horse. The document was accepted by Dr. Parker, but he did not think it necessary to take the trouble of reading it through. The respondent himself did not read it, but simply put it in his pocket, where it remained till some time after the accident when he gave it to Dr. McCombe. The officials on the train appear to have recognised the respondent, who looked after the horse, as the person travelling with it. He was not asked for any ticket or fare. In the course of the journey, there was a collision due to the negligence of the appellants' servants and the respondent was injured.

The case was heard before Mr. Justice Latchford and a Jury. There was no dispute as to the negligence, and the only question left to the Jury was the amount of the damages. These, the verdict assessed at 3,000 dollars. The learned Judge afterwards gave judgment for the respondent. In order to appreciate the significance of what he decided, it is necessary to turn to the terms of the special contract. This, as has already been stated, was substantially in the form prescribed by the Railway Board. It was expressed to be made between the appellants and Dr. Parker. It acknowledged the receipt from him of a horse, which the appellants undertook to transport to South River on the terms that their liability in respect of the horse should be restricted to a specified amount, in consideration of a rate lower than the full rate being agreed on. It went on to provide, as one of the stipulations on its face, that in case the appellants should grant to the shipper, or any nominee of the shipper, a pass or privilege at less than full fare to ride in the train on which the horse was being carried, for the purpose of taking care of it while in transit and at the owner's risk as before mentioned, then as to every person so travelling on such pass or reduced fare, the appellants were to be entirely free from liability in respect of his death, injury, or damage, whether it was caused by the negligence of the appellants, or their servants, employees, or otherwise howsoever. The contract concluded with a declaration, signed by Dr. Parker as shipper, that he fully understood its meaning. Across it was printed in red ink, "Read this special contract." On the margin was put, "Pass man in charge half fare." The document thus contained the authority to travel for the man as well as the horse. The practice was for the Railway Companies in such cases to obtain payment from the consignee on delivery, and Dr. McCombe some days subsequently paid the appellants the amount of the freight, including the half fare for the respondent.

These being the material facts, the learned Judge held that the respondent was not debarred from what he called his common law right. Any other view, he said, appeared to him to imply that, by a contract to which he was not a party and of the terms of which he had no knowledge, his right to be carried without negligence was taken away. The Court of Appeal for Ontario by a majority reversed this judgment, on the ground that a contract excluding liability even for negligence had been made and was binding on the respondent. Their judgment was, however, overruled by a majority in the Supreme Court of Canada, who held that although the language of the contract purported to exempt the appellants from their liability, it did not contain the real terms on which the respondent travelled in the train which met with the accident.

It is obvious that the question on which this appeal turns, is one as to the terms on which the respondent was accepted by the appellants as a passenger.

There are some principles of general application which it is necessary to bear in mind in approaching the consideration of this question. If a passenger has entered a train on a mere invitation or permission from a Railway Company without more, and he receives injury in an accident caused by the negligence of its servants, the Company is liable for damages for breach of a general duty to exercise care. Such a breach can be regarded as one either of an implied contract, or of a duty imposed by the general law, and in the latter case as in form a tort. But in either view this general duty may, subject to such statutory restrictions as exist in Canada and in England in different ways, be superseded by a specific contract, which may either enlarge, diminish, or exclude it. If the law authorises it, such a contract cannot be pronounced to be unreasonable by a Court of Justice. The specific contract, with its incidents either expressed or attached by law, becomes in such a case the only measure of the duties between the parties, and the plaintiff cannot by any device of form get more than the contract allows him.

A second proposition is that if the contract is one which deprives the passenger of the benefit of a duty of care which he is prima facie entitled to expect that the Company has accepted, the latter must discharge the burden of proving that the passenger assented to the special terms imposed. This he may be shown to have done either in person or through the agency of another. Such agency will be held to have been established when he is shown to have authorised, antecedently or by way of ratification, the making of the contract under circumstances in which he must be taken to have left everything to his agent. In such a case, it is sufficient to prove that he has been content to accept the risk of allowing terms to be made without taking the trouble to learn what was being agreed to.

The Company may infer his intention from his conduct. If he stands by under such circumstances that it will naturally conclude that he has left the negotiation to the person who is acting for him, and intends that the latter should arrange the terms on which he is to be conveyed, he will be precluded by so doing from alleging afterwards want of authority to make any such terms as the law allows. Moreover, if the person acting on his behalf has himself not taken the trouble to read the terms of the contract proposed by the Company in the ticket or pass offered, and yet knew that there was something written or printed on it which might contain conditions, it is not the Company that will suffer by the agent's want of care. The agent will, in the absence of something misleading done by the Company, be bound, and his principal will be bound through him. To hold otherwise would be to depart from the general principles of necessity recognised in other business transactions, and to render it impracticable for Railway Companies to make arrangements for travellers and consignors without delay and inconvenience to those who deal with them.

In a case to which these principles apply, it cannot be accurate to speak, as did the learned Judge who presided at the trial, of a right to be carried without negligence, as if such a right existed independently of the contract and was taken away by it. The only right to be carried will be one which arises under the terms of the contract itself, and these terms must be accepted in their entirety. The Company owes the passenger no duty which the contract is expressed on the face of it to exclude, and if he has approbated that contract by travelling under it, he cannot afterwards reprobate it by claiming a right inconsistent with it. For the only footing on which he has been accepted as a passenger, is simply that which the contract has defined.

Applying these principles to the facts of the present case, what is the construction to be put upon them by a Court of Justice? It may well be that the respondent did not actually know the latitude allowed by the law of Canada to Railway Companies. It is highly probable that he did not think of any such question as has arisen. But he must have known that he required to obtain permission from the Company in order to travel with the horse, and for the rest the law imputes to him the duty of knowing its principles. He had taken a single ticket only when he came to Milverton.

The proper inference appears to be that when he and Dr. Parker had put the horse into the train, he went with Dr. Parker to the agent's office with the intention that Dr. Parker should make, as regards both the horse and himself, the whole of the necessary arrangements at the office. If Dr. Parker had been acting for himself, there can be no doubt that he would have been bound by the terms of the document he received from the agent and by his signature expressly told the Company that he understood. Can the respondent be in a better position? On the evidence, can he say that the Company's agent was not led by him to believe that Dr. Parker, by whose side he stood while the contract was being made, was making it with his assent? "I was standing right there," he says in his cross-examination, "alongside Dr. Parker."

Q. "What did Dr. Parker say after he had signed the contract?"—A. "He folded the contract up and said he would send that to Dr. McCombe by mail, and 'it will be there before you will be there,' and he says: 'No, you must give it to this man; he must carry it with him; and it shows that he is travelling with this car.' They just handed it to me, and I put it in my pocket."

Under such circumstances, the true inference is that the respondent accepted the document knowing that it contained the contract obtained by Dr. Parker for his journey, and in accepting it, accepted all the terms which were set out on the face of the document, and which he would have seen had he taken the trouble to look at what was handed to him. It does not appear possible to say in this case, that he was misled in any way, or that the agent need have done more than he did when he handed over a document which set out the terms offered for acceptance with great distinctness in the form which the Railway Board had directed.

Such view is not inconsistent with any finding of fact by the Jury, or even by the learned Judge who tried the case. It is based on the legal consequences which flow from facts about which there is no controversy. The majority in the Court of Appeal for Ontario appear to have interpreted these consequences in the only way which the law warrants.

Having regard to the conclusions at which their Lordships have thus arrived, they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, and the action dismissed with costs in all the Courts below. The appellants must, however, under the terms on which special leave to appeal was given, pay the whole of the costs of the appeal to the King in Council as between solicitor and client.

*Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 123—Sale by auction—
Puffers, employment of—Commission for sale, outrageously high—Sale, whether voidable.*

If, at an auction sale, puffers are employed by the auctioneer, who charges an outrageously high commission for the sale, the transaction is voidable at the instance of the buyer under section 123, Contract Act. [p. 690, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 16th March 1911, decreeing plaintiffs' claim.

Messrs. B. Bevan Petman and Madan Gopal, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit relates to the auction of a house in Delhi. According to the plaintiff, the house was first auctioned on 25th and 26th February 1909 and knocked down to the defendant for Rs. 22,600. As defendant refused to stand by his bid, the house was re sold on 6th June 1909, when it only fetched Rs. 17,800.

Plaintiff claims:—

	Rs.	A.	P.
Difference in price ...	4,800	0	0
Commission on re-sale ...	890	0	0
Advertising expenses ...	40	0	0
Interest ...	785	12	0
Postage ...		10	6
TOTAL ...	6,516	6	6

The defendant's main pleas are—

(1) that he never made a completed or unconditional bid, and that his conditions were not complied with, and

(2) that the sale is voidable at his instance, as the price was raised by fictitious bids.

The lower Court decided both points against him and gave a decree for Rs. 5,864 and costs and future interest. The defendant appeals.

Into the question whether defendant's bid was absolute, or was subject to certain conditions which were not complied with, we do not propose to enter at length in this appeal; it is sufficient for us to say that the defendant's account, as given in the pleadings, of the circumstances in which his bid was made and of the facts which followed after the auction was completed, seems to us very unsatisfactory. Especially do we regard with suspicion that part of the affair which relates to the writing of a cheque for Rs. 1,500. If the defendant had really bought the property, he should have paid up the full 10 per cent. without demur immediately after the auction; if he had not really bought the property, he should have repudiated the bid point-blank from the beginning, instead of shilly-shallying and wanting to be assured that he had made a good bargain in all respects.

We think the plea as to the sale being voidable by reason of puffers having been employed (see section 123 of the Contract Act) is a good one, and that the suit should have been dismissed on this ground.

We will take the bidders as they stand in the auction list (vide page 7 of paper-book A) and examine them one by one. We here remark that it seems a most slipshod way for a respectable firm of auctioneers to keep no list of bids at a sale of this description, except a memorandum jotted down at the back of one of the sale notices. For purposes of this appeal, we will, however, assume that the list produced is the actual list of bids made at the auction. The bidding opens with a bid of Rs. 20,000 in the name of Lala Gobind Parshad, cousin of the mother of the auctioneers (vide A. 47). This man made one bid only. At the re-sale in June we note that he bid up to Rs. 17,600. We note also that he is now tenant of the house in dispute under Rattan Lal, who purchased the house at the second sale. But it must also be noted that on a former occasion when there had been an auction by these same auctioneers of a house belonging to Musamat Mahtabi, mother-in-law of one of the two auctioneers, the house was knocked down for Rs. 1,800, the genuineness of the sale was challenged just as in the present case, and the result was a re-sale resulting in the house being knocked down for Rs. 1,125 only to this same Gobind Parshad (for evidence of Niadar Mal recorded in the civil suit which followed, see B, pages 2-4).

SRI RAM V. CHHABBO LAL.

Next comes a bid of Rs. 20,500 in the name of Lala Sham Lal. This man was not in Delhi at the time, and the bid was made by his munim, Ganga Parshad, who is brother of Bhola Nath, servant of the auctioneers. Ganga Parshad holds no power-of-attorney from Lala Sham Lal, has never purchased property for Lala Sham Lal before, and received no instructions from him to bid for this particular house.

The next bid is one of Rs. 21,000 in the name of Lala Raghu Mal who is also a son-in-law of Musammatt Mahtabi, he and Rang Lal (one of the auctioneers) having married sisters. Raghu Mal's wife is dead no doubt, but his interest in her family has not ceased, as we learn he was acting for Musammatt Mahtabi in the former case (vide B, page 4, line 3) which occurred in 1903.

Then comes a bid of Rs. 22,000 in the name of Lala Dharm Das, who is clerk to Lala Badri Kishen, who figures as plaintiff's Pleader in the present case. It is urged that Dharm Das was bidding on behalf of Lala Ganga Saran Das, and a letter is produced purporting to come from Lala Ganga Saran Das, but this letter is not proved. The auctioneer Niadar Mal, no doubt, produced it when giving evidence, but this does not in the least prove by whom or when this letter was written. The auctioneer, Niadar Mal, also says in his evidence (vide A, page 48, line 11) that Dharm Das was himself responsible for the bid. He further admits that Dharm Das gave evidence for him in a former case.

Then comes a bid of Rs. 22,500 in the name of Lala Manak Chand. Lala Manak Chand died some years ago, and Lala Murli Dhar is now head of the firm. He professes to buy houses for investment, but owns he has bought none for the last 10 years. He was absent from Delhi at the time of the sale, but says he told his agent, Gauri Shankar, to bid for the house. He admits that his own house is mortgaged for Rs. 18,000 and has been so for the last eight years. Yet instead of redeeming his own house, he wants to buy other houses. Gauri Shankar is a cousin of Ram Kishor, who is brother-in-law of plaintiff. His anxiety to purchase the house for his master, cannot have been very great as he went away to Agra, and did not take the trouble to turn up at the second day of the sale (so he says, vide page 72), but the auctioneer says he was present on the second day (vide page 48). It will be noted that each bidder makes one bid, and one bid only, and so the price goes up to Rs. 22,500. Then the sale is postponed till the following day. Then comes a solitary bid of Rs. 22,600 by the defendant, and this closes the bidding. If any of the former bids were genuine, why did not a single one of the bidders turn up and bid on the second day? Plaintiff's Counsel urges that they did not wish to compete against a gentleman of defendant's wealth and standing. But did any of them even take the trouble to turn up the second day to see if the defendant was going to bid? And why should they all pay so much deference to the defendant? He may be a rich man, but according to the plaintiff, the bidders also are all men of means.

At the re-sale, we find none of these bidders bidding with the exception of Lala Gobind Parshad. There is one bid of Rs. 13,500 only in the name of Lala Ganga Saran Das, but it has not been proved that any bid authorized by him was made at the first sale. In any case, if he would bid up to Rs. 22,000 in February, why would he only bid up to Rs. 13,500 in June? The conclusion at which we arrive is that the proceedings on the first day of the sale were all bogus, and that not a single genuine bid had been made till defendant was foolish enough to take an interest in the affair, and to make a bid. Then as was to be anticipated, no further bids were forthcoming, and the house was knocked down to the defendant.

The whole proceedings we regard as shady in the extreme, and we note that the commission charged by the auctioneers, 5 per cent., seems to us outrageously high for a sale of house property.

We consider that section 123, Contract Act, has been fully proved to be applicable and that the sale is voidable at the instance of the defendant.

The claim must, therefore, be dismissed, but we shall not allow costs to the defendant as in addition to the remarks made at the commencement of this judgment, we think that, had his defence been true in all respects, the defendant would have done well to go into the witness-box to offer an explanation.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), ss. 87, 258, 264 (viii)—Judicial Commissioner specially appointed to deal with revenue cases, if Revenue Officer—Decision of Judicial Commissioner—Res judicata—Civil Court, jurisdiction of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.

The Judicial Commissioner specially appointed under section 264 (viii) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act to deal with the Revenue questions decided by the inferior Revenue Officers in appeal, is a Revenue Officer within the meaning of section 258. [p. 692, col. 2.]

Therefore, a decision of the Judicial Commissioner in appeal from a decision of a Revenue Officer in a suit or proceeding under section 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act bars a subsequent suit for the same purpose in a Civil Court. [p. 692, col. 2.]

A party cannot by suit seek to vary or set aside an order of a Revenue Court made under section 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act but if he is in possession, he can defend his title in a suit for resumption against him. [p. 693, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment of the Special Subordinate Judge at Ranchi, dated the 1st December 1913.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Bepin Chandra Mullick, for the Appellant.

Mr. Caspersz and Babu Jogesh Chandra Dey, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to have it declared that the entire Pargana Barway is a hereditary impartible estate of the family of the plaintiff and that it is descendible generation after generation in the male line of the original holder and that the right of the second plaintiff to hereditary succession be declared.

It appears that Barway is one of six paranas which, Cuthbertson in his report states, were incorporated with the Chota Nagpur Raj on the assumption of British rule. The Maharaja has the right to receive the Government revenue, but in other respects the so-called Raja for the time being is in the position of a talukdar subject to the custom of primogeniture and impartibility.

The question of resumability by the Maharaja on the failure of direct male heirs is not dealt with by Cuthbertson, but in the Revenue Settlement of 1908 the final publication of which as far as Pargana Barway is concerned took place on the 22nd April 1909, the plaintiff No. 1, who died after this case was decided in the lower Court, was entered in the Record of Rights as holding the pargana as jagir properties descendible to children generation after generation, and the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur filed a suit under section 87 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act to have this record amended and altered to life-jagir, valuing his suit before the Revenue Officer at Rs. 10,000. The Revenue Officer dismissed his suit in August 1910, but on appeal to the Judicial Commissioner, acting under the special powers conferred upon him by section 264 (viii) of the Act, he decided that the tenure was not hereditary but resumable and that plaintiff's father had only obtained a life-grant from the Maharaja under a written kabuliyat and patta. This was because Lal Sahi Deo, father of the plaintiff No. 1 Raghubar Sahi, was a very distant collateral who could only succeed on the ordinary right of survivorship under Mitakshara Law, and the Judicial Commissioner held that the tenure was resumable by the Maharaja on failure of heirs male to the last Raja and that Lal Sahi had no title outside his life-grant. The matter was somewhat complicated by the intermediate holding of one Lachmi Nath Sahi Deo, who succeeded his half-brother Harnath Sahi Deo and died without issue. This Lachmi Nath has in subsequent litigation been held to be illegitimate and the impartible Raj governed by primogeniture is said to have become resumable on the death of Harnath who also left no heir male of his body. The late Maharaja, who was later on declared insane, neglected his estates and in litigation with the Ranis, the widows of Harnath and Lachmi Nath Sahi, wanted to resume the tenure and joined the then holder Lal Sahi Deo, to whom he had given a life-interest, as plaintiff. He appears to have admitted the legitimacy of Lachmi Nath for the purposes of that case, as the widows of Harnath had consented to eat with Lachmi Nath. But whether Lachmi Nath was legitimate or not, the direct male line came to an end at his death, and the question before the Judicial Commissioner was whether Lal Sahi Deo had an hereditary right to the tenure or whether it was a resumable tenure held under a life-grant.

Mr. Kingsford decided this question against Raghubar Sahi Deo, the son of Lal Sahi. On this suit brought by the plaintiffs, Raghubar and his son Ganesh Narain, plaintiff No. 2, the Subordinate Judge has held that section 253 is a bar and has dismissed the suit on that ground alone. He was asked also to hold that the decision of Mr. Kingsford operated as res judicata under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, but he refrained from expressing any opinion on that point. In appeal before us, it is contended that section 253 has no more effect than section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had, that a suit to recover or to get confirmation of possession of property valued at Rs. 52,000, cannot be barred by any decision of a Revenue Court which was not competent to try such a suit. Further, it is contended that Mr. Kingsford sitting in appeal was not a Revenue Officer and, therefore, section 87 does not apply.

Thirdly, that plaintiff No. 2 being no party to the suit under section 87, is not bound by it.

The answer to the first contention is that this is not a suit for recovery or confirmation of possession, but a suit for a simple declaration of the nature of the tenure, which is fully within the competence of the Revenue Court. Moreover, the suit as laid was incompetent, as plaintiff No. 2 had no right to any declaration in the life-time of his father and the suit was bad for misjoinder of causes of action. The plaintiff No. 2 has acquired his right to sue, if any, on the death of his father, but on the finding of the lower Court made in his father's life-time, he has no such right.

The second contention is based on what we must characterise as the defective drafting of the Act.

Section 87 provides for a suit before a Revenue Officer and for an appeal in the prescribed manner to the prescribed officer from decisions passed under sub-section (f), that is, decisions on any other matter not referred to in clauses (a) to (e).

The Revenue Officer has power to transfer any particular case or class of cases to the Civil Court.

The rules made by Government provide that suits under section 87 shall be tried in all respects as Civil suits between the parties.

Section 264 (viii) gives the Government power to prescribe the officer to hear appeals and the Judicial Commissioner is the prescribed officer under the rules. We are asked to hold that the Judicial Commissioner is not a Revenue Officer within the meaning of section 253, which says that no suit shall be entertained in any Court to vary, modify or set aside either directly or indirectly any order or decree of any Deputy Commissioner or Revenue Officer in any suit or proceeding under section 87. The definition of a Revenue Officer in section 3 (zzv) is any officer whom the Local Government may appoint to discharge any of the functions of a Revenue Officer under any provision of the Act. Now the Judicial Commissioner is specially appointed under section 264 (viii) to deal with the Revenue questions decided by the inferior Revenue Officers in appeal and, therefore, comes within the definition. It would be a great anomaly to hold that the decision of the Court of Appeal was open to be assailed in a suit when the first Court's decisions could not be so assailed, and the only alternative would be to treat the decision of the Judicial Commissioner as that of a competent Civil Court which would have the effect of raising a bar of res judicata under section 11, Civil Procedure Code. We do not think that this could have been the intention of the Legislature. The provisions for appeal appear to have been overlooked in section 258, and we must hold that the special Appellate Court in Revenue cases is, in deciding a dispute under this Act, performing the functions of a Revenue Officer. We may further observe that the jurisdiction of the Judicial Commissioner to decide the question that is now sought to be agitated in this suit, was decided by a Bench of this Court in Naghubir Sahi v. Protap Udoy Nath Sahi Deo (1), the judgment in which appears on page 50 of the paper-book.

As regards the third contention, we think the Judge in the Court below is right. The plaintiff No. 2 had no co-parcenary right in the estate, which was fully represented by his father in the suit under section 87. The plaintiff No. 2 being in possession can defend his title in the suit for resumption, which is now being brought by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur. But he cannot by suit seek to vary or set aside the order of the Revenue Courts made under section 87. No bar of res judicata has as yet been found against him under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, but his present suit is incompetent for more than one reason. We fix the hearing fee at Rs. 3 0.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs and the Rule to stay further proceedings in the respondent's suit for resumption, is discharged with costs, two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed; Rule discharged.

JUDGMENT.—One Karim Bakhsh, an Arain of the town of Lahore, died on the 22nd of November 1905, leaving him surviving a widow, daughter's sons, brothers and a nephew. Before his death, he executed a Will on the 14th of April 1905 by which he devised his self-acquired and ancestral property to the above-mentioned persons; and the present action was brought by the nephew for possession of one-fourth of the ancestral landed property on the strength of the Will. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that the daughter's sons were, under the custom by which the deceased was governed, entitled to inherit the ancestral property to the exclusion of the male collaterals and that the Will, which altered the devolution of the property to the prejudice of the customary heirs, was invalid.

MIRAN BAKHSH v. MEHR BIBI.

The plaintiff has preferred a first appeal to this Court, and after hearing the learned Counsel on both sides, we are of opinion that the suit must fail on the short ground that the Will, upon which the claim rests, was revoked by the testator during his life-time. It is manifest that this plea was expressly raised by the defendants and it formed the subject-matter of the second issue. Both the parties adduced all the evidence on the various points in controversy between them; and though the learned Judge of the Court below has not recorded a finding on the above issue, it is obviously unnecessary to deal with the question of the validity of the bequest, when we find that the testament was validly revoked by the testator.

Now we observe that Karim Bakhsh, when examined as a witness in a case, made the following statement on the 26th July 1905, a few months after the date of the Will: "I made my last Will during my illness when I was not in full enjoyment of my right senses * * * * * I drew up my last Will personally. However, I have some doubt about it. In order to remove those doubts, I shall make another Will, according to Muhammadan Law and with the consent of my collaterals, so that all my daughter's sons and collaterals may get shares of my property. I wish that Muhammadan Law may be followed in place of custom." The Will referred to by Karim Bakhsh is undoubtedly the document in question, and his statement shows that he did not regard it as embodying his intention as to the disposal of the property after his death. In fact, he went so far as to say that he wished that Muhammadan Law might be followed in place of custom and it is obvious that the present Will is not in accordance with the principles of Muhammadan Law. It seems to us clear that the testator had animus revocandi, and his statement amounts to a declaration of intention on his part to revoke the Will dated the 14th of April 1905. This view receives support from the testimony of Khuda Bakhsh, a witness for the defendants, who deposes that before his death, Karim Bakhsh told him that the Will executed by him had been revoked by him in his evidence given in Court.

It appears that the document was in possession of his collaterals, and it was probably for this reason that Karim Bakhsh did not destroy it. But neither this circumstance, nor his omission to make a subsequent Will, can have the effect of reviving a Will which was cancelled by the testator's intention expressed in a Court of Justice. In cases not governed by the English Law, the Indian Succession Act or any other Statute specifying a particular method of revocation, actual destruction or a formal revocation in writing is not essential to constitute the revocation of a Will; vide, Venkayyamma Garu v. Venkataramanayyamma Badur Garu (1) and Maharajah Periah Narain Singh v. Manavane Subhao Koner (2). Under the Muhammadan Law a bequest may be revoked by express declaration, oral or written (see paragraph 291 of Wilson's Digest of the Anglo-Muhammadan Law).

We are satisfied that this is a case of the revocation of Will by parol, and that the plaintiff cannot invoke the aid of a document which must be treated as non-existent. It is proved that according to the custom, which supplies the rule of decision, as to succession to ancestral land among the Araims of the Lahore District, brothers and their sons are not heirs ab intestato in the presence of the widow and the daughter's sons. Indeed, the finding of the lower Court on this point has not been seriously challenged, and it is fully supported by the entry in the riwaj-i-am, judicial instances on the present record, and by the decision of this Court in Chiragh Bibi v. Hassan (3). There is no foundation for the contention that the daughter's sons, whose mother predeceased her father, were in a worse position than those whose mother survived him. In fact, the learned Counsel for the appellant admits that he is unable to cite any authority on which the alleged distinction could be supported; and the general principle of Customary Law, which favours the succession of daughter and daughter's sons, certainly does not contemplate any such rule.

The appellant has, therefore, no locus standi to inherit the property of the deceased

Chittas—Evidence—Observations of High Court as to probative values of chittas in another case, have far to be followed by lower Courts—Chittas, when private and public documents.

A Subordinate Court ought not to rely upon the observations of a High Court as to the probative value of chittas made in another case, the evidence in which was different from that adduced in the case before it. [p. 696, col. 1.]

Where the chittas are prepared for a public purpose such as the distribution of revenue on the shares, or assessment and settlement of revenue on the share belonging to the Government, they are public documents, but where they are prepared with the object of ascertaining the lands belonging to the Government without prejudice to the rights of the owners of the bahali shares they cannot be called public documents even though they might have been availed of subsequently for assessment of Government revenue. [p. 696, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Noakhali, dated the 9th March 1911, reversing that of the Munsif of Feni, dated the 15th July 1910.

Babs Ram Dayal De, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants as purchasers of an entire estate at a sale for arrears of Government revenue, known as the 4-annas bahali hissyas pargana Darra, sued to recover possession of the lands in dispute as appertaining to the said estate. The defence was that the lands did not belong to the estate purchased by the plaintiffs, but to another hissya (the 3-annas 1-kurant hissya) in that pargana, and was part of a taluk which was existing from before the Permanent Settlement. The Commissioner who was appointed to make a local investigation found that, according to the thak map, some of the lands formed part of the estate purchased by the plaintiffs, but that according to certain chittas of the year 1844, the lands appertained to 3-annas and odd gandas-zamindari. The Court of first instance preferred the thak map to the chittas, on the ground that the chittas were prepared by the Government in its capacity as the fractional zamindar of the pargana in order to ascertain the lands belonging to it, without prejudice to the rights of the rival bahali maliks, and its evidentiary value is hardly better than that of one prepared by any other private proprietor. That Court accordingly decreed the suit with respect to a portion of the lands. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the chittas prevailed over the thak, and dismissed the suit entirely. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court. Now both the thak map and the chittas are evidence, and it was for the lower Appellate Court to attach such value as it thought proper to each of them, and in second appeal, we cannot go into the weight to be attached to these documents respectively. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, referring to a decision of a Division Bench of this Court (Caasparz and Doss, JJ.) in a case [Nabendra Kishore Roy v. Durga Charan Choudhury (1)] relating to the very same estate in which a similar question was raised, observed: "As regards the probative force of the chitta of 1251, it has been decided by the Hon'ble High Court that the record thus prepared, is a document of a public nature and evidence of the state of affairs then existing."

The learned Judges in that case observed:—"The chitta was prepared at that time, as appears from the evidence, for the purpose of distributing in equal manner the public revenue on the separate bahali hissyas which was subsequently purchased by the plaintiffs. The record thus prepared is a document of a public nature and evidence of the state of affairs then existing."

We do not know what evidence there was in that case with reference to which those observations were made.

NABENDRA KISHORE ROY v. RAHIMA BANU.

On the other hand, in a later case relating to the same estate, which came up to this Court, another Division Bench (Carnduff and Chapman, JJ.,) referring to the same chittas observed as follows:—

"The chittas in question were prepared by the Government as zemindar: but in this case, a part of the pargana measured had escheated to the Government on account of the rebellion of the former owner, and it is suggested that the Government must, in these circumstances, be held to have measured it in its Sovereign capacity. We are unable to draw any distinction between the position of the Government as owner of land which has been escheated, and its position as owner of land acquired in any other way; and it is well settled that a chitta prepared by the Government when interested as a proprietor of the estate concerned, cannot be said to be a public document." See Fazlar Rahim v. Nabendra Kishore Roy (2).

It appears, therefore, that different views have been taken as to whether these chittas are or are not public documents and it seems that this difference is due to the fact that the evidence adduced in each case was not the same. We think the Subordinate Judge ought not to have relied upon the observations of the High Court as to the probative value of these chittas made in another case, the evidence in which was different from that adduced in the present.

In the present case, we have not been referred to any evidence to show that the chittas were prepared "for the purpose of distributing in equal manner the public revenue on the separate bahai hissa which was subsequently purchased by the plaintiffs" as was found in the case of Nobendra Kishore Roy v. Durga Charan Chowdhury (1).

If the chittas were prepared for a public purpose such as the distribution of revenue on the shares, or assessment and settlement of revenue on the share belonging to the Government, they would be public documents, but if they were prepared with the object of ascertaining the lands belonging to the Government without prejudice to the rights of the owners of the bahai shares, as found by the Court of first instance, they cannot be called public documents, even though they might have been availed of subsequently for assessment of Government revenue. Chittas may be very valuable evidence for the purpose for which they are prepared; but they may not have the same value on any other question. We, however, cannot go into these questions, and it is for the lower Appellate Court to find upon the evidence on the record in the case for what purpose the chittas were prepared, and the determination of the question whether they are or are not public documents will depend upon the finding which may be arrived at.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the respondents that even if the chittas are not public documents, the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is not affected, because the Court is entitled to attach such weight as it likes to a private document. No doubt it was open to the lower Appellate Court to attach such weight as it thought proper to the chittas considered as private documents. But it is impossible for us to say to what extent the Court below was influenced by the idea that the chittas upon which the judgment is mainly based were public documents.

It is further contended on behalf of the respondents that the Subordinate Judge has not treated the chittas as public documents, but has referred to them as documents of a public nature. But he took that description from the judgment of Caspersz and Doss, JJ., in Nobendra Kishore Roy v. Durga Charan Chowdhury (1).

The words "a document of a public nature" could not have been used loosely in the sense of documents prepared by officers of Government. The learned Judges in that case were of opinion that the chittas were prepared for the purpose of distributing in equal manner the public revenue. That would be a public purpose, and it seems to us, therefore, that the words "a document of a public nature" must have been used in the sense of "public document."

The learned Subordinate Judge also refers to some other evidence, but there is no doubt that his judgment is based mainly upon the chittas considered as documents of a public nature and it is impossible for us to say what value he attached to them.

We are constrained, therefore, to remand the case for a re-hearing of the appeal to the lower Appellate Court. If the Court finds upon the evidence on the record that the chittas were prepared for a public purpose, the suit will be dismissed. If, however, it is found that the chittas were not prepared for a public purpose, they will be considered as private documents and that Court will decide the case upon the whole evidence, treating the chittas as private documents and attaching such value to them as it thinks proper. Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

JUDGMENT. Preliminary objections have been raised in this and in the connected Appeal No. 1867 of 1912 to the effect that the appeals have both abated for this reason that Kanda Singh, admittedly a necessary party, was murdered on 26th January 1914 and applications to substitute names were not made until 15th April 1915. Time allowed being six months, the appeals certainly abated six months after 26th January 1914, and it was not until some nine months after abatement that applications were made, though the period allowed for such applications under Order XXII, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, is 60 days (Article 171, Limitation Act). The only excuse offered in applications is ignorance of fact of Kanda Singh's death. This is hardly believable under ordinary circumstances, seeing that plaintiffs live within 15 kos of Kanda Singh's village; but it is alleged before us, under Order XXII, rule 9, aforesaid that both plaintiffs were absent on pilgrimage at the time. This is not mentioned either in applications or affidavits.

We hold that plaintiffs-appellants have not shown sufficient cause for delay in applying, and we dismiss these appeals with costs.

under section 108 (c). Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply where a lessee serves a notice on the lessor to avoid the lease on the ground of the destruction of the property by fire or other irresistible force.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 17th August 1912, reversing that of the Munsif at Burdwan, dated the 15th June 1911.

Babus Mohendra Nath Ray and Mohini Mohan Chatterjee, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 17th August 1912, reversing the decision of the Munsif. The suit was brought to recover rent due on a lease. The defence was that the lease had come to an end. The lease was a lease of a colliery and the defendants alleged that the property had been destroyed by fire or other irresistible force, and that they had by notice avoided the lease. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court made findings of fact that are in favour of the defendants. He, however, found that the notice purporting to avoid the lease did not satisfy the terms of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act and that, therefore, the lease had not been validly determined.

The learned Judge was obviously in error in the view he took. The notice under section 106 has nothing to do with the notice to avoid a lease under section 108 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. The notice avoiding a lease under section 108 (c) does not require any length of time for its operation. The lease becomes ipso facto void when the lessee serves the notice under section 108 (c), whereas fifteen days' notice is required under section 106. The learned Judge has fallen into an error by applying the provisions of section 106 to the notice in the present case. This notice did not require any time to take effect and it operated to avoid the lease immediately on its service. That being the case, the judgment of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court is wrong. We must, therefore, set aside his judgment and decree and restore the judgment and decree of the Munsif. The respondent must pay to the Appellants their costs, not only in this Court but also in the Courts below.

Appeal allowed.

When a pro-note in lieu of certain profits was executed outside the jurisdiction of a Court and the executant also resided out of the jurisdiction of that Court, but the pro-note was delivered to the payee within the jurisdiction of the Court and it was intended that the money should be paid within that jurisdiction:

Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit on the pro-note under section 20, clause (c), of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. [p. 699, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 28th of April 1913, varying that of the District Judge of Delhi, dated the 10th January 1913.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellant.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for the recovery of money on the basis of a promissory note for Rs. 3,000 executed on the 6th of August 1906 by the defendant Nawab Muhammad Ishaq Khan at Fateh Garh in the United Provinces, and sent by him from that place to his brother's widow at Delhi. The money was due to her on account of her share of the income from the property owned by her husband in the United Provinces, and the pro-note was accepted by her in full settlement of her claim against the defendant in regard to the profits realised by him on her behalf. The Courts below have concurred in decreeing the claim and the only question, which has been argued before us and which requires determination in this second appeal, is whether the Delhi Court had or had not the jurisdiction to try the suit.

Now it is beyond dispute that the defendant resides, and the pro-note was executed, outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court and it is, therefore, clear that neither the rule based upon the residence of the defendant nor the rule of locus contractus can be invoked for establishing the jurisdiction of the Delhi Court, and the sole ground, upon which the plaintiffs seek to sustain the jurisdiction, is that in performance of the contract, the money was payable at Delhi. This contention has been accepted by both the Courts below and it is manifest that if established, it brings the case within the purview of section 20, clause (c), of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, which clause reproduces in a succinct form the principle contained in Explanation 3 to section 17 of the old Code.

We observe that the contract itself does not expressly prescribe any place for its performance, but we think that the circumstances of the case show that the parties intended that the contract should be fulfilled at Delhi. The document, it is to be noted, was delivered by post to the lady at Delhi and it was there that it was accepted in settlement of her claim. The judgment in Ram Nopal Law v. Richard Blaquere (1) cited by the learned Pleader for the respondents, is distinguishable on the ground that the pro-note in that case was executed within jurisdiction but the ruling, which is to some extent applicable to the present case, is that reported as Winter v. Round (2). As observed in that judgment, the making of a pro note is altogether the act of the maker and it requires delivery to the promisee to render it complete. It may, therefore, be said that the defendant by delivering the note at Delhi impliedly promised to pay the money at that place.

But this is not the only circumstance which lends support to the view that there was an implied undertaking on the part of the defendant to perform the contract within jurisdiction. The learned Divisional Judge has stated in his judgment that the widow, after the death of her husband, apparently left his house and came to Delhi to reside with her brother Khan Bahadur Muhammad Ikram Ullah Khan. It is true that there is no direct evidence in support of this statement, but the plaintiffs legitimately contend that this is a reasonable inference to be deduced from all the letters on the record, more especially when the defendant has not adduced any evidence to negative that inference. At any rate, it is incontestable that she was living in 1906 at Delhi and that the pro-note was delivered to her there. Further, it was obviously from Delhi that she made demands upon the defendant for the payment of the debt due to her and it is significant that in one of the letters, namely, P-7, which is proved by the witness Muhammad Unis to be in the handwriting of the defendant, the latter distinctly stated that he could not get money to discharge the claim on the pro-note, otherwise he would have remitted to her Rs. 3,000 minus such sum as was due to him by her own account.

In these circumstances, the Courts below were justified in holding that there was sufficient prima facie evidence to prove an implied agreement that the defendant should send the money due on the pro-note to the promisee at Delhi. It is to be observed that both the widow and her brother Khan Bahadur Muhammad Ikram Ullah Khan are dead and the person, who is now in a position to give information on the matter, is the defendant, but he has not thought fit to go into the witness-box and give his version of the affair. Having regard to the place of the delivery of the pro-note and other considerations set out above, we are of opinion that the parties intended the payment to be made at Delhi. The Delhi Court, being the forum loci solutionis, had consequently jurisdiction to entertain and adjudicate upon the claim based upon the pro-note.

On this view, it is not necessary to consider whether there was "a consequent failure of justice" within the meaning of section 21, Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and whether the provisions of that section operate as a bar to the objection as to the territorial jurisdiction of the Delhi Court.

Our decision on the only point urged in this second appeal, is against the appellant and it, therefore, follows that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

affirming that of the Munsif of that place, dated the 8th July 1913.Babu Surendra Madhub Mullick, for the Chandra Halder, for the Respondents.JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises from a decision holding that an application for execution of a decree obtained by a cosharer landlord for his share of the rent without making the other co-sharers parties, is governed by Article 6 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is certainly one case which favours the contention of the appellant. That is the case of K.

B. Dutt v. Gostha Behary Bhuiya (1).
That case, however, was not argued for the respondent and the learned Judges said that that was a suit to which provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply.
However, there has been a number of cases both preceding and subsequent to that in all of which, the Judges took a contrary view. These cases are Thakomoni Dasi v.
Mohendra Nath (2), Mriyunjyot v. Bhola Nath
(3), Kh-tra Mohan v. Mohim Chandra Das (4) and Kedar Nath v. Artha Chunder Roy (5). In all of these cases, it has been held that theobject of the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act I of 1907 was to introduce words which, properly interpreted, would make the Article applicable to the question in controversy in this case. We are inclined to agree with this latter opinion and to accept the grammatical construction of the words as given in the Article after the amendment. The contention, therefore, that this Article does not apply, fails.It is next contended that this view of the law is very hard upon the co-sharer landlord, who is bound by the rule of shorter limitation in this Article while he is unable to avail himself of the provisions of the Act for getting a complete remedy against his tenant. That may be so in a case of this kind, but after the amendment, a co-sharer landlord has an option of bringing a suit under section 148A, which would enable him to avail himself of all the provisions of the Act in favour of the entire body of landlords.The next contention is that this application should be considered as a continuation of the previous application. The previous application is not before us and there are no materials on the record upon which we can say that this was ever intended to be a continuation of the previous application.The result is that this application is dismissed.As, however, at the time when the application was made there was a decision in favour of the appellant, we make no order as to costs in this appeal.Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Dalip Singh, for the Hon'ble Mr. Shadi Lal, and Mehta Bahadur Chand and Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This revision and the Civil Appeal No. 562 of 1913 are connected in the following way. The parties (to put the thing in the briefest possible way) had a mutual contract for the supply of bajri. Disputes arose, each party accusing the other of breach of contract. On 7th October 1911, Sardar Narain Singh, plaintiff in the revision case, sued Seth Kanhia Lal for damages to the amount of Rs. 14,000. On 9th February 1912, Kanhia Lal sued Narain Singh, Labh Singh and Nazir Mal for Rs. 7,059-4-0, price of bajri supplied, plus Rs. 13,490 damages, total Rs. 20,549-4-0. Then in the former case the whole matter was referred to arbitration, and on 30th October 1912, the award was put in, giving Narain Singh Rs. 11,782-5-0 and costs. Objections were heard and considered—see orders of lower Court dated 22nd November and 14th December 1912—on which latter date a decree was passed in accordance with the award. Then on 24th December 1912 Kanhia Lal's suit for Rs. 20,549-4-0, which had by consent of Counsel been kept in abeyance pending the result of the other suit, was taken up and was dismissed with costs, on the ground that the issues in it were the same as those in the case decreed ten days earlier, that those issues had been disposed of finally, and that, therefore, this suit could not proceed.

On 22nd January 1913, Kanhia Lal put in his revision application, but for one reason or another, it was not ripe for orders until 31st July 1914. Meantime Kanhia Lal had appealed in the other case (his own claim for Rs. 20,549-4-0), and that appeal had been admitted to a Division Bench on 21st April 1913. The revision petition, though plainly open to some objections, was allowed to be set down for regular hearing along with the appeal.

We have now heard both cases argued and have arrived at the conclusion that both the revision and the appeal should be rejected.

Mr. Tek Chand, for Narain Singh, urges that no revision lies. Mr. Moti Sagar, for Kanhia Lal, contests this and takes his stand upon each and every paragraph of his revision petition. Both sides have quoted authorities, which we will notice presently. In our opinion, it cannot be said absolutely that no revision lies. In our opinion the law is as follows. This decree (of 14th December 1912) is based, or purports to be based, on an award and is certainly in accordance with that award. Therefore, under the Civil Procedure Code, no appeal lies against it, except on the ground that it is not based on an award; that is, in effect, that the award is not a valid award but a nullity. Then, this Court can revise judgments or orders, against which no appeal lies, on the ground of material irregularity committed by the Court passing the order or judgment, e.g., suppose a Court passed a decree on an award without giving time for objections. But considering that the whole object of the law of arbitration is rapid finality, such a revisional jurisdiction will be used very sparingly. In arriving at the above propositions, we have studied the well-known rulings Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (1), Hans Raj v. Ganga Ram (2), Panna Lal v. Soman (3), Shankar Lal v. Nathu

MOKASHADAYINI DASSI v. KARNADHAR MANDAL

Mal (4), Narpat Rai v. Devi Das (5), Balcha Sahib v. Abdul Ghany (6) and others. It is not necessary to state at length the facts and dicta in these rulings here. As to certain other rulings quoted by Mr. Mori Sagar, we need only say that in Thakur Das v. Ram Das (7), (a Single Bench case) the Judge did not positively hold that revision lay, but preferred to reject the petition on the ground that it was bad on the merits, and that in Gian Chand v. Behari Lal (8) the Judge, dealing with a revision on the ground that all parties had not joined in the reference, should probably have refused to consider the revision, inasmuch as the question raised was one for appeal, but, overlooking this, considered the petition on the merits and dismissed it.

Mr. Tek Chand, on the other hand, cited a Madras Single Judge case [Nidamurthy Krishnamurthy v. Gargiparthilingam (9)] in which it was held that neither appeal nor revision lay on the ground that there was no proper order appointing arbitrators. We are not inclined to follow that ruling; if there was no legal appointment of arbitrators, the award was a nullity and appeal would lie.

We will now take up the revision petition clause by clause, and see to what extent, if any, it contains admissible grounds. Paragraph 1 in effect denounces the award as a nullity: being ground for appeal, we cannot hear it argued in revision. Paragraph 2 would probably be a good ground if correct in fact, but it is based on a misconception of fact, for there was a formal order passed extending time to 30th October 1912. Paragraph 3 takes up a matter fully considered and adjudicated upon by the lower Court in its order of 22nd November 1912. Therefore, in this connection, the lower Court was guilty of no irregularity whatever, and the paragraph is out of place in a revision petition. Ground 4 is in argument utilised to urge that the lower Court should have remitted the award for reconsideration, because (a) Nazir Mal's interest in the contract was dealt with in it, though he did not join in the reference, (b) the arbitrators failed to consider that there had been an award already in the case by one Damodar Das and that, therefore, they should decline to adjudicate afresh. As to (a), all we need say is that the arbitrators were obliged to decide whether Nazir Mal had an interest, as it had been asserted that he had; and that they decided he had none. As to (b), it is difficult to see what right petitioner has, after joining in this arbitration and leaving the whole dispute to be decided by the arbitrators, to say that those very arbitrators should have declined to arbitrate.

Ground No. 5 was fully dealt with by the lower Court: no irregularity there. Grounds Nos. 6 (a) and (b) were not touched upon in argument before us: we see nothing in them. Ground No. 6 (c) would be technically good ground for revision, if it really disclosed an irregularity, for it is concerned with the action of the lower Court, but we can see nothing objectionable in the Court's helping the arbitrators with advice and orders when they came to it in a difficulty. Lastly, ground No. 7 is obviously not good ground for revision.

For these reasons, we dismiss this petition with costs.

Petition dismissed.

In a Probate Court, after a Probate of a Will has been granted, no question of the genuineness of the Will arises for consideration till the Court has decided that the Probate must be revoked on one or more of the grounds specified in section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act. [p. 703, col. 2.]

Where an application for revocation of a Probate is made, the only question for consideration is whether the appellants have made out a just cause for revocation and the application cannot be dismissed on the ground that the evidence adduced by the applicants for revocation, is not sufficient to throw doubt upon the genuineness of the Will. [p. 703, col. 2.]

A person interested by assignment in the estate of a deceased may, where a Will has been set up and proved at variance with his interests apply for revocation of the Probate of the Will so set up. [p. 703, col. 2.]

Therefore, if it is proved that a person has acquired by purchase an interest in the properties left by the deceased, he is entitled to be heard in the proceedings for grant of Probate. [p. 704, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 27th February 1913.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullick, for the Appellants.

Babu Trailokya Nath Ghosh for Mr. J. W. Chippendale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of dismissal of an application for revocation of Probate. The respondent Karnadhar Mandal applied for Probate of a Will alleged to have been executed on the 1st March 1885 by Gobinda Chandra Mandal, a cousin of his father Lukshmi Narain Mandal. The effect of the Will is to give a life-interest to the daughter of the testator Brojeswari who was a childless widow when her father died in 1886. After the termination of the life-interest in favour of the daughter, the estate was to vest in Karnadhar Mandal and his paternal uncle Dakhiram Mandal. Brojeswari died in 1907. Notice of the present application for Probate, which was not made till the 21st September 1912, was served upon Lukshmi Narain Mandal and Dakhiram Mandal. There was no opposition and the District Delegate granted Probate on the 27th November 1912. On the 21st December 1912 the appellants applied for revocation of the Probate on the allegation that they had acquired an interest in the property left by the deceased by purchase from Lukshmi Narain Mandal on the 11th September 1912, that is, a week before the application for Probate. The District Judge has dismissed the application on the ground that the evidence adduced by the applicants for revocation is not sufficient to throw doubt upon the genuineness of the Will. It is plain that this order cannot be sustained. No question of the genuineness of the Will arises for consideration till the Court has decided that the Probate must be revoked on one or more of the grounds specified in section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act. The only matter for consideration at this stage is, whether the appellants have made out a just cause for revocation of the Probate which was granted without notice to them: Brindaban Chunder Shaha v. Sureshwar Shaha (1). The question of genuineness cannot be considered till a case for revocation is made out: Durgaguti v. Saurabini (2).

It was ruled by this Court in the case of Komolochun Dutt v. Nilratan Mundle (3) that a person interested by assignment in the estate of the deceased may, where a Will has been set up and proved at variance with his interests, apply for revocation of the Probate of the Will so set up. This view was followed in the cases of Muldui Mohun Sircar v. Kali Churn Dey (4), Lalit Mohan v. Navalip Chandra (5), Sheikh Azim v. Chandra Nath (6), Digambar Keshav v. Narayan Vithal (7) and Ramchandra v. Ramrao (8). This is in accord with the principle adopted in the case of Lindsay v. Lindsay (9) where it was ruled that the person entitled to intervene in a proceeding for revocation of Letters of Administration or Probate need not show that he had an interest in the estate of the deceased at the time of his death; an interest acquired subsequently by purchase of a part of the estate is sufficient. Consequently, if it is established that the appellants have acquired by purchase an interest in the properties left by the deceased, they were entitled to be heard in the proceedings for grant of Probate. There is thus "just cause" for revocation of the Probate within the meaning of section 50 of the Probate and Administration Act. If the case is not covered by the first clause in the definition of the expression "just cause", namely, that the proceedings to obtain the grant were defective in substance, it is undoubtedly covered by the second clause, namely, that the grant was obtained fraudulently by making a false suggestion or by concealing from the Court something material to the case. Notice was served in the Probate proceedings upon Lukshmi Narain Mandal. It was his duty to apprise the Court that he had no subsisting interest in the estate so as to justify an opposition on his part to the grant of Probate; he should have intimated to the Court that he had transferred what he claimed as his share of the estate left by Gobinda Mandal to the present appellants. It is further difficult to imagine that the applicant for Probate was unaware that his father had, a week before, conveyed away to the appellants what he claimed as his share of the estate; it was thus equally his duty to intimate this fact to the Court. If this had been done, the Court would undoubtedly have issued notices upon the present appellants.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, and the order of the District Judge set aside. The case will be remanded to him in order that he may investigate whether the appellants have in reality the interest which they allege in the estate left by Gobinda Chandra Mandal. If their purchase is proved, the Probate will stand cancelled and the applicant for Probate will be called upon to prove the Will in solemn form. If, on the other hand, the appellants fail to establish their alleged purchase, they must be deemed persons not entitled to intervene in the Probate proceedings and their application for revocation will stand dismissed. There will be no order for costs in this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Where, therefore, the plaintiff's suit for contribution was dismissed merely on the pleading without taking any evidence in the case as to the correctness or otherwise of the contentions on each side:

Held, that, as the distinction between an actionable and a non-actionable claim was a fine one, the only proper course in the case was to hear the evidence and examine the documents, and that, therefore, the case must be tried de novo. [p. 705, col. 1.]

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge professed to decide this case after consideration of the terms of the partition-deed. No such deed is even alleged ever to have existed. The plaint discloses a possible cause of action under either section 69 or section 43 of the Contract Act.

SUDHAKAR RAUT v. SADASIV JHATAP SINGH.

The practice of non-suiting plaintiffs in other than absolutely plain cases is to be deprecated. The art of pleading in this country has not reached the point at which it is safe to assume that the Pleader gives the exact effect of the contract pleaded and where the line of distinction between the actionable and the non-actionable was a fine one, as in this case, the only proper course was to hear the evidence and examine the documents. This is doubly important where the pleading is applying the vernacular to complex legal conceptions and relations. It is most regrettable that the Subordinate Judge should have suggested that the plaintiff was officious in depriving the defendants of an opportunity of evading the payment of their legal and just debts.

The judgments below must be set aside, and the case sent back for trial de novo.

Costs in all three Courts will abide the result of the new trial.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal after failure of application for review—Time spent in review, if bona fide prosecution of civil litigation—Exclusion of time—Discretion, exercise of—Laches.

Where an appeal is filed after an application for review has failed and where the grounds for review are the only grounds of appeal, the time taken in prosecuting the application for review will not be excluded for making the appeal within time on the ground of bona fide prosecution of civil proceedings [p. 705 col 2; p. 706, col. 1.]

A mere routine order registering an application for review does not constitute a bona fide prosecution of a civil litigation. [p. 706, col. 1.]

The discretion to admit out of time appeals ought not to be crystallised into definite rules to fetter other Judges in the exercise of the discretion which the Legislature has permitted to them. What is sufficient cause and what is reasonable time for filing an appeal, must depend upon all the circumstances of each particular case. [p. 706, col. 1.]

The appellants were minors residing in an out of the way village and their father died during the hearing of appeal before the lower Appellate Court. They applied for a review of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, which was against them, but the application was rejected. They applied 23 days after for the copy of the order and on receipt of the copy filed an appeal. The appeal was filed beyond time.

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the appeal should be registered. [p. 706, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

HOLMWOOD, J.—This was a Rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why the second appeal should not be admitted out of time and registered on the ground that the time taken in the infructuous proceedings in the review matter is bona fide litigation which would save limitation.

It appears that the father of the minor applicant died during the hearing of the appeal before the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court's judgment was passed on the 11th August 1914. The decree was passed on the 15th August 1914. There was an application for review on the 10th September 1914. The learned Subordinate Judge admitted the application, issued notice and fixed the 7th November 1914 for hearing. In the meantime, he was transferred, and on the 7th November 1914 the District Judge heard the parties in the review matter and wrote a considered judgment rejecting the review. The applicants then applied for copy of the lower Court's judgment and decree on the 30th November 1914. They obtained their copy on the 7th December. It is stated that the appeal was ready on the 12th December and it was filed on the 14th December.

In showing cause, the learned Vakil has relied upon the finding of the District Judge that all the grounds taken in the petition for review were grounds of appeal and the ruling in Ashanulla v. Collector of Dacca (1) has been relied upon. We entirely agree with that ruling, and if the grounds for review were only grounds of appeal we should certainly hold that the applicants can claim no exclusion of time on the ground of bona fide prosecution of civil proceedings. But here the fourth ground taken in the petition of review is obviously a good ground for review, and the learned Subordinate Judge must be taken in admitting the review and fixing a date of hearing to have held that there was such a ground. We have been referred to the case of Gobinda Lal Das v. Shiba Das Chatterjee (2) for the proposition that a mere routine order registering an application for review does not constitute the bona fide prosecution of a civil litigation. That also we are prepared to concede. But the facts of that case were totally different from the facts of the present case. There the application for review was ordered to be registered by the Judge who dismissed the suit, and the Judge who succeeded him when he was on leave refused to hear the review and a great delay took place in passing the order dismissing the review.

It is further contended that laches after the dismissal of the review in not immediately filing the appeal, would also deprive the applicants of the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act and certain remarks of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case we have just referred to, are relied on. But those remarks being considered, as they must be, as a whole, do not support the contention. The learned Judge recalls the words of an eminent English Judge where he says, "for myself I say emphatically that this discretion ought not to be crystallised, as it would become in course of time by one Judge attempting to prescribe definite rules with a view to fetter other Judges in the exercise of the discretion which the Legislature has permitted to them. What is sufficient cause and what is reasonable time for filing an appeal must depend upon all the circumstances of each particular case—circumstances which must necessarily vary greatly in different cases."

Now the laches which is here complained of is that the minor applicants did not apply for copies necessary for their appeal until 23 days after the review had been rejected, and the circumstances which we have to take into consideration are that their father had died in July or August when they were minors, their only guardian being a lady, Gouribari Bewa, and they resided in an out of the way village named Bara Khandu in the Kendrapara Sub-Division of District Cuttack, and we cannot say that 23 days was at all an unreasonable time for them to procure some gentlemen of their own neighbourhood to proceed on the long and troublesome journey to Cuttack and consult Pleaders, then come back and raise the necessary funds for the copies and do all the other necessary work that had to be done before the copies could be obtained.

We think that this is eminently a case where our discretion should be exercised in favour of the applicants, and we, therefore, make the Rule absolute and direct that the appeal be registered and put on the board for hearing under Order XLl, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. This being an indulgence we do not allow any costs to the applicants.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Rule made absolute.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 4th May 1915.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokul Prasad, for the Appellant.

10 MANIRUDDIN v. JNANENDRA NATH.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit on foot of a mortgage. The mortgage was executed by Govind and others. The suit is a suit (for sale of the mortgaged property) against the sons of Govind, who is now deceased. Both Courts below have dismissed the suit, first, upon the ground that the mortgage was not proved to have been executed according to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and, secondly, on the ground that no legal necessity was proved. As to the first point, it is contended that the plaintiff should have had a further opportunity of proving the due execution of the bond. The Court below has dealt with this point and, in our opinion, the plaintiff ought to have come prepared to prove his case. We have looked into the record and we see that it never was suggested that the witness who was produced to prove the bond went back on his previous evidence or had committed perjury. He proved the plaintiff's case prima facie, but when he was cross-examined as to the particular mode in which he had witnessed the bond, the fact was disclosed that he had not seen the executants actually sign. The finding that there was no legal necessity, is a finding of fact and is equally fatal to the plaintiff's suit as against the sons of Govind. It is contended that we ought to grant at least a simple money-decree. There are several objections to this. In the first place, the suit was a suit for sale of mortgaged property. In order to give a simple money-decree, we should either amend the plaint or treat the plaint as amended. It is not a suit for money. In the next place it is sought now to get a simple money-decree (not against the original executant) but against his sons. This would be an entirely new cause of action in which there might be entirely different defence. In our opinion, the findings of fact conclude the appeal. It is accordingly dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

An owner of a mill entered into a partnership agreement with two other persons in respect of the mill business. The mill was to be used by the firm thus constituted; cash was to be supplied by one of the partners and the profits were to be distributed in certain proportions. A suit was instituted for dissolution of the partnership, for accounts and for incidental reliefs. During the pendency of this litigation the plaintiff purchased from the owner of the mill his right, title and interest in the mill in question and sued the members of the firm for recovery of damages for use and occupation of the mill.

Held, that the suit as brought was not maintainable either if the mill became part of the partnership property or continued to be the private property of the owner. [p. 708, cols. 1 & 2.]

Bahns Biraj Mohan Majumdar and Harihar Prashad Sinha, for the Petitioner.

Babu Monmutha Nath Roy, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside a decree made by a Small Cause Court Judge in a suit for damages for use and occupation of a soorkay mill. The second defendant, Gopal Chandra Ghosh, was the owner of the mill. On the 5th February 1910 he entered into a partnership agreement with two other persons in respect of the mill business. It is not necessary for our present purpose to set out at length the terms of this agreement. It is sufficient to state that the mill was to be used by the firm thus constituted; cash was to be supplied by one of the partners and the profits were to be distributed in certain proportions. On the 7th June 1912, a suit was instituted for dissolution of the partnership, for accounts and for incidental reliefs. During the pendency of this litigation, on the 17th January 1913 the present plaintiff purchased the right, title and interest of Gopal Chandra Ghosh in the mill in question. He subsequently instituted this suit against the members of the partnership firm for recovery of damages for use and occupation of the mill. The Small Cause Court Judge has decreed the suit. In our opinion, the suit as framed is not maintainable and the plaintiff is not entitled to the reliefs he seeks.

One of the matters in controversy between the parties is, whether the mill became part of the partnership assets by the deed of the 5th February 1910. On behalf of the plaintiff the position has been maintained that although the firm became entitled to use the mill, it continued to be the private and separate property of Gopal Chandra Ghosh. It is not necessary to dispute the position that property used by all the members of a partnership for partnership purposes, is not necessarily partnership property. Two illustrations of mills used by partnership firms may be mentioned: Robinson v. Ashton (1) and Pilling v. Pilling (2). In the first of these cases, the owner of the mill and its machinery admitted two persons as partners. A question subsequently arose, whether the mill and the machinery had become part of the partnership assets. It was proved that the value of the property was entered in the partnership books as the amount of the capital of the owner, and all additions and improvements during the partnership were made at the expense of the firm. Sir George Jessel, M. R., held that the property had been proved to have become part of the assets of the firm [see also Hills v. Parker (3)]. In the present case, the question whether the mill had become part of the assets of the firm, has not been investigated; but it is immaterial, because in either view the suit must fail. If the mill were constituted a part of the partnership assets, namely, as contribution of capital by Gopal Chandra Ghosh, one of the partners in the business, the plaintiff, as purchaser of his right, title and interest, has not acquired such a title as would enable him to maintain a suit for damages for use and occupation against the other partners of the firm. If, on the other hand, the view be adopted, as has been sought to be maintained on behalf of the plaintiff in this Court, that the mill continued to be the private property of Gopal Chandra Ghosh, the position of the plaintiff is clearly hopeless. He, as purchaser of the right, title and interest of Gopal, cannot take up a position with respect to the property purchased by him which could not have been taken up by Gopal. Now from the partnership deed it is plain that Gopal placed the property at the disposal of the firm, which thereupon became entitled to use the mill for the purposes of this business. There cannot be any dispute that there was ample consideration for this agreement. Gopal could not have turned round at any moment and claimed damages from the members of the firm for use of the mill which he had placed at their disposal. The plaintiff stands in no better position. He is accordingly not entitled to maintain this suit.

The result is that the Rule is made absolute, the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge set aside and the suit dismissed with costs of both Courts. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at three gold mohurs.

Rule made abso ute.

LADKABAI v. NAVIVABU.

Held, that there was a clear and sufficient declaration of trust within the meaning of section 6 of the Trusts Act and that there was no need of transferring possession inasmuch as the author of the trust was himself the trustee and the property was specified, the intended beneficiaries were specified, and the purposes of the trust were specified. [p. 712, col. 1.]

Where there was a misrepresentation of fact, the relations of the parties in law would have to be determined by assuming that the fact was as it was represented to be. [p. 712, col. 1.]

In entering into a contract or inducing another person to act, if one should misrepresent a fact, the contract between him and the person so deceived shall be based in law upon the ground that the fact so misrepresented must be made good by the party misrepresenting it. Whereas if it is merely a representation of future intention, it is then only a contract and can only be proved as a contract. [p. 713, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, there was a representation by one H that one L was the adopted son of H and it was upon the faith of that representation that the plaintiff married L and where L died after H and L's widow sued for the property of H:

Held, that the representation should be made good and that, therefore, L's widow was entitled to the property. [p. 714, col. 1.]

A document which is simply a promise to do a certain act in the future or is an offer to be completed when a certain marriage takes place, does not require registration. [p. 714, col. 2.]

Messrs. Mirza and Desai, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiff, Ladkabai, widow of the deceased Lalji Valji, sues Navivahu, widow of the deceased Haridas Dharamsey, to recover from her (1) the entire estate of the said deceased Haridas Dharamsey; (2) specific sums of money; (3) ornaments.

The plaintiff's allegation put shortly is that her husband Lalji survived the deceased Haridas Dharamsey, and upon certain grounds, which I shall have to give more in detail, was in law his sole heir; that she, therefore, the plaintiff Ladkabai, on the death of her husband Lalji is entitled to a widow's estate in the whole property. Further, she contends that by a writing of the 31st of October 1905, Haridas Dharamsey declared a trust of Rs. 20,000 in favour of herself and her husband, to which in any event she is now entitled. As to the specific sum of Rs. 5,000 and the ornaments, the former is admitted; and about the latter I need say nothing in this judgment.

Should it be necessary to go into that point, it would be more properly inquired into by the Commissioner than in the main part of this trial.

In order to understand the position occupied by the plaintiff and the defendant for the purposes of this litigation, it is necessary to say that there were five brothers Valji, Meghji, Canji, Haridas and Narsey, sons of one Dharamsey Nandji. It is common ground that these brothers separated. All the brothers are now dead except Narsey. Lalji was at the time of his marriage the sole surviving son of Valji. He married the plaintiff, then a minor, in the year 1906. As the plaint is framed, it will be seen that the plaintiff has contended that her husband's father Valji reunited with Haridas and that Haridas had adopted her husband Lalji. Treating these as mere questions of fact, it is sufficient to say that no evidence worth considering has been laid before the Court to substantiate either of them and that the plaintiff, long before the trial had concluded, abandoned both the contentions.

Haridas died on the 23rd of March 1912 and Lalji, the husband of the plaintiff, on the 11th of July 1913. Haridas had married four wives in all and had got into considerable trouble with his caste over his third marriage. There can be no doubt that he would have found much difficulty in procuring a bride for his nephew Lalji, the husband of the plaintiff; and I think it is proved, were it necessary to prove anything of the kind, that Haridas was on the best of terms with Valji, the father of Lalji, and had long regarded Lalji himself with great affection. It is not suggested that the sentiments entertained by Haridas towards Lalji had changed in any way before the death of Haridas. Such considerations only become material in dealing with the question of the probability or otherwise of the promises alleged to have been made by Haridas to the mother of the plaintiff in consideration of the marriage then in contemplation between the minor plaintiff and the minor Lalji.

The substantial point is whether any of these representations or promises, as alleged by the plaintiff, were in fact made, and, if so, whether they are now binding upon the maker or his heirs and representatives. The negotiations for the marriage of Ladkabai with Lalji took place early in the year 1905 and the betrothal was finally brought about, in connection with which Exhibit B was admittedly passed by Haridas to Ratanbai, the mother of Ladkabai. Herein Haridas engages to give ornaments of unspecified value to the bride and in addition the sum of Rs. 5,000, the interest upon which was apparently intended to be spent in procuring further ornaments for the bride should the marriage be postponed. On the 31st of October 1905, Exhibit C was passed by Haridas to Ratanbai, and that is the document which has given rise to the greater part of the discussion in the present suit. There are rival theories laid before the Court concerning this document. It is alleged on behalf of the defendant Navivahu that it was no more than a penalty bond exacted by Ratanbai from Haridas because he had failed to act up to the promises contained in Exhibit B. It is in a measure common ground that Haridas had taken a sum of some Rs. 2,000 from Ratanbai and that this sum as well as certain ornaments, which he appears also to have removed, had to be made good to her. But there is nothing in Exhibit C which gives the least colour to the suggestion that it is a penalty bond. It begins by declaring a trust of Rs. 20,000 in favour of the young married couple. They were not, of course, actually married at the time, but in the caste betrothal is regarded as virtually equivalent to marriage. The latter part of the document is, on the face of it, in the nature of a Will. It appoints Lalji the sole heir of Haridas in the event of Haridas having no natural son of his own, and it states that in the event of Lalji so becoming the sole heir, he is to take the entire estate of Haridas after the death of the dhani dhani. Whether this is an accidental repetition or whether the second dhani really stands for dhani and denotes the defendant Navivahu is a very debatable question. In the event of Haridas having a natural son born to him of this Navivahu, the defendant in this suit, then a like provision of Rs. 20,000 is to be made for that son and the entire estate is thereafter to be divided equally between him and the plaintiff's husband, Lalji. The defendant's contention is that this document being merely a penalty bond was afterwards cancelled by a writing (Exhibit 9 in this case) of the 17th of December 1905. The plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that Exhibit 9 is a forgery and that Exhibit C never was, and never was intended to be, cancelled. On the 18th of May 1906, shortly before the marriage, Exhibit F was passed by Haridas to Ratanbai. Herein Haridas declares that Lalji, the bridegroom-elect, was his adopted son. Thereafter it provides for the payment of Rs. 5,000 referred to in Exhibit B. The latter part of the document appears to me comparatively unimportant. As to whether Exhibit C was cancelled or not by the writing (Exhibit 9), much might be said on either side. Exhibit C itself cancels Exhibit B and makes much more liberal provision for the bride and bridegroom than is made in either Exhibit B or Exhibit F. I think it would be absurd to argue that Exhibit C could possibly be, in any true sense, a penalty bond. It is, however, legitimately arguable, I think, that it was cancelled in view of the later document (Exhibit F). For if the statement with which that document opens be true, then it will be tantamount to saying that the bridegroom Lalji was in law entitled to the entire estate of Haridas Dharamsey, subject only, of course, to the possibility of another son or sons being born to Haridas. Except then for the trust of Rs. 20,000 declared in Exhibit B, all the remainder of Haridas' intention, therein more elaborately expressed, would be equally brought about by the mere statement that Lalji was his adopted, and at the time his only, son. That, then, would leave in dispute no more than a sum of Rs. 5,000 as mentioned in Exhibit B. So that it is not inconsistent with reason, in my opinion, to contend that having regard to Exhibit F, it is quite possible that Ratanbai might have consented to cancel Exhibit C. It is, however, an extremely doubtful point whether in fact she did so or not. First it is to be borne in mind that this cancellation is supposed to have been made as early as the 17th of December, that is, nearly six months before the execution of Exhibit F; and it certainly seems to me extremely unlikely that a mother, who was so keen and zealous for her minor daughter's interest as Ratanbai is proved to have been, would have given up so valuable a paper as Exhibit C merely upon the chance of Haridas executing at a much later date such a paper as Exhibit F. Now, when we turn to Exhibit 9 itself, there are many circumstances of suspicion attending it. Ratanbai herself positively swears that she never signed it and that it is a forgery. It appears to have been preceded the day before by the draft Exhibit 10 in this case. That draft is altogether of a different tenor and much less comprehensive than Exhibit 9. Exhibits 9 and 10 are written on two different pages of a book, a large part of which is blank and between them comes Exhibit M, a memorandum of receipts of betrothal presents by Haridas Dharamsey. Of the genuineness of that paper, there can be no doubt and it must have been made some eight or nine months before the impugned Exhibits 9 and 10. It is difficult to understand, therefore, how it comes to be sandwiched in between them if those documents are genuine. The only guarantee we have of their genuineness, is the testimony of Chhotalal, who is engineering the whole case for the defendant. It will be a waste of time to particularise portions of his evidence which warrant the sweeping conclusion that he is utterly unworthy of credit. He is a man who, whether through self-interest or through any other motive, is evidently thoroughly untruthful and prepared to make any statements which occur to him as likely to support the case he is interested in making good. I certainly should not care to decide a single contentious point merely upon the evidence of such a man. Now there is plenty of Haridas' own writing on the record, and though we have no expert testimony here, it was stated by Counsel and not contradicted that that handwriting is, to say no more, an averagely good vernacular script. Whereas the writing of Exhibit 9 which is declared to be Haridas' writing is so bad that the highest skill of the Court interpreters had to be spent upon it. No less than three of them had to take it in hand, not to mention the attempts made by my own interpreter, Mr. Kanga, to settle the words in it. In the circumstances, I think any Court would hesitate long before trusting to such a document as proof of a fact so favourable to the interests of the defendant and so damaging to the interests of the plaintiff in this case. According to Exhibit 9, Haridas is made to appear to have satisfied Ratanbai in respect of the money and ornaments which she was demanding back from him. Thereupon she is made to declare that the writing of the 31st of October is of no avail and torn up; but in point of fact, the writing has never been torn up and has evidently been very carefully kept by Ratanbai and is now before the Court. In view of that fact, it is a little difficult to understand the need of making Exhibit 12. Possibly, however, the explanation offered by plaintiff's Counsel is true that the operation of that paper was meant to be confined to the sum of Rs. 5,000 now represented by the shares of the Sirdar's Carbolic Acid Gas Co., Limited. There is no dispute about this. The defendant is ready and willing to hand them over to the plaintiff.

We have, then, three papers every one of which contains representations partly of fact and partly of intention clearly made in contemplation of marriage, and the principal question the Court has to answer is: what is the effect of any or all of these papers upon the legal rights of the parties? In describing Exhibit B, I said that the first part of it contained a declaration of trust. It has, however, strenuously been contended, mainly on the authority of a judgment of my own in the case of the Narielwalla's trust [Mauchershaw v. Ardeshtir (1)], that this is no declaration of trust, nor yet a gift, and is, in the eye of the law, a nullity. I think, however, that there are broad and patent distinctions between the facts disclosed in the case of the Narielwalla's trust and the facts here. Reading Exhibit C, I cannot doubt that there is a sufficient declaration of trust within the meaning of section 6 of the Trusts Act. It was very different in the Narielwalla's case. Here Haridas Dharamsey sets apart a sum of Rs. 20,000 for the benefit of the young married couple. But the language he uses, precludes all idea of any intention to make a present gift for, although he opens a khata in favour of these two young persons to the amount of Rs. 20,000, he immediately adds that they are only to enjoy the interest until his death, or until having attained years of discretion they elect to separate from him. In the meantime, he retains possession and control of the fund, subject only to the interests of his cestui que trust in it. This is, in my opinion, a clear and sufficient declaration of trust: the property being specified, the intended beneficiaries being specified, the purposes of the trust being specified; and the author of the trust being himself the trustee, there is no need of transferring possession.

Reverting, for a moment, to the much contested point of the subsequent cancellation of Exhibit C, it is here apparent that, if I am right in holding that this is a valid declaration of trust of Rs. 20,000, it was not open to the settlor, Haridas Dharamsey to cancel it. Even then, should the story told by the defendant be true in every respect touching the making of Exhibits 9 and 10 in this case, the legal position in regard to this trust would, in my opinion, remain entirely unaffected. So that in any event, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover from the estate of the late Haridas Dharamsey the sum of Rs. 20,000.

The remainder of the document would, no doubt, give rise to very considerable difficulty. Before I deal with that, I may pass on to what appears to me the simplest ground upon which the case, as a whole, might be decided. In Exhibit F, there is a very clear representation of fact, namely, that Lalji is the adopted son of Haridas Dharamsey; and there can be no doubt that that representation of fact was made in contemplation of the marriage of the plaintiff with the said Lalji. The marriage duly took place, and upon a principle common to every case, I have yet found in the English Law books, it would necessarily follow that if this were a misrepresentation of fact, the relations of the parties in law would have to be determined by assuming that the fact was as it was represented to be. A great number of English cases have been relied upon in the course of the able and interesting arguments of learned Counsel on both sides; and if I were dealing with Exhibit C, and Exhibit C alone, I should have to go very much more closely into an analysis of the reasoning of all the eminent English Judges responsible for those decisions than I need do upon the plain and relatively narrow ground of misrepresentation of fact contained in Exhibit F. Where the law in England has in appearance given rise to most doubt and difficulty is on the point of difference between representations of fact and representations of intention. Thus, in the series of cases relied on by the plaintiff, we have expressions of intention or promises to perform certain acts in futuro in contemplation of marriage, such cases as Laver v. Fielder (2), Synge v. Synge (3), Hammersley v. Baron De Biel (4) and Coverdale v. Eastwood (5), to which many more might be added. In the case of Luffus v. Maw (6), Stuart, V. C., appeared to think that there was a direct conflict of authority between the decision of the House of Lords in Jorden v. Money (7) and the decision in Hammersley v. Baron De Biel (4). In the case of Jorden v. Money (7), however, the question with which Lord Cranworth was probably concerned, was the distinction to be drawn in law between representations of fact and representations of intention, and he insisted upon the well-known doctrine that there can be no fraud in futuro. In the case before him the defendant, Mrs. Jorden, before her marriage had promised Mr. Money that she would never sue him on a bond which she held and on the faith of that promise, Money married. Mrs. Jorden presently married herself and sued upon the bond. The question, which the House of Lords had to answer, was whether Money was entitled in equity or in law to any relief and the decision of the majority (Lord St. Leonards dissenting) was that he was not. Misrepresentation per se as a ground of relief was, in the opinion of Lord Cranworth and the majority of the Judges, confined to misrepresentation of fact. Misrepresentation as to future intention could, at best, be no more than an inchoate contract, or perhaps even a contract of which there might be a breach, but it would only go the length of the legal doctrine laid down with customary terseness and lucidity by Lord Mansfield in the case of Mon effiori v. Montefiori (8). Lord Cranworth, in arguing the question in the House of Lords, said that the substantial point for consideration was the difference between representations of intention and representations of fact, and he added that a representation of fact is a contract, while a representation of intention is not. That is a very compendious form of expression, but what the very learned Lord meant doubtless was that he who misrepresents a fact in any transaction, must be taken, for the purposes of adjusting the subsequent legal relations of the parties, to be bound in law to make the fact good as he misrepresented it to be. In other words, that in entering into a contract or inducing another person to act, if one should misrepresent a fact, then the contract between him and the person so deceived, shall be based in law upon the ground that the fact so misrepresented must be made good by the party misrepresenting it. Whereas if it is merely a representation of future intention, then at best it is only a contract and can only be proved as a contract. The difficulty in this case doubtless was that the contract between Mrs. Jorden and Money did not satisfy the requirements of the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds and, therefore, could not be proved as a contract. In all the cases I first enumerated, there was a good contract under the Statute of Frauds, and, therefore, the question the Courts had to answer was much simpler and a totally different question. In the case of Hammersley v. Baron De Biel (4), for instance, there was a writing which the Court held to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds, and in that writing there was a promise, which being made in contemplation of marriage and the marriage thereon taking place, the Court held must be duly performed. It is clear, then, that there was really no conflict of principle whatever between Hammersley v. Baron De Biel (4) and Jorden v. Money (7). In the case of Maddison v. Alderson (9), there were facts similar to the facts which might be thought to exist here if the latter part of Exhibit C be regarded as a Will. There the suit was by a house-keeper to recover on a writing which was in the form of a testamentary disposition of his property by her old master in her favour. Unfortunately, it was not duly attested and could not be proved as a Will; and the greater part of the judgment of Lord Selborne in the House of Lords is devoted to the examination of the doctrine of part performance. There was no doubt but that the deceased Alderson had promised to bequeath a certain part of his property to his house-keeper Maddison in return for her long and faithful services, but inasmuch as the writing could not be proved as a Will and intrinsically bore no relation whatever to the services of Maddison already performed, the reason for the decision appears to have been that the part performance could not be connected with the imperfect promise. So that in that case, the House of Lords rejected the plaintiff's claim. Had, however, the writing been directly connected with the services rendered, it appears that the decision would have been different; and in any event, the general line of reasoning would be different from that which is always followed in cases of alleged promises made in contemplation of marriage. Where such promises can be duly proved under the Statute of Frauds, the fact that the marriage takes place has, I think, invariably been held to complete the contract and the Court would then enforce performance. There may be special cases on the facts, such as the very recent case of In re Fickus Farina v. Fickus (10), where the Court, notwithstanding there was a writing suggesting an intention on the part of some third person to give consideration for the contemplated marriage, yet holds that it is not sufficiently specific to be regarded as a contract.

No difficulty of the kind could arise in the present case. It will be observed, however, that where there is a misrepresentation of an existing fact in consequence of which a marriage is brought about, the person making that misrepresentation would, on the principle of any one of these cases, be equally liable in law or in equity to make good his false representation. That is to say, in the present case, if Haridas represented that Lalji was his adopted son, although in fact Lalji was not his adopted son, and thereby induced Ratanbai to give her daughter, the plaintiff, to Lalji in marriage, Haridas would be held bound to make good the representation on the faith of which the marriage had taken place. It is true that in this particular case it would have been impossible for Haridas to make good his representation since at that time Lalji was an orphan. He could not have adopted him even had he wished to do so. But I apprehend what the law means is that all the rights and privileges of the parties shall be adjusted in law as though what had been stated by Haridas had been true, and this adjustment will be as binding upon every one seeking to take the estate after Haridas in the character of heir or legal representative as upon Haridas himself. If I am right so far and I entertain no doubt whatever upon the point—then it is clear that on the death of Haridas in 1912, Lalji was entitled to succeed him as his sole heir and in law must be taken to have done so. On the death of Lalji in July 1913, his widow, the plaintiff, takes the whole life-estate. At present that life-estate is in the hands of the defendant, Navivahu; but had the fact represented by Haridas in Exhibit F, been true, it is clear that she would have been entitled to no more than maintenance and to that she appears to me to be still entitled.

If I am wrong on this point, it will be still necessary to consider the latter part of Exhibit C. In this country, we are not faced by the same difficulty as that which pressed upon the English Courts in such cases as that of Jorden v. Money (7). The fourth section of the Statute of Frauds has been repealed so far as India is concerned and has no operation here. But it is contended that the latter part of Exhibit C is really in the nature of a Will and, therefore, cannot be proved since it is attested by one witness only. It is not, however, as a Will that effect is sought to be given to it. There can be no doubt but that it was a declaration of intention, or it might be called a representation, by Haridas with the object of influencing Ratanbai to give her daughter in marriage to Lalji, Haridas' nephew. Even were the Statute of Frauds in force here, this writing would fulfil the requirements of the fourth section, and I cannot see why it should not be used for such a purpose, and such a purpose only, although no doubt effect could not be given to it as a Will. It is not open to the objection which proved fatal to the case of Mrs. Maddison, because it is here expressly connected with the contemplated marriage and the contemplated marriage did in fact take place. Regarded, then, as no more than a contract to do certain acts, as for example to make Lalji the sole heir of the promisor, Haridas, in the event of the marriage taking place, it would become a complete and valid contract upon the marriage being solemnized. And I see no difficulty in following the practice of the English Courts in such cases and directing any of the heirs, executors or legal representatives of the deceased Haridas thereon to convey the whole of his estate in their hands to the heir so designated, that is to say, Lalji; and Lalji being dead, his widow, the plaintiff, would take after him.

It has been objected further that Exhibit C is inadmissible in evidence for non-registration. It is not, however, an instrument which, as it stands, falls within the prohibition of clause (b) of the seventeenth section of the Registration Act. Viewed as I view it, it is simply a promise to do a certain act in the future, in other words, an offer which became a complete contract when the marriage between Lalji and the plaintiff took place. That being so, it would not require registration in its present form.

If we had neither Exhibit C nor Exhibit F in this case, it would still be open to the Court to consider upon the evidence of Ratanbai whether Haridas and the defendant, Navivahu, did not jointly represent to Ratanbai in Cutch that Lalji was their only son and heir and so induce her to consent to give her daughter in marriage to him. That would certainly be a misrepresentation of fact again and would, it appears to me, fall under the principle laid down by Lord Cranworth in the case of Jorden v. Money (7). But even if it be no more than a promise that Lalji should inherit to Haridas' wealth if Ratanbai gave her daughter in marriage to him, still I do not see that in this country there would be any objection to prove such an oral contract, and, if proved, give effect to it on the ground that it was made in contemplation of marriage, that the marriage took place in consequence of it and thereon it became a complete valid legal contract. I have not gone very deeply into the legal question here, because I think that the ground upon which I am putting my decision, namely, that there was a representation that Lalji was the adopted son of Haridas and that it was upon the faith of that representation that the plaintiff married him, whereupon the law requires that the representation should be made good, is a ground so simple and so firmly established by English authorities that it is unnecessary to elaborate it further.

OF LADKABAI V. NAVIVAHU.

But I cannot leave this part of the case without expressing my indebtedness to learned Counsel on both sides, whose patience and industry has laid before me almost every important judgment upon the rather unusual but interesting branch of the law with which I had to deal, and my acknowledgments are particularly due to them for what, I am afraid, must have been a fatiguing labour of cheerfully reading to me the extremely long judgments in all these cases. I do not think either their time or labour has been wasted, although I have not gone as deeply and critically as I intended to do into all the interesting cases which have been under discussion here, because, I think, we shall be all much better informed upon the general principles which have underlain the judicial pronouncements of the highest authority in the Courts of England upon this topic.

I pass now to the consideration of another point, namely, whether or not the house in Mint Road formed part of the estate of the deceased Haridas at the time of his death, or whether it was the sole property of the defendant, Navivahu. In favour of Navivahu there is nothing really except the conveyance itself (Exhibit 8) in the case. I entirely disregard Chhotalal's evidence; and while, no doubt there is a statement in Exhibit 8 that the earnest money was paid out of Navivahu's private purse, I think that the document on the whole is only one of a very common class, the husband desiring to make the purchase benami, or to some extent benami, in the name of his wife in order to evade the possibility of attachment by creditors. Exhibit C in the case is a letter written by Haridas to Ratanbai shortly before the purchase, in which he announces that he has bought the house for Rs. 30,000 and requests her to send him Rs. 5,000 and any more money that she can spare in order to make up the purchase-money. There is not a word in this letter to suggest that the house is being bought by Navivahu for herself out of her own money. Chhotalal has sworn that when Navivahu married some seven or eight years before the purchase of this house, she received Rs. 8,000 worth of ornaments and Rs. 12,000 in cash from Haridas. It appears that Navivahu's father was a poor man, and we have none of the books of accounts of those early days which should have been forthcoming to show, even assuming that this Rs. 12,000 remained with her husband, Haridas, how that sum increased by the year 1907 to Rs. 30,000. Certain Exhibits of later date, have been put in to show that a khata was kept in Navivahu's name and the rents, etc., of this house were credited to her in it. These are Exhibits 13, 14, 15 and 16, I attach, however, little or no importance to such evidence. It is obvious, I think, that if Haridas cared to make the purchase benami in the first instance, that is to say, if he was under any apprehension that the property would be taken by any creditor, he would naturally have kept the books in such a way as to give colour to the genuineness of the transaction as it was made in the first instance to appear. I am satisfied that the house was purchased out of Haridas' own money and that if we had all the books covering that period before us, this could very easily have been proved.

As a result, then, I find that the plaintiff is entitled to obtain the whole of the estate of the deceased Haridas from the defendant, Navivahu, and that the defendant, Navivahu, is entitled to simple maintenance thereout.

I do not think that it would be worth while after this decision to put the parties to the further expense and harassment of a reference to the Commissioner in respect of these ornaments. Neither do the parties desire such a reference to be made at present; but this is not to be understood as implying that the plaintiff gives up her claim to the ornaments.

On a statement of Counsel, I fix the defendant's maintenance at Rs. 150 a month. The amount is to be paid after the estate has been delivered to the plaintiff, Ladhakabai.

Let Navivahu be continued as Receiver and pay to the plaintiff Rs. 200 a month and pay herself Rs. 50 a month.

In view of the rather peculiar features of the case and that the decision had to turn upon the construction of documents and acts made and done by the husband of the defendant, I think that the costs of both the parties should come out of the estate.

Let the maintenance to Navivahu and interim payment to Ladhakabai both run from the 16th of one month to the 16th of the next month. The first payment and appropriation to commence from the 16th of this month.

The ornaments mentioned in Exhibit 3 to the written statement of Navivahu to be handed over to Ladhakabai at once, subject to the prohibitory order of the Small Cause Court.

Suit decreed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) s. 37—Lease by insolvent of his occupancy holding, validity of—Duty of Receiver.

If an insolvent lets at a reasonable rent his occupancy holding, the transaction is valid and cannot be avoided under section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907. [p. 717, col. 1.]

It is the duty of the Receiver and the Court administering the estate of an insolvent to preserve, as far as possible, the estate of the insolvent for the benefit of the creditors. It is not desirable to give up any property that is of value. [p. 717, col. 1.]

First Appeal from an order of the District Judge of Meerut Vessrs. Mohan Lal Sandal and Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an insolvency matter. One Sagar Mal was adjudicated an insolvent upon his own petition on the 1st of August 1914. His petition of insolvency was presented on the 3rd of May previously. A Receiver was duly appointed, who attached certain crops growing on an occupancy holding which belonged to the insolvent. Desraj objected and said that the crops were his, Sagar Mal having executed a lease in his favour on the 16th of April 1914. He lodged security with the Receiver and had the crops released. He then made an application to have his money returned to him. Rao Girraj Singh, one of the creditors who had obtained a decree against Sagar Mal, challenged the validity of the lease, alleging that the lease was fictitious and that the value of the occupancy holding was far beyond the rent mentioned in the lease, which was the sum of Rs. 260 per annum. He further alleged that the insolvent was in actual possession and cultivated the land. The learned District Judge in a short judgment states as follows:—"Under section 37, Act III of 1907, this lease shall be deemed fraudulent and void and I now annul it. Desraj then has no locus standi. He has got the crops and his deposit of Rs. 330 is forfeited. I dismiss this objection with costs." Later on the learned Judge says: "The Receiver will arrange to surrender the insolvent's occupancy rights and to vacate the holding. He should enter into negotiations with Rao Girraj Singh for this purpose. The Government demand must be secured and my official expenses." It seems to us that the order of the District Judge was altogether wrong. In the first place, section 37 had no application whatsoever. This section deals entirely with transfers, payments, et cetera, made in favour of one creditor by an insolvent with a view of giving that particular creditor a preference over the other creditors (see marginal note to the section). If the insolvent in the present case had in truth made a lease in favour of Desraj at a reasonable rent, the transaction would have been a perfectly valid one. The Receiver would step into the shoes of the insolvent and become entitled to the rent reserved by the lease, which he would hold for the benefit of the creditors. Of course, on the other hand if the Court came to the conclusion that the lease was a mere blind, that it never was intended that any person except the insolvent should cultivate the land, then the crop which was attached still belonged to the estate of the insolvent and the Receiver was entitled to it. It seems to us also that the learned District Judge made a great mistake when he directed the Receiver to surrender the occupancy holding. According to the objection taken by Rao Girraj Singh, the occupancy holding was a very valuable holding. He goes so far as to say that it would let for Rs. 45 a year. It is very difficult to see how the creditors of the insolvent would profit by the surrender of this very valuable holding. It is the duty of the Receiver and the Court when administering the estate of an insolvent to preserve such estate, as far as possible, for the benefit of the creditors. The last thing desirable would be to give up any property that was of value. We allow the appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the case to him with directions to re-admit it under its original number in the file and to proceed to hear and determine the same according to law, having regard to what we have said above. Costs of both sides will be costs in the matter.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 2nd January 1914.

Babus Bisheshwar Nath and Sarju Parshad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. H. H. Thomas and Wazir Hasan, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent sued in this case for possession of a 4-annas share of village Ferozpur and for mesne profits on the allegation that he and his father, Sunder Lal, and his younger brother, Murli Lal, lived together as members of a joint Hindu family, owning a 6-annas share of that village, and that Sunder Lal wrongfully made certain alienations of the joint family property without any necessity for immoral purposes. The defendants-appellants are the representative-in-interest of Kali Prasad, the deceased transferee.

On the 20th August 1899, Sunder Lal sold a two-annas share of the said village to Kali Prasad in lieu of Rs. 4,000, out of which Rs. 2,000 were stated to have been received in advance and the balance was paid before the Sub-Registrar. On the 6th January 1892, he sold another one-anna share to Kali Prasad in lieu of Rs. 2,000, out of which Rs. 378 were paid before the Sub-Registrar and the balance was left to be paid or credited towards what were described as antecedent debts. On the 13th April 1894, he sold another one-anna share to Kali Prasad in lieu of Rs. 2,000, out of which Rs. 700 were paid before the Sub-Registrar, and the balance was left to be paid or credited towards what were described as antecedent debts. The remaining two-annas were similarly sold by Sunder Lal to other persons, but with those sales we are not concerned. The plaintiff stated that he attained the age of 21 on the 4th January 1913, and that the claim was consequently within time under section 6 of the Indian Limitation Act. The suit was filed on the 2nd January 1913.

The defence was that the plaintiff was more than 21 years old on the date of the suit and consequently the claim was barred by limitation, that the property sold was not the ancestral property of the family, that the plaintiff lived separate from his father, that the sales in question were effected to pay ancestral debts and that the plaintiff had no right to question the same.

The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the claim. He found that the plaintiff was born on the 4th January 1892, after the first sale was effected, that the property sold was ancestral or joint family property, that the sales were effected to raise money for immoral purposes, and that the plaintiff lived jointly with his father and had a right to question the validity of the sales. The defendants-appellants contested all those findings in their memorandum of appeal, but it was conceded during the hearing of the appeal that the plea of separation between the plaintiff and Sunder Lal was untenable. The main matters of evidence on which arguments were addressed to the Court related to the age of the plaintiff as given in the plaint, the alleged separation of Sunder Lal from his brothers Purnanand and Rahas Behari Lal prior to the sales, his right to sue and the purposes for which the sales were effected.

We do not consider that the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge on any of these matters can be accepted. It appears that Sunder Lal was a resident of Brindaban, District Muttra, and was the owner with his brothers, Purnanand and Rahas Bihari Lal, of an 8-annas share in Ferozpur by ancestral right (vide the copies of plaint, Exhibit 17, and the settlement decree, Exhibit 18, filed). At Brindaban, Sunder Lal, Purnanand and Rahas Bihari Lal lived jointly. About 24 or 25 years ago Sunder Lal left Brindaban in consequence of the indebtedness of the family and settled at Ferozpur, where he expected to derive some help from the Raja of Mankapur of whose family he was the accredited guru. He got his brothers, Purnanand and Rahas Bihari Lal, to sell to him their shares in Ferozpur to the extent of one anna eight pies each and undertook to pay their share of the joint family debts incurred at Brindaban. The original sale-deeds were summoned from Sunder Lal, in whose custody they would naturally be expected to be. Sunder Lal stated that they were in the possession of a son of Purnanand named Chiranji Lal. They were then summoned from Chiranji Lal, but Chiranji Lal stated that he had not got them. Sunder Lal was a defendant to the suit, and his failure to produce the original sale-deeds, which ought to have been in his possession, justified the plaintiff in producing secondary evidence of their contents within the meaning of section 65, clauses (a) and (f), of the Indian Evidence Act, read with section 57, clause (5), of the Indian Registration Act. These sale-deeds were executed on the 3rd June 1889, and are proved by the evidence of Nakhed. Mutation of names was effected on their basis. Sunder Lal became thereby the owner of a six-annas share in Ferozpur, out of which 3 annas four pies were acquired by him. Whether Sunder Lal paid the debts due by the vendors, does not appear from the record, but it is not disputed that Purnanand and Rahas Bihari Lal did not go to Ferozpur, and the entire six-annas share continued to be recorded in the name of Sunder Lal and remained in his possession. Kishori Lal, a witness for the plaintiff, states that Sunder Lal and his brothers continued joint as long as they were at Brindaban. There is nothing to show that Sunder Lal remained joint with his brothers in business, mess, or worship after he left Brindaban, or that he possessed any ancestral funds from which the above purchases could have been made. Sunder Lal had no co-parcener on the date of the first sale. The plaintiff was born after the first, but before the second and third sales; and, as pointed out in Chuttan Lal v. Kallu (1), Chatarpal Singh v. Natha (2) and Bholanath Khetry v. Kartick Kissen Das Khetry (3) which were amplified and explained in Tulshi Ram v. Babu Lal (4) and Hazurimul v. Ahani Nath (5), Sunder Lal was competent on the date of the first sale to sell his proprietary interest in any way he liked. By his birth, the plaintiff acquired a vested interest in such family property as existed on the date of his birth, and the sale of a two-annas share by the first sale-deed cannot, therefore, be impugned.

Regarding the second and third sales, it is clear that Rs. 1,£22 were taken under the former to pay certain antecedent debts due to the vendee and his son Mahesh and a person named Sadho Charan, and Rs. 153-2 were credited in the latter towards a prior bond returned before the Sub-Registrar (vide Exhibit AS). Rs. 1,162 are stated in the sale-deed last mentioned to have been credited towards a pledge of ornaments, but no mention was made of any such pledge in the list of antecedent debts given on the date fixed for issues (vide the proceedings of the 23rd April 1933). The evidence adduced on the point cannot, therefore, be trusted. There is no satisfactory proof that the remainder of the consideration of the said sale-deeds was taken for legal necessity.

The plaintiff is not, however, entitled to sue to set aside the sales unless he can establish that he attained majority within three years before suit (section 8 of the Indian Limitation Act). He states that he was born on the 4th January 1892; but when examined by the Court below before the settlement of issues, he stated on oath that he was born on the 6th January 1892. He did not explain how he came to know of his age. His father and mother who are alive, did not come into the witness-box to give evidence as to the date of his birth. He produced Colonel Birdwood, Dr. P. C. Mukerjee and Major Baird in support of his statement as to his age. But when the question resolves itself into a difference of a few days this way or that way, no medical testimony can be of any avail. Colonel Birdwood states that he examined the plaintiff on the 9th March 1913, and judging from his general appearance and the fact that he had cut one wisdom tooth and had also a small moustache, he considered him to be about 21 years old. He admits, however, that "by about 1" he means "a little bit more or a little bit less." Dr. Mukerjee and Major Baird state that they examined the plaintiff on the 15th May 1913, and similarly considered him to be about 21 years old. But both of them admit that they cannot be absolutely positive as to his exact age and that it was possible that he might be 22. If the plaintiff was about 22 years old in May 1913, his suit would obviously be barred by time, for even if section 6 of the Indian Limitation Act, on which he relies, applied, the suit should have been filed within three years from the date when the disability ceased.

The direct evidence produced by the plaintiff in support of his statement as to the date of his birth, consists of three witnesses, Shiva Lal, Girdhari Lal and Baldeo. The plaintiff was born at Ferozpur, District Gonda. Shiva Lal describes himself as a resident of Brindaban, District Muttra. He calls himself the purohit or priest of the plaintiff's family and gives his age as 38 years. He states that he was on a visit to Gaya and on his return went to Ajodhiya and thence to the plaintiff's village and was present there when the plaintiff was born. He asserts that a note was made by him at the time in his almanac, to the effect that a son was born to Sunder Lal on Pus Sudi 5, 1948, at 4 gharis 32 pals after sunrise with the object of preparing a horoscope. But he admits that he did not prepare the plaintiff's horoscope, and that there was another entry in the almanac in the same month, nine days earlier, which was not in his hand. He further admits that he did not remember the dates on which the other children of Sunder Lal were born. He was on his own statement about 17 years old at the time he went to Ferozpur, and his statement that he went to Gaya and to other places and thence to the plaintiff's village to see the plaintiff's father, who had left his village several years earlier, cannot be trusted. Girdhari Lal, the other witness, is a resident of Benares. He describes himself as a son of the plaintiff's maternal uncle and gives his age as 40 years. He states that he and his mother went to help the plaintiff's mother during her confinement, as there was nobody with her and that he had to leave Ferozpur on the very day the plaintiff was born in consequence of the receipt of a telegram from Allahabad that his grandmother had died on that date. He is, however, contradicted on this point by Baldeo, the next witness, who alleges that he was called by Sunder Lal a day after the birth of the plaintiff and that Sunder Lal told him of the child's birth. Girdhari Lal is unable, moreover, to give the dates of birth of two of his own children, and his statement that he went with his mother to help the plaintiff's mother in her confinement and returned the very afternoon on which the plaintiff was born, taking his mother with him, cannot be accepted. Baldeo, the third witness, professes to have prepared the horoscope of the plaintiff. He brought the horoscope of the plaintiff, but it does not appear how that horoscope if it was genuine, remained in his possession. He admits that he used to cultivate some land belonging to the defendants for about 25 years, and that the defendants got him to relinquish the land about four years ago. He does not mention the presence of either Shiva Lal or Girdhari Lal at the house of the plaintiff's father at the time when he went to prepare the horoscope, and if Shiva Lal was there and was asked to note the birth of the child with a view to prepare a horoscope, it is unlikely that Baldeo would have been called for the same purpose. The evidence of these witnesses appears to us to be absolutely unreliable, and we are unable to find that the date of the plaintiff's birth, as given in the plaint, is satisfactorily established.

Article 126 of the Indian Limitation Act allows a period of 12 years for a suit by a son to set aside an alienation of ancestral property made by his father, from the date when the alienee takes possession of the property. The alienee in this case has been in possession of the property from the dates of the sales and got the shares purchased by him formed into a separate mahal in 897 (Exhibit A10). The plaintiff has failed to establish that the suit was filed within three years from the date of his attaining majority. His claim is, therefore, barred by Article 126 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The appeal is accordingly allowed and the plaintiff's claim dismissed with costs here and below. The plaintiff-respondent will bear his own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.
